It is a national problem which we are facing, and while local investigations may prove valuable in unearthing local conspiracies among bakers the inadequacy of city or state inquiries to go to the bottom of the matter is only too apparent. Here in New York, for example, the authorities cannot compel the testimony of the big Chicago operators, against whom the burden of complaint rests. On the other hand, the preparations of the Attorney General to look thoroughly into the situation so far as this state is concerned have undoubtedly had something to do with the recent break in wheat quotations.

Let us have, then, a thoroughgoing federal investigation of the whole problem, touching on every factor involved, from the wheat field to the dinner table. By all means let us have it before any such rash thing as an embargo is attempted, with the consequent crippling of our foreign commerce an da great increase of unemployment. In the meantime, however, it will be well if the rabid wheat speculators remember that to the possibility of an opening of the Dardanelles and the release of Russian grain stores there is added that of a limitation on American export of wheat, provided they become unreasonably energetic on the bull side.—Tribune, N. Y.

SPEAKING OF GYMNASIUMS

We must some day have a new high school, and when that time comes every person in Fulton should have a lively interest in every nook and corner of the building. The one most planned room in such a building should be a gymnasium, and that of the most modern type.

E. F. Guilbert writes in the American City a most inspiring article on Public School Gymnasiums. He says:

"The gymnasium has become a very important factor in school planning, as a modern grammar school is almost invariably provided with one, and a high school is practically never without one, and frequently has two."

Newark, N. J., is used as an illustration of a most modern school gymnasium which is arranged for the use of both the boys and girls, and should be the pride and joy of the pupils.

Many near at home places have, in building new schools, arranged them that they may be used as community centers. Here the school entertainments are held the women's clubs meet, the speakers of general interest are heard here by th people of a community, and as a result a keener interest in public affairs grows through the commonest meeting place. The little red school house in bygone days was the mecca on all occasions, and kept alive the community interest for the people.

Today if the boys and girls give an entertainment the expense of paying for the use of suitable place kills the joy of "doing things." Open meetings for public enlightenment are often tabooed because of the expense connected with securing a place both large and comfortable to accommodate even an audience of moderate size.

Syracuse, at Bellevue Heights, has such a school. An inspection of it by emissaries from Fulton would perhaps help to pave the way for "what's right" in our city.

Two Aspects of the Sale of Abandoned Canal Lands

As a resident of this city Governor Whitman belongs in the ranks of those citizens who share in the ownership of the State canal lands but who are so situated geographically that distribution of these lands for less than their market value can work injury to them. This is not the condition in the settlements in which this property lies. If Syracuse, Rochester, Buffalo—there are dozens of other towns similarly circumstanced—can buy the abandoned canal bed for half, or a quarter, or a tenth of its worth, they can make large profits on the transactions; and the loss will fall on the people of the State outside these especially fortunate communities.

One of the sensible and praise-worthy acts of Governor Glynn was his refusal to permit the sale of abandoned canal lands for less than a fair price. He was besought so to do, but declined to sacrifice for the profit of the few the property of the many. He held that the real estate belonging to the State should be administered for the good of all its people, and not in the interest of any community or individual.

The proposal to utilize these lands for sectional advantage is now fathered in the Legislature by representatives of the party to which Governor Whitman belongs. But his duty and his obligation are to the whole State. These should lead him to a position like Governor Glynn's; and if he needs practical consideration to strengthen his spinal column he may well give earnest thought to the possible amelioration of the State's financial condition to be attained through business management of this extremely valuable property.—Sun, N.Y.

Farm Bureau Work

There are 26 farm bureaus in this State and, among other activities, they assisted 427 farmers last year in obtaining farm laborers. These bureaus made 882 farm surveys. A farm survey isn't measuring the number of acres a farmer has in his farm. A farm survey is similar to a city survey, or an overhauling of a manufacturing plant by an efficiency expert. This kind of survey is calculated to cut out the boarder cows, eliminate waste motions, do away with wastes generally and direct the farm activities toward the most profitable breeds, crops, etc. It may be assumed that the productivity of the farms surveyed was considerably increased.

The bureaus also helped 151 farmers in keeping accounts. The agents visited 13,400 farms and talked cows, hens, pigs, hay and other farm subjects and they also addressed 1,436 meetings where they gave similar lines of talk. The agents helped to plan 138 drainage systems, 86 farm buildings and 22 silos, and thus the latest and best ideas in this work were brought to the farm. Moreover, the agents preached alfalfa and supervised the growing of 1,323 acres of that crop.

The farm bureau in Oneida county, under the direction of Agent George W. Bush is doing a large amount of high grade work. It is worth nothing that the bureaus collectively are likewise increasing the production and the profits of the farms in this State. At the same time the increased production means a damper to rising food prices. it makes a broader and stronger foundation for industry. It works toward the general welfare. The farm bureau is one of the most important institutions established in the State in recent years.—Observer, Utica.

WINTER, BEAUTIFUL WINTER

By J. E. Hyde, Fulton

The beautiful snow is falling
In flakes of crystal dew.
I would not miss the glorious sight
For anything; Would you?
Coasting and skiing in winter
Are sports we all so love.
The creak of our sleds, and laughter,
And stars a'twinkle above.

Oh give to me a moonlight night,
Or a winter's evening cold.
The winter's sports I would not change
For a million tons of gold.

I love to think of skating rinks,
And my chums of long ago.
Toboggan slides, and hockey games,
And straw rides with my beau.
The bells agingling sweet and loud
Sing melodies so clear.
Yes; I will vote the wintertime
The best of all the year.

BISHOP ISSUES LENTEN LETTER

In It He Urges Self-Denial As a Becoming Celebration of the Season

The Rt. Rev. Charles T. Olmstead, bishop of Central New York, has issued the following Lenten letter, which was read Wednesday in all Episcopal church of this diocese:

My Dear Brethen:

I greet you once more, at the beginning of another Lenten season, earnestly praying that it may be a time of true spiritual progress for us all—a forward movement in the growth in grace.

We are called upon in Lent to make a special effort in the way of self-denial; and it seems to me that I cannot do better at this time than to ask you to unite with me in a brief meditation on that subject.

What do we understand by self-denial? Perhaps there are some people who imagine that it refers only to fasting from material food. But while that is certainly included in the meaning of the term, it is by no means an exhaustive definition. Regarding it, however, in that most literal sense, let us observe that, as abstinence from more or less of meat and drink, fasting is a thing which it might be well for us to practice more systematically than, I imagine, we usually do, and that for two reasons—First, because there are certainly some who are addicted to the habit of more or less excess in the indulgenceof those appetities and the exercise of occasional self-denial in such things would lead to a more becoming abstemiousness. And, second, because we should thereby be enabled to give more generously of our means for the benefit of the Church and of those who are in need. And this second reason would apply, no doubt, with still more force, to self-denial in the gratification of those other desires, for which the world affords such abundant opportunity—not merely the wearing of fine clothes and jewels, but the taking part in amusements and all sorts of entertainments. One can hardly help thinking in these days, when people are so eager to be amused, and the means of gratifying them in that way are so numerous and ready at hand, of those ancient Romans during the Empire, of whom it was said that they were constantly crying out for "bread and circuses." We would not pretend to deny, of course, that we all need and ought to have a certain reasonable amount of recreation, just as we require food and drink to sustain our bodies; but it calls for a measure of self-denial all the year round to keep human beings "temperate in all things," according to the Apostle's rule. And when we read such statements as that which was published in the last issue of The Gospel Messenger, to the effect that during the past year the American people spent nearly two billion dollars for strong drink, nearly a billion for tobacco, several millions for confectionery and soft drinks, and even $15,000,000 for chewing gum, while only $7,500,000 went for the spread of the Gospel of Jesus Christ among the nations of the world—then we can see where a reasonable degree of self-denial might well come in for our own good and for the good of all mankind, particularly at this time, when human suffering is so intensified by the dreadful conflict across the sea.

But this is by no means the only kind of self-denial that we human beings need—it should go deeper into the life and character. Self manifests its evil propensities in more subtle forms than those of which we have been speaking. They are not so gross, perhaps, but they are more dangerous to the spiritual life. They have to do with what may be called "the worship of Self." We call it "pride" or "self-conceit"—self-will, which must have its own way, no matter to whom it may cause inconcenience or discomfort—disobedience which will injure the quiet working of the nation or the Church, that its own sweet will may be accomplished. It is selfishness of this sort that has brought about the disruption of the Church of Christ into so many jarring sects, and we are having the most terrible illustration of a similar spirit among the nations in the awful war now raging in Europe. If Christian people had followed their Master in the practice of self-denial, we should never have beheld such heart-rending tragedies. It is for this reason, therefore, that the Lord Himself said: "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me." This is the reason, in a measure, why He was actually crucified. The Cross is the sign and emblem of the crossing of the human will, and Jesus not only denied himself by refusing "the Kingdoms of the world and the glory of them," but He submitted to the agony of dying on the Cross, that He might the more effectually persuade us to follow in His footsteps. Self-denial, therefor, is really the only way of salvation. Let us be more fervent than ever, dear brethren, in offering that petition of the Litany—"By Thy Cross and Passion, Good Lord, deliver us."

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

Aperson whom the Wyoming newspapers have described as "a sweet modest little woman," Mrs. Morna Wood by name, is a member of the Wyoming House of Representatives.

According to the press reports her presence in the political vortex has not blighted the flower of chivalry but caused it to blossom as the rose.

In ten months the vote on woman suffrage in New York State is going to be taken. The suffragists are mobilizing their forces. The New York electorate may not be converted but it cannot escape being enlightened. One rapid firing gun that will be turned on every voter is the folllowing questionaire:

If women do not need the vote in New York State why does the law give as "courtesy" to the man the life use of all the real property of his deceased wife, and give as "dower" to the woman but the life use of one-third of the real property of her husband?

Why does the wife receive but half the personal property if her husband dies intestate and without descendants, and the husband in similar circumstances receives it all?

These and many more are the questions to be fired at the voter who must either explain or agree to vote "yes" on the woman suffrage amendment.

Disfranchisement is nothing, says the pacifier to the irate suffragist, the people living in the district of Columbia have no vote and they aren't making a fuss all the time.

That may be so,answers the suffragist, but the U. S. Government pays almost half the taxes for the District of Columbia but whatever it does to women it never remits any of their taxes.

"If the mother of John D. Rockefeller had been a better woman," said Mother Jones in an interview during the hearing before the Industrial Commission in New Yark city he would not be the owner of mines where men and women and children are slaughtered."

Since the greatest government in the world has not been able to keep John D. from owning the earth it is difficult to understand how one woman could keep him from owning Colorado fuel and iron mining stock.

The mother can't control the food, let alone the morals of her children. She takes the milk out of the bottle and politics has put it in. She teaches her boy to pray and politics winks while he is taught to gamble. Her quests for justice, it was President Wilson who said it, will lead her into the confines of politics. And to go voteless into politics is like going on the golf links without any golf balls.

Conservative old Massachusetts that originally only admitted Congregationalists in good and regular standing to the ballot box has passed a bill in its Senate eleven to one in favor of admitting women who originally in the good old days were not admitted to the school house except in summer when the boys were haying.

HIDDEN AMONG THE STUFF

A SUNDAY SERMON

Billy Sunday preached in Philedalphia Saturday night on the topic, "Hidden Among the Stuff." He said:

Text: I Sam. x. 22.—"Behold, he hath hid himself among the stuff."

It is with some reluctance I speak about how a man failed. I would much rather tell you of some signal success in life, but some times the study of failure is more fruitful than the study of conquest.

I am speaking tonight with the hope that where Saul went wrong you'll go right so that when you are called to be king or queen of that inner kingdom of men and of women you may be one of God's noblemen, and come to your coronation, not like Saul, allowing the "stuff" of the world to cover up kingliness and queenliness.

It arouses one's contempt to see a big man, a man born for big things, doing small mean, contemptible things. There are some things we can almost excuse in a little, weak, puny, weazened man, that would be an unpardonble sin for a big man.

We can forgive Zaccheus for climbing a tree in order to catch a glimpse of Jesus, but we cannot forgive Saul for crawling into a hole and pulling the camp luggage in after him. Before we get him out, now that we know where he is, let me refresh your memory.

(1) I do not like his ancestry. His father was a man of wealth and of power. He and his son had no thought about things which counted most in life; they were too busy breed ing asses to think much about the hope of Israel and who the God that made the nation was.

In all the years that Samuel ruled the nation, and stood as God's representative, Saul never heard of him, didn't know him, had never met him. Kish, Saul's father, never said, "Come, my son, the Lord's prophet is to pass, let us listen to his words, hear his judgments."

No; Kish was too busy with his stock farm. He never went to church on Sunday; that was the day he looked over the stock. He cared more for his farm stock than for God's tabernacle. Sunday was a good time to plan and figure up, but he never solved the problem "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

The descendants of Kish are like many who live in the streets in this and every other town, too busy six days a week to think of souls, and on the seventh they say, "Too tired to go to church today," so they get a paper, fill their pipe, put on their slippers and sit down and sit idly by while people are going down to hell. They grow sodden and surfeited by the mercies of God, they spurn Christ and purity.

O Kish, breeder of asses, too busy to go to church, let me show you a son. I passed over Gilboa, marked the place where he fell a suicide. The Philistines cut off his head and nailed his body to the wall.

Here is a young scion of respectability, staggering along with boisterous mates, blowing whiffs of foul cigarette smoke into the faces of decency. Somewhere there's a mother's heart that is breaking, a father's hair whitening with grief over a wayward son, but he has had a taste of hell's poisonous broth(his blood is tingling with the virus of damnation, with which he has been inoculated in the cesspools of shame; to him a mother's love, to him a father's hope, a sister's tears are as nothing. He has passed the rubicon of virtue, and the bridge has been burned behind him.

Old-Fashioned Mothers Are Vanishing Race.

Here goes a fallen angel, once the pure beloved idol of a happy home; out of her eyes vanished gentle modesty, once her sweetest charm. In its place has come a look of bold intensity, glittering glare, which resembles the deadly gleam in the eyes of the sinuous snake as it coils to strike its prey.

She loved not wisely, but too well. Clinging hands could not stay the mad flight down the toboggan into hell.

She has thrown away all that was dear to woman's pure ambition. The world knows her only as one to avoid. Respectability pulls its garments aside as she passes. Her gaudy raiment and seductive glances attract none but the depraved.

My hope and prayer is that some of the fathers and mothers who may be listeing to me tonight will not live to read the black headlines which will tell of the shame of children whose bodies they have nourished, but whose souls have been starved in their own parlors. Thank God there are still a few old-fashioned mothers left, but like the veterans of the civil war they are becoming a vanishing remnant.

Saul was called to a crown, but was found hidden among the stuff. You may say the reason he hid is because he was so modest. Perhaps that may be, but it's an awful thing for a man to be as modest as that when he stands face to face with the duties and hardships of this life.

I can tell you what your life is going to be by the way you start. When we have to do common things is when the yellow shows in you, if you have a streak of it.

Judging Saul by his after life, I am compelled to view his act as that of a man shirking from toil, because it was strenuous and difficult. It was not a breakfast job to be king of Israel. It was almost as big a task as being president of Mexico.

There are mountains to climb, there are hills and precipices, cataracts, caverns, and pitfalls and slime pits all along the way, but it is also true there are shady valleys, cozy nooks, gardens of flowers, and days radiant with the sunlight. There will be storms and clouds, there will be days when the cares and sorrows will press heavily and almost crush us into the grave; there are steeps to climb if we ever reach the pinnacle of success; there are streams to ford if we would grasp the crown of victory.

Need Earnest Men and Pure Women.

The spirit that actuated Saul controls many splendid men, who have in them the making of better King Sauls, ruling over a greater kingdom than he ruled, but they are "hiding themselves among the stuff."

They are hiding behind stocks, bonds, drygoods, politics, infidelity, impurity, whiskey, beer bottles, Sunday baseball, golf and a host of other things. Their genuineness, nobility and integrity are lost in the search for fortune. Don't get lost in the stuff.

We want young men, men who will be courageous and chivalrous, manly and thoughtful, who can say NO and mean it, who will love their homes better than the street, who respect womanhood and hate vice in any form, who love the Bible more than billiards, virtue more than vice.

We want girls who form lofty ideals of womanhood, who think more of decency than dress, gentleness than grossness, who will grow up to be good women, loyal wives and fond mothers, who think more of firmness than folly, cradles than cards, who do not despise the kitchen, who can distinguish a gentleman from a scoundrel, who prefer a workingman for a husband rather than a loafer or a dude.

A serious purpose may be lost in the search for pleasure. You may become a toy in the social life, a mere plaything attracted by anything that tickles your fancy and gives a new sensation.

When I see men called to high duties in royal service I cannot bear to see them hide among the stuff, and forgo and pass up a chance for a crown or a kingdom and become chained to some habit or evil influence.

There are slaves of fashion, women who are claimed to the Moloch of pride and vanity, all noble longings and ambitions of motherhood dead. To them the humbler joys of life are bitter ashes, the quiet paths of domestic peace have no charms for them.

Others are chained to mammon. The man or woman whose only idol is gold is one of the most unhappy and miserable of all. Vast accumulations bring cares and responsibilities, rob life of its sweetest pleasures, develop mean selfish characteristics. It drives its victims to a grave over which no tears are shed, it fills coffins over which no loving heads linger.

"Stuff" It Transient; Manhood Is Eternal.

What would have happened if Washington had shirked his duty, or if Lincoln had not been ready for the great task?

Don't shirk God's great tasks for meaner ones. If anybody can afford to spend life aimlessly, it's not you. God has called you to a great life and purpose. You have heard the call, but are dallying with "stuff."

Remember that "stuff" is transient; Christian manhood is eternal. Samson had strength but failed; Absalom had beauty, but failed. Alexander had the "power of conquest," but he died by the cup of poison; Ingersoll had eloquence, but failed.

The outward things men struggle for are but "stuff," in the great exigencies of life.

The Lord kept track of Saul, and God hasn't forgotten where you are. sion of a father your every effort, His heart aches to drag you from among the luggage and give you a place in His kingdom.

Young man, I appeal to you. The wealth of the world, intellectual, moral, financial and social, is within your reach. Grapple with it all, but use it for great purposes, unselfish service. Don't hide among it, or shirk your crown.

Girls, I appeal to you, Your call to queenliness is loud; do you hear it?

If you spend your years in a silly round of dances, clubs, dance, the opera, and all the inane accessories of so-called society, you will find at last that you have "hidden yourself among valueless stuff."

Men of business, men of professions let me appeal to you. Saul knew his duty, he knew his destiny, so do you.

Rise to the importance of your opportunity, take your crown which God offers and be a king. Don't hide in the "stuff."

God has given no uncertain call. Don't allow the tinsel of selfish purposes to blind you to the pure gold of righteousness. Only the man who pays attention to duty regardless of all else will find his way into the Kingdom and leave the world poorer when the Lord calls him home.

Live the Christian life. Children will love you, women will admire you, men will respect you, God will crown your life with success, and when the twilight of your life mingles with the purpling dawn of eternity, men will speak your name with honor, and baptize your grave with tears when the Lord attunes for you the evening chimes of life.

SCOUTS HIKED TO THE WOODS

By M. Le Roy Wise, Scriba, Troop 1

A person walking past the park last Saturday might have seen quite a mob formation. This was for a peaceful purpose however. The boy scouts of Fulton were gathering for a hike. About forty-five boys, equipped with either skiis or snowshoes, reported for a good time.

The skiing was excellent and, after covering three miles at good time, a halt was made in Howard's woods, where a fire-lighting contest was held. Troop 2 had a fire going and coffee boiling first. Soon afterwards coffee was served with doughnuts.

When it was learned that marshmallows were to be a part of the menu every boy was on good behavior—for a little while. When the bottom of the box began to show through a general scramble took place. After it was over the boys came out of it with smiles and confectionery sugar on their faces.

Late in the afternoon Scout Murdock was awarded a second class badge and a start was made for home.

The Inter-Patrol Contest in Troop 1 now stands as follows: Eagle Patrol 128, Hawk Patrol 104, Lion Patrol 89. A test meeting for the Lion Patrol was held Tuesday evening of this week and the boys studied on the semaphore.

Tuesday evening, Feb. 3d, will be the next regular meeting of Troop 1. An interesting program is planned including the talk by Mr. W. D. Carr on Alaska.

Monday evening, Feb. 22d, at 7:30 the basketball team meet the Meteor club of Oswego at the city hall. The scouts who play are: Leroy Prevost and Leon Foster, forwards; Carlyle Pooler, center; Ralph Foster and Hadwin Fitch, guards. Five and ten cents admission will be charged to cover expenses.

GUESTS MUST "GET THE HOOK" FOR VESTS

The following rule will be added to the list of instructions to guests, tacked on every door at the hotel at No. 311 South Clinton st., Syracuse:

"Don't hang your vest on the stovepipe."

A guest at the hotel recently was sufficiently careless to use the damper on the pipe for a clothes rack. A telephone alarm of fire was sounded at 6 o'clock and Engine Company No. 6 was on the scene within a few minutes.

Guests and employes of the hotel succeeded in checking the flames before the arrival of the firemen. The guest lost his vest, but no other damage was done.

A Pochahontas Entertained

It will be many days before Kiowa Council, 132, Degree of Pochahontas, members, can outshine their efforts of last Wednesday evening, when an entertainment and dinner such as only the good women are able to provide was spread before about 100 persons, members and friends.

Sea foods were the principal articles of diet at dinner, and the rooms in Red Men's hall, the scene of the affair, were gaily and prettily decorated in purple and white.

The Council gave the dinner in honor of the Great Pochahontas of the Great Council of N. Y. State, Mrs. Vanalstand and Mr. Vanalstand of Amsterdam; Mrs. Gere, Past Great Pochahontas, and Mr. Gere of Syracuse.

The Y. P. B. Meeting

The Y. P. B. will hold its regular meeting Moday evening, Feb. 22, at State Street M. E. Chruch. All young people interested in the work are invited, and the committee urges everyone to hear Miss Maude Perkins, State Supt., of the Y. P. B., who is to give a talk before the society. She is a wide-awake speaker and is thoroughly capable of convincing the young people of the opportunity and privilege in enlisting.

The W. C. T. U. will be the honored guests and a special invitation is extended to all pastors.

Refreshments will be served.

HOOKING A SHARK.

It's an Exciting Sport Even if One Doesn't See the Fish.

Fishing for sharks off the pier at Palm Beach is a Brobdingnagian sport. You fish with clotheslines and a hook the size of a split anchor. Half of some great fish is slipped on your hook for bait. You throw it off the pier and fasten the end of the line to the railing and then take out your detective story and read.

Sometimes you get a bite; sometimes you don't. At evening the colored gentleman in charge of the shark fishing on the pier goes around and takes in the lines. That is itself is on rare occasions an exciting sport.

Once a New York vacationist was standing on the pier enjoying the sunset after a day's fruitless angling when he heard a shout from the colored gentleman, who had discovered a shark on one of the lines that had been left out. The colored gentleman was having trouble in handling the beast, so the New Yorker went to his assistance. Together they pulled and hauled at the line in vain. Another man on the pier joined in, and then the three braced their feet against the rail and tugged for all they were worth. But in spite of all they could do the line slipped gradually through their fingers.

Finally all the slack was used up, and the rope, coming taut against the rail, snapped like a thread. The New Yorker has always wished he could have had just one look at that shark.—New York Post.

MARTEL AND POITIERS.

The Man and Battle That Saved Europe From the Saracen Yoke.

A traveler approaching the city of Poitiers, France, would hardly believe that it was around the site of that small city that the battle which saved all Europe from the Saracen yoke was fought. The man who commanded the French in that great battle was Charles, who afterward received the surname Martel, "the hammer," from his mighty prowess in that fight.

He baffled the Saracen invasion by his great victory at Poitiers. The Saracens had mastered all Asia and conquered Spain. Nothing could withstand their arms, and the Crescent bore death and desolation before it wherever it went. The Mohammedans determined to conquer all Europe in the name of the Prophet. Spain had fallen, and France was next. The two armies met at Poitiers. The strife was bloody, for the Saracens had the prestige of former victories and the advantage of numbers; France had the wisdom of Martel. That wisdom triumphed, and the Mohammedan was hurled back, a broken power. This victory saved Europe from want and desolation, for the brave people would have suffered anything sooner than embrace Mohammedanism. The great champion of Christian civilization lived nine years after his famous triumph at Poitiers and died in the year 741.—Irish World.

Force of Drops of Water.

It seems almost incredible that so small a thing as a drop of rain should injure the propeller of an aeroplane, but such is the case. At so great a speed does the propeller revolve—1,200 revolutions a minute as a matter of fact—that a rain drop hits it with such enormous force as to chip a piece of the wood away. Some idea of the hardships entailed by flying through the rain at sixty miles an hour may be gathered from the fact that an aviator who recently went through such an experience, alighted with the edge of his propeller fretted as though it had been gnawed by rats. The rain drops had chipped pieces out of the blades and also bruised the aviator's face, owing to the force with which they hit against his flesh.—London Spectator.

Antiquity of "A Regular Shindy."

The antiquity of many familiar terms is surprising when it is known. Many people are not aware that "What the dickens!" occurs in Shakespeare, but fewer still will be prepared to hear that the phrase "a regular shindy" is found in an author's note to a poem called "The Polish Kingdom," published in 1570. A writer quotes this note, which refers to the celebration of Maundy Thursday, "Midnight services are held in church, the lights are put out, and a regular shindy follows, men being hurled and wounded."—London Globe.

Fine Language.

As a rule the educated native of West Africa, like his Indian brother, loves high flown language. A clerk some time ago sent a report complaining that the cartridges of the police at his station often misfired. This is how he put it: "It is ridiculous to report that the firearms of the police when pointed at the firmament refuse to give explosive sound."—London Saturday Review.

Of the Past.

Geologists say that several species of man have entirely disappeared from the earth. Doubtless these last species include the nice old gentleman who used to pull off his boots of an evening with the help of the bootjack.—Chicago News.

The Fourth Estate.

The expression "fourth estate" was first used by Thomas Carlyle and was applied to the editors during the period of the French revolution.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Time' Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, Feb. 20.—That the method of making appropriations for agricultural institutions for the State as at present followed by the legislature is decidedly wrong, is the general impression among men versed on agricultural credits. This fact was brought out at a hearing before the ways and means committee on a bill appropriating $30,000 for a demonstration building for the State agricultural school at Alfred University.

While there is a pressing need for schools to meet the agricultural needs of the State, such schools are being constructed without regard to uniformity of curriculum and as a general thing spring to life as the result of the efforts made to secure the necessary appropriations by the members of the legislature from the district in which the proposed school is to be located regardless of the agricultural needs of the community. This was the view point taken by several of the speakers.

It has now been proposed that an agricultural commission to be appointed by the governor and comprising men who are in no way connected with any agricultural school, be appointed to look into the needs of the entire State and devise a more comprehensive method of developing the agricultural school system.

Another proposal advanced was that one of the deputy commissioners of agricultural be placed at the head of the agricultural school system rather than that the State education department have jurisdiction over it.

It is desired by those deeply interested in agricultural education adequately equipped schools be located in at least six different sections of the State each school to work out the agricultural problems of the community in which it is located. Cornell university is favored as the head school or university, that the State annually provides liberally for that institution along agricultural lines. It was suggested that the State university at Ithaca be made a finishing institution where the final instruction upon agricultural matters be given.

There are at present eight different bills before the members of the legislature carrying appropriations for agricultural schools now in existence. Several additional schools are being contemplated. The agricultural schools which are now being supported either wholly or in part by the State are: at Ithaca, Canton, the St. Lawrence school, the Morrisville school; the Alfred school at Alfred; the Delaware county school at Delhi and the Cobleskill school at Cobleskill. In addition there is the new agricultural school at Syracuse which is self-supporting and the proposed new school for Long Island.

The schools at St. Lawrence and Alfred are well established, Morrisville are struggling, Cobleskill is a cattle school and the Long Island school necessarily has not opened.

As a result of the criticism which was raised at the recent hearing upon the bill carrying the appropriation mentioned above, a bill is to be introduced which will aim to remedy the conditions said to exist relative to haphazard methods in dispensing agricultural instruction said to exist. As a matter of fact, the State's appropriations each year for agricultural propositions aggregate a far larger sum than is generally known.

The general scheme outlined may be incorporated into the plan to reorganize the State department of agriculture now being worked out.

MARRIAGE LICENSE

City Clerk Scudder issued a marriage license yesterday afternoon to Cora B. Coe and William Thorpe, both of this city.

Cupid's darts seem to have been unusually telling in this city since the new year was rung in. Twenty-seven marriage licenses have been issued to date.

ELKS WILL HAVE BOWLING ALLEYS IN HOME

In addition to recent improvements made by the B. P. O. E. lodge, which included a splendid dancing floor, the early installation of facilities for further amusement of the membership is planned. New billiard and pool parlors and a bowling alley are numbered among the improvements to come, the work to begin about March 1.

At last night's meeting a class of 20 candidates was initated with the lodge At the conclusion of the ceremonies an appetizing fish supper was served, to which about 100 men did full justice.

M. W. A. ACTIVE

Coupled with the pool and membership contests of the Modern Woodmen of American lodge, one move source of amusement is to be furnished to the members, and that is, a theater party at the Happy Hour on Mar. 8. Manager Prowda has arranged for the production of a feature picture show, both afternoon and evening of that day. Seven hundred tickets have been so far sold for the show, and the lodge entertainment committee feel quite proud of that fact. This committee is comprised of the following men: James Cole, Orrie Palmer and A. M. Roy.

THE ONE BIG LAUGH

It is almost impossible to write a lucid description of the great Keystone 6 reel comedy, "Tillie's Punctured Romance," that is to hold forth ath The Quirk tonight and tomorrow only. Everybody who has followed the careers of noted theatrical people cannot fail to recognize in Marie Dressler one of the greatest comedy actresses of the age. Charles Chaplin with his little moustache, big feet and comical gestures and Mabel Normand, the girl that gets the bumps, assist Marie in furnishing the greatest one big laugh moving picture ever shown. Don't miss it as a tonic, it is good for six months' good health.

"ALL ROADS LEAD, ETC."

All roads lead to Fulton. A Buffalo man today bought in this city a side of pork which his eye "lingered longer" upon than did his hand upon his purse strings.

The stranger in passing the market of Taylor and Wilcox saw the meat, entered the shop and in the twinkle of an eye Mr. Taylor had the money and the Buffalonian the pork. The meat later was expressed to the man's home in Buffalo, which, by the way, is but one block from the packing house of Jacob Dodd in that city.

REMOVE ROADS FROM POLITICS

State's Autoists Would Have Department a Constitutional Office

Albany, Feb. 19.—The law and legislative committee of the New York State Automobile Association at a meeting held in this city yesterday, unamimously voted to instruct its general counsel Melvin Bender, to take steps to bring before the constitutional convention which is to be assembled in the coming summer, a measure providing for the establishment of the office of superintendent of State Highways as a constitutional office and thus remove it from State politics and prevent it from being a football of party factions.

A letter has been written by A. J. Deer, president of the Association to the 75 offiliated clubs, asking the cooperation of these clubs in the work of bringing this important question before every delegate of the convention, who resides in the district where the club is located. It is proposed to have a complete statement made of all the objections to the present method of selecting highway commissioners and a history of the highway work which can be presented to the delegates in a proper manner.

"Since the establishment of the present general scheme of State Highway improvement, a statement issued by the Executive Committee of the New York State Automobile Association reads, "there has been three radically different methods tried out and unless something is done to make permanent the Highway organization, the road work will suffer irreparable damage and loss.

In the first place, the law provided for three commissioners with practically equal power. This was the Hughes Highway Commission. When the Democratic regime came into power, this old commission was abolished and a different method was inaugurated, whereby two other State officials were made commissioners in conjunction with the Highway Commission, but the two state officials were chiefly an advisory board, this was found to be so inefficient that the system was changed to the present method of administration, by which there is one commissioner and at the time of this writing, there is a bill in the Legislature to change the Department for the third time and provides for three Highway Commissioners. The Law and Legislative Committee of the New York State Automobile Association has decided that the only practical and sensible solution for this unfortunate condition is to have the Constitutional Convention provide that the office of Highway Comissioner shall not be subiect to the changes of the political parties."

SYRACUSE WOMEN SEE HUGO SIGN SUFFRAGE RESOLUTION

Watch Official Act Which Allows Vote on Franchise Question at Next Election.

Four Syracuse women returned yesterday from Albany, where they witnessed Francis M. Hugo, secretary of theate, sign the resolution to permit balloting next fall on the suffrage amendment to the constitution. About 150 men and suffragists from all parts of the state went to Secretary Hugo's office at noon to see the official action.

The delegation from Syracuse, which represented the Woman's Political Union of Central New York, included Mrs. Jeseph M. Hill, Mrs. John D. Pennock, Mrs. James P. Shanahan and Mrs. William Hutton Blauvelt.

After the resolution was signed Mrs. Brannan presented the following speakers: Miss Alberta Hill, Miss Florence Kelley, Mrs. Inez Milholland Boissevain, Mrs. Edward Hale and Mrs. Blauvelt of this city. Mrs. Blauvelt spoke for the Women's Political Union of Central New York.

Thesigning of the resolution completes every legal step necessary for putting the amendment before the voters of New York for approval or disapproval next election. The amendment reads the same as Article 2 of the Constitution of the state in the relation of qualification to voters, except that the word male was struck out and the following was added: "Provided that a citizen by marriage shall have been an inhabitant of the United States for five years."

About Sports Generally

By Frank G. Menke.

New York, Feb. 19.—Those who spoofed us a year ago when we remarked that the Federal League was here to stay spoof no longer. And those who took exceptions to our statement that there was room—and ample room—for a third major league aren't taking exceptions any longer. They are beginning to agree with us.

Ten years ago there wasn't room for three big leagues. Even five years ago there wasn't. But there is today. There is more room today for three big leagues than there was for two big leagues at the time that the American League horned its way into the big league show.

The population of Greater New York was 3,437,202 in 1900. The population at that time was figured to be large enough to support three major league clubs—Yankees, Giants and Brooklyn Dodgers. Splitting the population three ways meant that each club had about 1,000,000 persons to draw from. The population of Greater New York now is about 5,700,000—enough to support five major league clubs—and still have over 1,000,000 persons to draw from.

Chicago's population in 1902-03 was 1,700,000. That means that each club had 850,000 persons to draw from. The population to day is about 2,400,000, which split three ways would leave 800,000 population for each club.

Baltimore's population now is around 600,000—a population greater than Washington, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh or Detroit. Baltimore certainly deserves the major league rating that the Feds gave to it. Buffalo is another city that the Feds gave a major league status. They were justified in doing it. Buffalo's population today is about 450,000, a population far greater than that of Cleveland, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati or Washington back in 1902-03.

Newark, N. J., is more justly entitled to a major league franchise today than were Detroit, Cincinnati or Washington back in 1902-03. Newark's population today is about 375,000 while the population of Detroit in 1903 was about 300,000, Washington's around 290,000 and Cincinnati's 335,000.

The Feds in their first year out made three mistakes as to granting franchises. Indianapolis and Kansas City are too small for major league ball. The population of Indianapolis now is around 250,000, while that of Kansas City is about 260,000. The Feds rectified the Kansas City error recently by transferring the franchise. Probably in 1916 they will transfer the Indianapolis franchise to Cleveland or Detroit. Either of those cities, with populations over the 600,000 mark are able to support continuous baseball.

The other error was in placing a team in St. Louis. The Missouri city is a great baseball town but it is doubtful if it can support three major league clubs, within the next five years. The population of the town is only about 700,000—a bit too small to give baseball support to three clubs.

The Feds may decide to continue in St. Louis and let it be the survival of the fittest. Two good clubs can operate at a profit in St. Louis and the Feds may take a permanent chance on their club being one of those two.

If the Feds decided to shift the St. Louis franchise they could take in Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati or Milwaukee. Cincinnati with its 400,000 population would support continuous baseball. Milwaukee, which hasn't major league representation, is a good baseball town and probably would support a big league club. Its population is over the 400,000 mark—a population bigger than Washington or Cincinnati.

Interest in baseball is keener today than it was ten years ago and the ratio of fans per 10,000 population is far greater today than it was ten years ago. Those are facts than cannot be disputed.

Therefore, don't you agree with us that there is room for a third big league—and ample room?

Perhaps you have noticed in days gone by
The habit of Corbett, the gent,
Of making predictions on coming events
Which showed that his judgment was bent.
Now, Jeems is a scout whom every one loves,
But when it comes down to the job
Of picking a winner, especially in fights,
Why, he is a bit of a slob.

And so it behooves Mr. Willard, the pug,
To get up and protest with a yell,
For Corbett has picked him to beat the big black
At the very first tap of the bell.

Here is a suggestion for the promoters of the Johnson-Willard fight who are trying to get Johnson into Mexico beyond the reach of General Carranza:

John Tener, prexy of the National league, is resting up by working. Probably the National league figures that Tener had enough rest while serving as Governor of Pennsylvania.

"I have a team of youngsters and they may do some surprising things in 1915," says Joe Birmingham, who manages the Indians. All right, Joe, all right.

WHEAT TRADING YESTERDAY

3,000,000 Bushels Sold on Chicago Market; Prices Soon; Liberal Buying

Chicago, Fed. 19.—Export demand broader than ever whirled the price of wheat upward yesterday after a break of 4½c that was largely due to the deallocks over the so-called submarine war zone. The market finished strong at 1⅛@1¼c net advance. Corn gained ⅛@½c to ⅝@¾c, and oats ⅛cto ⅛@¼c. In provisions the outcome ranged from a shade to 27½c decline.

Developments in the wheat pit were in many respects the most surprising since the war began. It was the general belief early in the day that the hazard to ocean-ging vessels had been so augmented that a material if not total stoppage of exports to England from the United States might be looked or—at least during a short period. Heavy liquidating sales here by owners was the immediate consequence, and accordingly there were soon on record smashing declines in values.

It was when the selling was bordering on a semi-panic that export purchasing of wheat was started in deficance of German's blockade. Quotations now mounted as rapidly as beforehand they had plunged down grade. England was said to be in the lead in the buying, with France, Italy, Greece and Holland pressing close behind.

As the end of the session approached estimates were current that 3,000,000 bushels had been disposed of to Europe, the biggest total for one day this season. In this connection bull leaders were declaring that actual farm stock were much less than had been assumed at Washington and that a million a day rate of exports would surely mean famine.

Corn, like wheat, had an early break and later a strong rally. Reasons in regard to both cereals were much alike. Sales of cash corn had during the day aggregated 1,350,000 bushels, mostly to exporters.

Weakness in the hog market prevented as thorough a recovery in provisions as in grain. Besides cash demand for provisions was reported to be very slow.

British Show Mercy to Turkish Spy

By W. T. MASSEY,

Cairo, Feb. 18.—The Turks have a spy system arranged on the German model. Punishment has been meted out to some of the spies, and the seed they have attempted to sow has generally fallen on barren soil. A typical example of the efforts of German-inspired Turks to stir up strife is given in the report of a court-martial of an ex-soldier of the Soudanese army.

Almaz Abdullah, a native of the Soudan, was in the 9th Soudanese till 1900, when he joined the Egyptian Coast Guards, and was promoted Yukbashi in 1907. Five years later he was convicted of conniving at smuggling and was discharged. He joined the Turkish leader, Enver Pasha, at Derna, who showed him special consideration. Later he went to Constantinople, where Enver had him trained by German officers, his color ad nationality makinghim a peculirly suitaable emissarry to the Soudan. He was attached to Enver's staff. He received a commission, and later was appointed to the guard of ex-Sultan, Abdul Hamid. He recently came on a mission to Cairo, where he was in close conection with the Ottoman Commissariate, and was seen later in the western frontier of Egypt. Then he made his way to Jeddah.

The story of his arrival at Port Soudan and his attempt to suborn the allegiance of the army appears in the report of the proceedings of the court martial.

The trial took place on December 7 and 8. The accused is a tall, thin man, of black Soudanese type. He wore the uniform of Turkish Bimbashi. The charges against him were first, spying as defined by Hague Convention, 1907; and, second, war treason by endeavoring clandestinely to seduce officers of the 3d battalion from their duty.

The accused pleaded not guilty to both charges. The witnesses include Bimb, Mohammed Eff, Amin and Pagh, Abel Ghani Eff, Lutfi, of the 3d battalion. From their evidence, and the admissions of the accused, it appears that accused was now Bimbalii in the Turkish army. On November 1, after the war was declared against Turkey, accused received instructions from the Vali of Jeddah, and sailed, in a lambuk, with six others. On November 11 at night they appeared at the village of Takarna, outside Port Soudan, dressed like ordinary natives.

On november 16, the accused, wearing mufti, accosted an orderly outside the Egyptian officers, quarters, in Port Soudan, and asked for the Bashi of the 3d battalion, and instructed an orderly to tell the Bimbashi when he came in, that a Turkish officer had come to talk secretly with him. To all others the orderly was to say that a beggar had been there.

At 7 a.m. the accused called, again wearing mufti, and interviewed the Bimbashi and the Sagh, and stated that he had come from Constantinople on behalf of Enver, on a secret mission to see the Egyptian officers, and to learn their ideas about the war and the course they would take if the Turks came, and he proceeded to make suggestions to seduce the officers from their duty.

With the utmost loyalty and discretion, the Bimbashi, assisted by the other officers, drew the accused on, and then, making an excuse to leave the room, communicated with Wilson Pasha, the Governor, who came to the mess, when the accused was arrested and searched.

A Turkish cipher and notebook were found on him, and his uniform as Bimbashi, with many documents in his bagge, were subsequently discovered in the Takarna village.

The prisoner said he was on leave, and was merely conveying a message from the Vali of Jeddah to the senior Egyptian officer, Port Soudan, and that he wore mufti because he had lost the key of his valise.

The court found the accused guilty of both charges, and passed upon him sentence of death by shooting.

After the promulgation of the sentence, the prisoner gave information regarding the intentions of the Turkish Government, and of individuals employed in designs against Egypt and the Soudan.

In consideration of the importance of the disclosures, the Governor-General commuted the sentence to one of imprisonment for life.

RICHARDS APPOINTED

Oswego, Feb. 19.—Word was received in this city last night that Willard C. Richards of Parish, chairman of the Oswego County Republican committee, had been appointed deputy state compensation commissioner to succeed John Fitzgibbons, who resigned last Saturday, following the exhausting of the appropriation for the maintenance of the office and the payment of salaries.

Mr. Richards' friends in this city are jubilant over the announcement and assert that he will make a record in his new position which will be hard to equal. He is known as a man who deals with all in a fair and impartial manner and will be inclined to listen to both sides of all cases which are brought before him and then deliver his judgments according to the evidence as laid before him and with the idea of administering equal justice to all.

The Van Wagenen, Inc., will make a specialty this seasoon of incubators and brooders. Stock is already being shown. Adv. 59

BREVITY OF ENGLISH.

Its Advantage In This Respect Over French and German.

In an international report, printed in parallel columns in French, German and English, the three versions being exact translations of each other, the English report invariably finished first; sometimes it won by a whole page. As a rule, the French report was the most diffuse.

This brevity of English is partly explained by the fact that English is made up to an extraordinary extent of words of one syllable. Its nouns having (unlike the German) lost all their inflections except the possessive "s," have become mere roots, a very large proportion of them monosyllabic. In Germany a monosyllable root practically always gets an extra syllable tacked on by way of case ending. In the second place English has little of the elaborate and explicit machinery of structure that French has, so it saves space in prepositions and such paraphernalia. Instead, English has what the grammarians call incipient agglutination—that is, sticking words together in groups without either prepositions or case endings to connect them.

An example of the former kind of brevity is a word like "earthquake," two syllables, compared with the German "erdbeben," three syllables, and the French "tremblement de terre," five syllables. An example of the terseness of English would be a phrase like, "I have been to the house and have now come back," every word a single syllable. In a telegram this would be just as intelligible in the form "Been house now back." You cannot carry that sort of thing far in any other European language.—Manchester Guardian.

THE STATE OF FRANKLIN.

It Had a Short Life In What Is Now Eastern Tennessee.

In 1784 North Carolina, growing impatient of the burden that her western settlements had imposed upon her treasury and irritated by the complaints of the people of these sections, passed an act conveying to the federal government all the lands that now constitute the state of Tennessee.

The people of the country that is now eastern Tennessee, feeling themselves left without a government, made haste to organize themselves into an independent commonwealth, which they called, as a tribute to the illustrious philosopher, the state of Franklin. These people applied for admission into the Union; but, the federal government being slow and unwilling to act and North Carolina having repealed the act of cession of her western province to the Union, the state of Franklin came into very troubled waters for some years.

Some efforts were made to persuade the Kentuckians to join themselves to the state of Franklin, a provision having been made for such co-operation in the constitution of the experiment, but they came to nothing. The new state gradually fell to pieces, and in 1787 its brilliant and able governor, John Sevier, was put on trial for high treason. He was released by a daring rescue and subsequently pardoned and restored in name to the leadership, which he never lost in the affections of his people. In 1787 the last legislature of the state of Franklin held its session at Greenville.—Philadelphia Press.

Napoleon's Confidence.

Just before his marriage Napoleon received the appointment of commander in chief of the army of Italy. He was then twenty-six. "You are rather young," said one of the directors, "to assume responsibility so weighty and to take command over veteran generals."

"In one year," Napoleon replied, "I shall be old or dead."

"We can place you in command of men only," said Carnot, "for the troops are in need of everything, and we can furnish you with no money to provide supplies."

"Give me only men enough," Napoleon answered, "and I ask for nothing more; I will be answerable for the result."—"Table Talk and Opinions of Napoleon Buonaparte."

Pure Bred Arab Horses.

In Cairo there is a society for preserving the pure bred Arab horse. It is said that recent changes in the lives and habits of the Bedouins have resulted in the deterioration of these horses. A practical horseman of wide experience says that as a rule the Arab horse is now no better treated than our own horses, whatever may have been true of the old days when such poems as "The Arab to His Steed" were written.

A Troublemaker.

"Why did you tell my wife that before I met her I promised to love you forever?"

"Well, didn't you?"

"Sure I did, but that's no kind of conversation to go to a man's wife with."—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Fulfilled.

Mrs. Gnaggs—Before we were married you used to say you could listen to my sweet voice all night. Mr. Gnaggs—Well, at that time I had no idea I'd ever have to do it.—Judge.

BREAD, 3½ CENTS A LOAF

Housewives' League Showing How It May Be Made.

New York, Feb. 19.—Bread at three and one-half cents a loaf is the aim of the Housewives' League, but those who enjoy the staff of life at that low figure will have to make it. In order that no women can have the excuse of not knowing how, the league has its cooking expert, Miss Emma G. Bossom, at the headquarters, 25 West Forty-fifth st., teaching housewives and those who aspire to be housewives the art of baking bread and biscuits that will melt in the mouth.

Many of the pupils expect to win prizes in the bread-making contest that has opened. The awards will be made Feb. 27, but all contestants must register this week. The first prize is $5 and the blue ribbon, the second prize $3 and a white ribbon, and the third prize $1 and a yellow ribbon. There will be a first, second and third prize for each borough.

It is said that, with flour at $8.50 a barrel, bread can be made for three and one-half cents a fair-sized loaf.

A Combination Gas and Fireless Cooker

The convenience and economy of the fireless cooker has stimulated inventors to combine in one range, the apparatus for first cooking the food, and heating a retaining compartment, and then, by heavily insulated walls, conserving the heat until the operation is completed. A gas range has been patented which unites these functions in an ingenius manner. One compartment is arranged with gas burners above and below, the heat from which is directed upon thick walls those outer covering is asbestos or similar nonconducting material.

HELPFUL HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES

Washing Machine That Operates on a New Principle.

In a new washing machine there are neither gears nor belts, says Popular Mechanics. A small electric motor fastened beneath the tub is connected with a fan or propeller within the tub, and the fan sends a constant stream of hot suds through the soiled clothing contained in a movable cylinder which is slowly revolved by the action of the stream of hot water upon it. The only manual labor involved is that of placing the soiled clothing in the receptacle and filling the tub with a sufficient quantity of hot water. When the washing is completed the cylinder is lifted above the level of the water and the clothing run through an electric wringer attached to the top of the tub.

Boston Brown Bread.

Two cupfuls of buttermilk, one cupful of graham flour, one cupful of cornmeal, one-half cupful of white flour, one-half cupful of molasses, one teaspoonful of baking soda and one-half teaspoonful of salt. Mix all together and bake very slowly until done. Round tin molds sold specially for brown bread make attractive loaves. Lacking these, pound baking powder cans answer the purpose very nicely. Fill about two-thirds full. Two tablespoonfuls of melted butter add to the richness of this bread, but are not essential. Nuts or raisins may also be used in the mixture, as desired.

Oyster Chowder.

Cut one-half cupful of finely diced pork into a saucepan; fry slowly until slightly browned and the fat tried out; then add one pint of thinly sliced raw potatoes and cook until half done. Mix two level tablespoonfuls of cornstarch with one-fourth cupful of cold milk; add three cupfuls of scalded milk; then cook until the cornstarch is well done; season with salt and paprika. Wash, drain and free from bits of shells two cupfuls of small oysters, add to cooked mixture and allow to simmer until oysters ruffle; then add one tablespoonful of butter. Serve with crisp crackers.

Amber Marmalade.

Shave thin one each of lemon, orange and grapefruit, rejecting only seeds and cores. Measure and add three times as much water as there is of the fruit. Let stand over night; then boil ten minutes. Set aside for twenty-four hours; then add equal weight (or measure) of granulated sugar and boil briskly until it jellies, stirring only to prevent it sticking to the bottom of the dish. Pour into tumblers and seal with paraffin. This makes from ten to twelve glasses.

Oyster Soup.

Take one pint of oysters that are free from any particle of shell, put them in a colander to drain, add one-half pint of water to the liquor, then add one pint of boiling milk and the oysters. Let them cook one minute, or until they are well plumped. Season with butter and pepper and a little salt. Serve in hot soup plates with a crushed soda cracker in each one.

Rice, Spanish Style.

Cook until soft one cupful of rice. Drain and set aside. Cut four slices of bacon in strips and fry in a spider. When it is brown add one onion cut fine and cook without burning until tender. Into the same frying pan put one cupful of cooked tomatoes. Season with salt and red pepper to taste. Add the rice and cook down quite thick.

Restoring Dingy Towels.

Dingy towels may frequently be restored to normal whiteness by putting them in a kettle of cold water, adding white soap shavings and lemon juice and letting come slowly to a boil. Rinse in tepid water, then blue water and hang in the sun.

Ham Patties.

Chop fine about a pint of cold cooked ham, add three cupfuls of bread-crumbs, three beaten eggs and sweet milk to make a soft batter. Drop into gem pans, dot with butter, dust with crumbs and bake until nicely browned.

Brown Cookies.

One cupful brown sugar, one-half cupful butter and lard mixed, one egg, three tablespoonfuls sweet milk, one rounded teaspoonful ginger, one of soda. Mix stiff with flour and roll thin. Bake a nice brown.

Polishing Cut Glass.

Cut glass may be given a brilliant polish by washing first in hot suds, then dipping into cold water in which a handful of starch has dissolved. Allow glasses to drain before polishing with dry cloth.

"SANITO" COOKING UTENSILS

are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

RUSSIANS, SAYS VIENNA SENT BACK 75 MILES

By Steven Burnett.

Vienna, via Berlin and Amsterdam, Feb. 19.—Czernowitz, the capital of Bukowina, has been captured from the Russians, it was announced in an official report from the Austrian general staff given out here today. The Russians have retreated across the Pruth river.

In their offensive operations of the last three weeks the Austrian and German troops have forced the Russians back 75 miles and have themselves made a corresponding advance. With the Germanic allies steadily advancing in Bukowina and southeastern Galicia compelled to retreat from central, southern and western Galicia, Vienna military experts predict that the Russians will be comin.

The general staff's report follows:

"In Bukewina the enemy has been driven beyond the Pruth. Czernewitz was occupied by our troops Wednesday afternoon. The Russians departed from there in the direction of Novesialica.

"Novesielica is in Russia at the junction of the Pruth and Rasindka rivers."

"Stubborn fighting continues in the Carpathians. All the Russian attack have been beaten off with heavy losses to their troops.

"On the Carpathian front from Dukla pass to the vicinity of Wyszkow the situation is generally unchanged.

"Almost everywhere along this front there is heavy fighting. Numerous attacks atempted by the Russians against the German and Austrian position have been repulsed with heavy losses to the enemy. At one point we took 320 more prisoners.

"By our occupation of Kolomea the Russians lost an important vantage point.

"In East Galicia, south of the Dneister, the action of hostile reinforcements from the direction of Stanislau led yesterday to somewhat important fighting north of Nadworna and northwest of Kolomea.

"A battle is proceeding in Russian Poland. In western Galicia there have been only artillery duels and unimportant skirmishes."

GERMANS BOMBARD OWN CITY TO CATCH FRENCH

By Franklin P. Merrick.

Paris, Feb. 19.—The French army of invasion in Lorraine has been reinforced and has renewed its drive in the direction of Metz. One of the developments in the fighting in this district was the battel of Norroy, north of Pont-a-Mousson. The Germans, after being driven out of Norroy at the point of the bayonet, began to bombard the French positions in the town and severe havoc has been caused by the sheels.

Metz is one of the most strongly fortified cities on the German frontier, being surrounded by a triple circle of forts of almost impregnable strength. One of the objects of the French in pressing toward Metz is to cut the communication between the German stronghold and the German troops fighting on the heights of the Meuse.

The connonade of the German artillery at Nooroy, at Thann and at Cernay shows that the Kaiser's forces have no hesitation of shelling German towns and sities when they think that such a bombardment wil lresult in death of French soldiers.

The artillery duess along the northern end of the battle line continue unbroken. From the North sea to the Oise river about 2,000 big gusn are engaged on both sides.

The fighting between Rheims and the Argonne forest has been of greater intensiyt than the tensely worded bulletins of the FrFench war office indicated. In the struggle near Bausejour, north of the Rheims-Triaucourt highway, one trench changed hands seven times. In numerous insances Frenh and German soldiers were found deadlocked in each others arms. They had struggled to kill each other while consciousness was left in them. There was a bitter hand-to-hand struggle in the trenches north of the river Tourbe, a small, sluggish stream flowing in a northeasterly direction to the Aisne. There the soldiers fought with any weapon that came to hand, rifles, knives, swords, bayonets, clubs and even picks and shovels which had been used for trench building. Scores of dead bodies were found without any bullet wounds upon them.

North of Verdun, on the Meuse, the Germans are trying to win back some territory lost to the French. The battle is being carried on with artillery and small arms.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

By Henry L. Perry

Geneva, Switzerland, Feb. 19.—German aviators attempted to blow up the French forts at Belfort with bombs on Wednesday, but were driven off by the batteries there.

They later dropped three bombs on the railway station near Montbeliard. Several civilians and soldiers were killed, but small property damage was done.

In an attempt to destroy the Viellard iron works at Mesiry, which have been turned into a gun manufacturing plant, the German aircraft dropped sixty bombs, but none of them caused serious damage.

Paris, Feb. 19.—French successes in the Vosges mountains and in the Argonne region are announced in an official statement issued at the war office this afternoon. Two infantry attacks made by the Germans in the Vosges in an attempt to stop the French offensive directed at Metz were attempted.

In the Argonne four bomb throwers were captured. The conflict yesterday in the Aisne district and in the vicinity of Rheims was confined to an artillery duel.

Madrid, Feb. 19.—All Spanish vessels were notified by the government today to stop and deliver their papers as soon as they are signalled by a submarine in British or French waters. This precautionary measure is designed to prevent the sinking of Spanish ships by the Germans by mistake.

SNAPSHOTS AT NOTABLE PERSONS

F. P. Walsh, Chairman Industrial Commission.

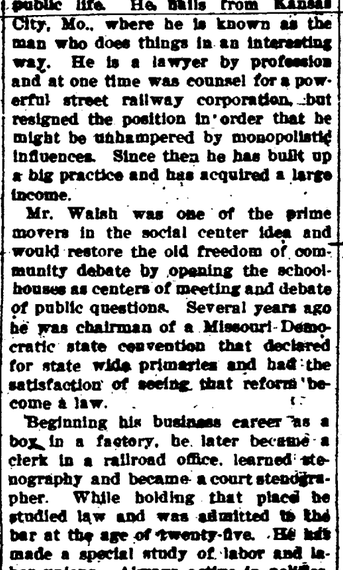
It has been said of Frank Patrick Walsh, chairman of the federal commission on industrial relations, that he is one of the most remarkable men in public life. He hails from Kansas City, Mo., where he is known as the man who does things in an interesting way. He is a lawyer by profession and at one time was counsel for a powerful street railway corporation, but resigned the position in order that he might be unhampered by monopolistic influences. Since then he has built up a big practice and has acquired a large income.

Mr. Walsh was one of the prime movers in the social center idea and would restore the old freedom of community debate by opening the schoolhouses as centers of meeting and debate of public questions. Several years ago he was chairman of a Missouri Democratic state convention that declared for state wide primaries and had the satisfaction of seeing that reform become a law.



Beginning his business career as a boy in a factory, he later became a clerk in a railroad office, learned stenography and became a court stenographer. While holding that place he studied law and was admitted to the bar at the age of twenty-five. He has made a special study of labor and labor unions. Always active in politics, Mr. Walsh never held an office except that of assistant city counselor by appointment; also he was chairman of the Kansas City civil service commission, which was an honorary position.

Since the commission began work a little over a year ago it has held sessions in nearly every large city in the country.

A South Dakota Statesman.

When the new senators, elected last November, assemble at the capitol to take the oath of office that admonishes and binds them to perform faithfully their duties as members of the national government some changes will be noted.

Last November when the first election news was disseminated it appeared that Coe I. Crawford, Republican, who for six years has represented the commonwealth of South Dakota, would succeed himself. The final tally of votes, however, showed that Ed S. Johnson, a Democrat, had won the honor. When Senator Crawford was elected six years ago he won by a big vote. Last election Ed Johnson beat him handily.

The new senator, by the way, is something of a character. He is a fundamental as well as a political Democrat. That is probably the reason he was chosen to represent South Dakota in the United States senate. He lives in Yankton and is universally and commonly known as Ed. No frills for Senator Ed S. Johnson. He desires to be known as just plain Ed, and so history in all probability will record him.

Kipling Tells English to Keep Quiet

By Herbert Temple.

London, Feb. 19.—Rudyard Kipling is heading a movement here to give the British soldiers more music. He believes this will not only cheer the troops but will aid recruiting.

At a meeting held in the Mansion House for the purpose of creating band sentiment, Mr. Kipling said:

"The most useful thing that a civilian can do in these busy days is to speak as little as possible, and if he feels moved to write, to confine his efforts to his check book. But this is an exception to that very sound rule. We do not know the present strength of the new armies. Even if we did it would not be necessary to make it public. But we may assume that there are several battalions in Great Britain which were not in existence at the end of last July, and some of them are in London. Nor is it any part of our national policy to explain how far these battalions are prepared for the work which is ahead of them. They were born quite rightly in silence, but that is no reason they should continue to walk in silence for the rest of their lives.

"Unfortunately up to the present most of them have been obliged to walk in silence or to no better accompaniment than whistles and concertinas and other meritorious but inadequate instruments of music with which they have provided themselves. In the beginning this did not matter so much. More urgent needs had to be met; but now that the new armies are what they are, we, who cannot assist them by joining their ranks, owe it to them to provide them with more worthy music for their help, their gratification and their honor.

"I am not a musician, so if I speak as a barbarian I must ask you and several gentlemen on the platform here to forgive me. From the lowest point of view a few drums and fifes in the battalion mean at least five extra miles in a route march, quite apart from the fact that they can swing a battalion back to quarters happy and composed in its mind, no matter how wet or tired its body may be. Even when there is no route marching the mere come and go, the roll and flourishing of drums and fifes around the barracks is as warming and cheering as the sight of a fire in a room.

"A band, not necessarily a full band, but a band of a dozen brasses and wood-winds, is immensely valuable in the district where men are billeted. It revives memories, it quickens association, it opens and unites the hearts of men more surely than any other agency. I wonder whether I should say this—the tunes that it employs and the words that go with tha ttune are sometimes very remote from heroism or devotion, but the magic and the compelling power in them, and it makes men's souls realize certain truths that their minds might doubt.

"A wise and sympathetic bandmaster—and the masters that I have met have been tha:—can lift a battalion out of depression, cheer it in sickness and steady and recall it to itself in times of almost unenduring stress.

"Our new armies have been badly served in this essential. Of all the admirable qualities which they have shown none is more wonderful than the spirit which has carried them through the laborious and distasteful groundwork of their calling without one note of music, except that which the same indomintable spirit provided out of their own heads. We have all seen them marching through the country, through the streets of London in absolute silence and the crowds through which they passed as silent as themselves for the lack of the one medium that could convey and glorify the thoughs that are in us all today.

"We are a tongue-tied brood at the best. The hands can declare on our behalf without shame and without shyness something of what we all feel and help us to reach a hand toward the men who have risen up to save us."

PRESS CRITICISES U. S. ATTITUDE THAT PERMITS SELLING GUNS TO ALLIES; BUT NO FOOD TO GERMANY

By FREDERICK WERNER

Berlin, Feb. 19, via Amsterdam.—Germany's reply to the United States is indorsed today by all the Berlin newspapers, which also continue their criticism of American "uneutrality." Thisi s based upon the pointed statement by the government that the allies are being furnished with weapons and munitions of war by American concerns.

Die Post isp articularly caustic in its comments on Americans, saying: "When something does not suit the Yankees' business they are accustomed to raising as a threatening bugaboo as great a sabre-rattling noise as possible. They calculate on the state thus alarmed creeping promptly to her heel. If this effect is not produced, if the threatened state pays no attention and shrows it can't be bluffed, the yelping pack of Yankees soon quiet down."

Count Von Reventlow, naval critic of the Tages Zeitung, shows more than his usual bitterness today. He says in his article that "America is trying to speak to Germany in an altogether unsuitable way. She has grown accustomed to dealing with Mexican pretenders."

TRAVEL BETWEEN ENGLAND AND CONTINENT TO BE STOPPED

Washington, Feb. 19.—Ambassador Page at London today cabled the State Department that the British Admiralty had suspended all travel between England and the Continent until further notice. The Ambassador's message merely told of the Admiralty's decision and gave no explanation of the action by the British authorities. The State Department attributed it to mean that Great Britain is greatly alarmed over the prospects of the German submarine campaign against British vessels, and it is believed to forecast the early issuance by England of a proclamation against Germany by retaliation.

JEWS URGE VETO OF BIBLE BILL

New York Rabbis Told School Measure Will Pass; Rest Hope With Whitman

New York, Feb. 19.—The Greiner-Talbot bill, requiring the reading of at least ten verses of the Bible daily in all public schools will become law unless Governor Whitman vetoes it, according to information that reached promiinent Jews in the city yesterday. Convinced that the Senate and the Assembly will pass the measure, increased efforts are being made to obtain the Governor's veto.

Rabbi Rudolph Grossman, president of the New York Board of Jewish Ministers, has called a meeting at Temple Emanu-El today, when all the habbis in New York will join in resolutions denouncing the bill. Rabbi M. H. Harris, president of the Eastern Council of Reform Rabbis, has arranged for the holding of a conference this week at which similar resolutions will be adopted.

In denouncing the bill Rabbi Grossman said yesterday:

"We have sent to Albany a protest against the bill in the name of the New York Board of Jewish Ministers and also in the name of the Eastern Council of Reform Rabbis. We are absolutely opposed to a compulsory reading of the Bible in the public schools. You cannot discriminate between the technical and sectarian passage in the Bible. You cannot draw the line."

Senator Greiner has made statements to the effect that State Commission of Education Finley was in favor of the bill. John H. Finnegan, First Assistant Commissioner of Education, denies that the department is in favor of the measure. He added that local education boards throughoue the State are opposed to the bill.

Assemblyman Scharlin, of the 8th District, which takes in the largest Jewish section in the city, called the bill an "outrage against the Constitutional rights of the citizens of the state." He said: "It is an opening attempt to bring in religion into the public schools. We cannot leave the reading of the Bible to be trusted to men of narrow minds."

The "Jewish Daily News," in its editorial columns yesterday said: "It seems as if the Assembly will take up the recommendation of the Committee on Education and pass the bill and that the measure will also go through the Senate. Our only hope as Jews is to appeal to Governor Whitman."

The Balance of Nature.

If everything born lived, the tenth generation of a single aphis would equal in actual weight some 1,000,000,000 men, each weighing some twenty stone, and all in ten days. The common house fly could produce 20,000,000 in a single season. Of 700 spider eggs laid by a common garden spider only two finally survive. In fifteen years each pair of birds would have increased to more than 2,000,000,000. Twice the average number of birds existing perish yearly. Even a pair of elephants in five centuries would become the progenitors of 15,000,000 elephants. Nature keeps down the numbers by starvation and other methods. —Pearson's.

Bad Taste as Seen in Japan.

Dr. Aston, the scholarly Japanese secretary to the British legation in Tokyo, summarized what Kenko, the fourteenth century writer of "Tsurezure Gusa," considered to be "bad taste," thus:

Too much furniture in one's living room.

Too many pens in a stand.

Too many Buddhas in a private shrine.

Too many words when men meet.

Too many books in a bookcase there can never be, nor can there be too much litter in a dust heap.—London Saturday Review.

A Rothschild Arsenal.

The Austrian Rothschilds are the only members of the family to manufacture armaments. As proprietor of the Wittkowitz iron works in Moravia, Baron Louis de Rothschild, the head of the Austrian branch, furnishes the army with metal for its guns and the navy with armor-plates. These huge works, the technical organization of which is perfect in every detail, have grown out of a small foundry purchased by the late Baron Albert de Rothschild. The development of the Austrian railway system is also closely connected with the Rothschilds. They financed the two largest lines in the empire—the north and south lines—and still hold a good portion of the shares.

BRITISH AWAIT COMING EVENTS WITH MISGIVINGS

BY HERBERT TEMPLE

London, Feb. 20.—England is isolated from the continent of Europe today as far as British shipping is concerned. No English ships have left east coast points since 6 o'clock last evening and it is probable that traffic will be held up indefinitely awaiting information from the admiralty that there is no further danger from German submarines.

Reports were received here this forenoon that a German submarine had been sighted off Southampton, headquarters of the transport service which has been conveying British troops to France, but the admiralty declined to affirm or deny the rumors.

British naval officers now in London believe that Germany has from fifteen to twenty submarines lurking off the English coast. None has yet attempted, however, to attack English warships.

While the admiralty has announced that the Norwegian tank steamer Balbridge which was crippled off Dover yesterday, was torpedoed, there is an inclination among naval experts to await an official examination of the vessel before accepting this statement. They believed that a torpedo striking the Balbridge which would have sunk instead of crippling her and generally accepted the first reports that she hit a mine. The ship is now on her way to London having left Walmer this morning in tow.

None of the crew of the Balbridge was lost. Preparations were made to launch her boats after she was crippled, but this was found unnecessary.

ENGLAND WILL NOT BROOK INTERFERENCE

BY HERBERT TEMPLE

London, Feb. 20.—All food consigned to Germany will be declared absolute contraband by the British governement. A proclamation to this effect will be issued within a very short time. All doubt as to the future action of Great Bsitain has been removed by the note transmitted to the United States which states that the cargo of the American steamer Wilhelmina will be disposed of by the action of a prize court.

The note is in effect an emphatic though courteous warning that England expects no interference from neutral nations with the policy that it has decided upon as a result of the German government taking control of all food within the Empire. This warning is conveyed in a paragraph of the note saying that the British government confidently expects "such action (a food embargo) will not be challenged on the part of neutral states by appeals to laws and usages of war whose validity rests on their forming an integral part of that system of international doctrine," which Germany, "boasts the liberty and intention to disregard."

That Germany bungled in handling the food situation is the assertion made by British experts in international law. They declare that her action in commandeering food and placing it under control of the government was one of the gravest errors she has made.

In this connection it is learned that the British government had already drawn up a proclamation placing an embargo upon food consigned to Germany when it received notification that Germany had altered her stand. This caused a delay in England's final action.

This phase of the situation is treated of in the note to the United States with a statement that notice has just been received of the repeal by Germany of Article 45 of the German decree. This article held that all grain and flour imported into Germany after January 31 should be delivered only to certain organizations under direct government control or to municipal authorities.

Great Britain claims that Article 45 was repealed by Germany in order to "render difficult the anticipated proceedings against the Wilhelmina," and that it will be necessary for ap rize court to determine how far the ostensible reversal by Germany affects imported food.

TEUTONS BUCKING LINE TO KEEP OUT NEW TROOPS

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK

Paris, Feb. 20.—For exactly twenty-three weeks northeastern France has rocked beneath the crash of battle. The mighty engagement, which now extends over a line stretching from the North sea to the Swiss frontier, began just twenty-three weeks ago today as the battle of the Aisne when the retreating hosts of General Alexander Von Kluck made their stand upon the heigthhs north of Soissons. Since that time the battle front has been extended over the territory of two more nations—Belgium and Germany and some of the fiercest fighting that has marked the course of this gigantic conflict has taken place in West Flanders and Alsace-Lorraine.

Official dispatches from the north state that the Germans have again resumed their attacks against the British forces lying near Ypres. It is believed in some quarters that this is the opening of a strong offisive movement by the Germans, who evidently hope to strike some hard blows while preventing the transfer of any more English troops from the British Isles to the coast of France by means of a submarine blockade.

An effort of the Germans to gain a position dominateing the pass of Bonhomme in the Vosges ended in failure. The Germans managed to get a foothold upon Hill No. 607, but were attacked by a company of French and put to flight. Although the French were outnumbered, the German forces engaged in this action were reservists, unused to the terrors of battle, and they fled before the rushes of the seasoned French veterans.

$50,000,000 FAIR OPENED TODAY

Inauspicious Weather Conditions the Only Drawback to Otherwise Brilliant Affair

San Francisco, Feb. 20.—The Panama-Pacific international exposition—San Francisco's $50,000,0000 fair—was opened to the world today.

Amid the booming of giant guns, the shrieking of tens of thousands of whistles, and the earsplitting din of noise making instruments of every description the 200 gates leading to the Wonder City were thrown open to the thousands upon thousands of persons who have been gathering here for the past ten days to take part in the opening ceremonies.

A few minutes after 8 o'clock when the gates opened, more than 50,000 San Franciscans formed in marching order on Van Ness avenue and marched to the exposition grounds. The procession was headed by Hiram W. Johnson, Governor of California, and James Rolph, jr., mayor of San Francisco. Following them in organized bodies were the members of civic organizations, fraternal orders, clubs and thousands of individual marchers—men, women and children.

The only thing that in any way marred the opening was the weather conditions. Ominous clouds hung over the city during the morning hours and threatened a downpour of rain.

SENATORS LOSE HOPE FOR SHIP PURCHASE BILL

Washington, Feb. 20.—Hope that the senate would again take up the ship purchase bill fight this session dwindled almost to the vanishing point today. The slow progress made on the appropriation bills, in the opinion of many members, forecasts the passing of the measure.

TENSITY IS NOT YET RELAXING

Great Britain's Attitude Considered In Washington As Quite Unfair Toward Neutrals

Washington, Feb. 20.—Great Britain's official declaration in defense of the use by British merchant ships of neutral flags today failed to change the international situation arising out of the war zone and flag question, in the opinion of administaration officials, except that it possibly opened the way for further exchange of diplomatic notes between the United States and England and the United States and Germany.

At the same time it was admitted that the blowing up by a mine of an American ship might bring the issue to a crisis, and the feeling of appresension still prevailed in official circles. The general opinion that no effort would be made by the Washington government to halt American commerce with Europe was unaltered and this taken in connection with German's disclaimer of responsibility for anything that might happen to neutral ships either from submarines or mines, served to keep up the anxiety.

There still was a wide range of views as to what the next move of this government would be as the White House and State department continued their policy of silence, but it was believed in some quarters that German's arguments so far had presented no excuse for attacks on ships flying neutral flags without first verifying their character. It was insisted that the rules of international law required that visit and search be employed in dealing with all merchant craft.

In the matter of the destruction of a ship by a mine it was pointed out such an attack while it doubtless would force this government to resort to strong measures, would compel the U. S. first to determine what nation was the offender as both Great Britain and Germany appea rto be sowing mines. The point was emphasized that in matters of international character much authority was vested in the President and it was believed that if any American ships were attacked his action would be guided largely by the circumstances in each case.

LUSITANIA ARRIVES

New York, Feb. 20.—With 432 passengers on board the Cunard liner Lusitania arrived today from Liverpool. She used the British flag all the way over and did not strike an hostile submarines. WASHINGTON FEARS ARRIVAL HERE OF FLOATING MINES

Germany Cannot Shift Full Responsibility for Damage Done American Shipping

Washington, Feb. 20.—The United States will not accept Germany's [illegible] of responsibility in sinking an American merchantman by German submarines if any are sunk. This will be made entirely clear in the reply to the German note sent by the United State, it was learned today. The note will not be belligerent in manner, it is stated, but will leave no doubt of the American position. This will be sent to the Foreign Office next week. It is now understood that Councillor Lansing is drafting it at the direction of President Wilson. One of the gravest factors in the situation is the threat of Germany to place floating mines in the shipping area surrounding Great Britain. These floating mines can be carried anywhere by the currents of the Atlantic, and quite conceivably might blow up a ship in American coast waters. It is stated by certain officials that their use is a clear violation of the Hague convention and it is likely that this may form a central feature as a reply to the American note..... ....

THREE DARDANELLE FORTS SILENCED BY TWO FLEETS

London, Feb. 20.—The Turkish forts defending the western entrance of the Dardanelle, upon the European side, have been silenced by the Anglo-FFrench fleets. This information is given out by the British admiralty today. Some of the warships were hit by shells from Turkish guns.

This supplementl information was given out by the British Admiralty: "Three of the Turkish forts being outarged by the guns of the warships did not reply. A portion of the battleship force was ordered inshore to engage the forts at closer range with a secondary armament. The allies' fleet was made up of British battleships, battlecruisers and a French squadron. The entire fleet was under command of Vice Admiral hockville Hamilton carden, whoe flagship, is the Indefatigable.

GERMANY WITHDRAWING TROOPS FROM POLAND

BL FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY

Petrograd, Feb. 20.—Complete collapse of the German campaign in northern Poland against the fortress of Novos Georgievsk, which prevents an attack upon Warsaw from the northwest, was predicted today by Russian military experts. It is announced at the war office that the strength of the German attacks on the Sierpec lock front has perceptibly increased. Further fighting is expected there, as the Germans, checked by the stubborn defensive and deep mud in the Augustowa region, are apparently withdrawing troops from the front south of the Niemen river and transferring them to northern Poland.

Well informed Russian observers assert that the German drive against theSierpec-Plock front and their attempts to reach Lomza and Ossowiec constitute the supreme effort of Field Marshal Von Hindenburg to capture Warsaw, the efforts to reach the Polish capital from the west having entirely failed.

German prisoners taken west of Warsaw are arriving here in great numbers.They assert that Emperor William himself forbade the sacrifice of any more troops in what he believed to be a hopeless attempt to smash through the Russian lines on the Bzura-Rawka front and forced Von Hindenburg to change his tactics.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

MARS ON THE JOB.

WE roll in the clover when one war is over and dream of perpetual peace. We holler, by golly! "Enough of this folly; the roar of the cannon must cease." We talk of disarming—the blessings of farming—the price of a dreadnought, and then—ker-plunk! goes the bubble; a little more trouble, the nations are at it again. There's no use in trying, in wailing or crying—a clever old schemer is Mars. He goes to bed sleeping with one optic peeping—he opens afresh the old scars. The white feathered pigeon will float like a widgeon on oil-poured waters of peace, till Mars, with his scowl, will scare the poor fowl and then take another long lease. He laughs at poor Andy, the Bonnie Scot dandy, and merrily chuckles at Bryan. He roars at their chatter; their talk doesn't matter—he sticks like the green ivy vine. We're cocksure to catch it, although the old hatchet is buried deep under the ground. You can't get him worried; wherever it's buried the old boy is hanging around. For nations will battle and muskets will rattle—the white dove of peace waxeth sore. But just for the present we've got to look pleasant and bow down to Mars, god of war.

Opinions

Washington the Farmer

Valuable lessons may nearly always be drawn from the study of great men's lives, even though for greatness there is no pattern. The birthday of George Washington is a fit occasion for considering what in his career might be most helpful and stimulating to us in our own smaller orbits. Tradition and time have made him remote from us; the very phrase, the Father of his Country, has transported him from the sphere of men who merely are, or hope to be, fathers of families. Yet he touched life at so many points and left such complete and revealing records of his homely interests that for the ordinary American not even Lincoln's life is more suggestive. Indeed, of the two, Washington comes more completely within the plain man's comprehension; in Lincoln there was more of the mystic; imagination played a larger part in his achievements than in Washington's.

The distinguished characteristic exemplified in Washington's private life is his love of the land. If you read his dairy and his Mount Vernon letters, with their full and explicit details of planting and harvesting, their records of experiment for increasing production and improving the quality of the crop, their indications of accurate knowledge and minute interest in the whole world of outdoors, you will feel ashamed to think how little you have done or are doing with your own small piece of land—you would hate to have George Washington come and look at it. You will be stimulated by reading those agricultural notes of his; you will want to do better work with your own place. And if you do not own a piece of land, reading his life and his letters will make you want to own one; it will give you the healthy interest in the soil, in birds, and dogs, and horses, that perhaps you lack. In his private capacity Washington was a great producer; some measure of his productive energy we should be glad to encourage in ourselves and in our sons.

Thinking of the dollar—trading, haggling, buying and selling—is inseparable from the life of the ordinary American, and it had its part in Washington's life, too; but he did not allow it to usurp the main place, even when he was leading the life of a private citizen. He loved the land, he tried to understand it and all that grew and flourished on it, and he tried to make it better and more fruitful.

He would have little patience with the slack farmers of today; he would have still less with those clerks and money changers whose thoughts never reach beyond the city streets, and whose dream of achievement is to own a city house and a limousine.

To read the quiet records of Washington's home life should be as invigorating to a thoughtful young man as to read the narratives of his campaigns—and even more useful.—Youth's Companion

A Pretense

In sandbagging the new White House Ship Purchase Bill through the House at 1:25 o'clock in the morning, after more than 14 hours of so-called debate, the Administration was making only a pretense of legislation. Legislation was not its purpose. What it intended to do was to exert a last coercion on the Senate. It will fail. What it may do in the extra session—if an extra session is impending because of the President's most unreasonable insistence on putting this bill ahead of the great supply bills—may be debated; but the Senate's temper is up at last and it will not be cowed, nor will it permit its ancient and excellent habit of deliberation to be changed for so slight and unexplained a reason. It may yield if an extra session is actually called; but the Sixty-third Congress will not have that weakness to apologize for at the bar of history. The apology, if it is ever made, will be made by the Sixty-fourth.—Times, N.Y.

HONESTY.

If honesty is the best policy in business it is also the best policy when one has done wrong and is confronted with the question whether he shall confess everything frankly or make excuses. A transparent excuse is worse than none at all.

AN UNUSUAL PROCEEDING

The minister of a church at Navarino who refused to allow Rev. Dr. F. W. Betts of Syracuse to conduct a funeral service in his church is being severely criticised for his action. It is, indeed, rare that so bigoted a type of the old time shool is found, and he should be regarded as a fossil in curiosity.

Rev. Broadway when requested by relatives to permit the Rev. Dr. Betts, a Universalist, to conduct services at the funeral of G. I. Rathbun of that place, refused point blank because of the Rev. Dr. Betts' faith. Rev. Broadway did not wish his parishioners to hear a minister of the Universalist faith which does not believe in hell.

This is an age when intelligent people everywhere are not content with waiting to come in contact with thinkers and speakers of opposite thought, but are seeking them out. It is not uncommon to find ministers introducing speakers from their pulpits who are of a different faith, and indeed, this is but the natural, the sincere way of living.

The Rev. Broadway evidently is turning the wheel of learning backwards rather than forward. However, it is a gladsome thing to know few ministers possess such an absence of breadth of vision. His actions have every evidence he must be possessed of a very puny faith in his own teachings or preachings, else he would not be frightened at the idea even of five Universalist ministers entering his church five abreast for five consecutive days. Much less then should he have locked the door on one lone man and a group of sorrowing American people with minds of their own.

The good people of Rev. Broadway's congregation would do well to resent such an insult upon their thinking capacity—or better yet, feel complimented that their pastor led them away lest they think.

THE STATE CONVENTION

Any attempt to abrogate the direct nomination of candidates for state office, such as the Republican Senators in conference have bound themselves to support, is most unwise. This state has tried the direct primary, and, barring imperfections in the law, is satisfied with it. To go back now and undo the law would be a case of reaction, and the party responsible for it would be certain to suffer. It would be the first time for any state in the country which has tried the direct primary in any degree to go backward.

If Senator Argetsinger's measure is intended to substitute a convention's nomination for the decision of the voters in the primary, it will be a complete defiance of the direct nomination theory. If it is intended, by the clumsy device of a pre-primary and a state convention, to furnish some agency for the consultation of party leaders on state candidacies before the primary, it is inept in its choice of machinery.

The Hinman-Green bill—the Hughes measure—recognized the desirability of such opportunity for consultation and conference, and furnished it by providing for a state committee meeting to designate a ticket of candidates, whose names should be submitted to the voters on the primary ballot along with any other nominations which groups of party members chose to make. That was a simple, workable scheme. The party committee—the "organization"—in each political unit had the duty to suggest a ticket before the primary, but the suggestion had to be ratified by the voters at the primary, in competition with other candidacies.

The Hughes plan is better than the convention plan. But it would be better still to give the present law an adequate try-out.—N. Y. Tribune.

Wonderful Open Air Theatre in the Heart of the Alps.

What is probably the most perfect pastoral theater in Europe is situated in the heart of the Alps—at Interlaken, in Switzerland. This unique "play house" is open to all the winds that blow, and its roof is formed—in the most favorable circumstances—by the blue canopy of the sky. It is not always thus, however, and it has not infrequently happened that the hue of the canopy has been less inviting and that players and spectators alike have experienced the interlude of a heavy downpour which was not in the program.

The open air theater at Interlaken is used for performances of Schiller's great drama, "William Tell," for which it is by nature admirably adapted. The stage is a rising meadow framed on three sides by dense woods of beech and pine, with a "backcloth" of grim, gray rock towering toward the sky beyond. Away to the right stretches a huge semi-circle of mountain peaks, 9,000 and 10,000 feet high, and behind the spectator tower the great peaks of the Bernese Oberland—the Jungfrau, Monch and Eiger, with their burden of eternal snows.

Nature in accommodating mood has provided the entrances and exits of this unique theater—passages in the woods through which gallop with thundering of hoofs on hard ground the mail clad troopers of the tyrannical governor. The cattle, goats and sheep which appear in the first scene—the return of the flocks and herds from the Alpine pastures—approach down the steep path in the woods on the right and are heard long before they are visible, the tinkling and clanging of their bells mingling harmoniously with the long drawn notes of the huge wooden Alpine horn, seven feet in length, and forming an appropriate overture.—Wide World Magazine.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

A Geography Party.

A geography party will prove especially interesting to school children and is easily planned. Procure a large map of the United States and paste it upon rather heavy cardboard. When this has thoroughly dried cut out each state and mark on the back with numbers, being careful not to number them according to their positions.

Before the arrival of the guests hide the states about the room in which the company is to be entertained.

When the guests arrive provide each with a small map and a pencil. They then follow whatever route they choose, the game being to find as many of the states as possible, and upon their own map mark the number which they believe to correspond. If Ohio is marked "10," as they find it or think they find it, they mark "10" upon the state in their small map which they think must be Ohio and then continue the search, marking each state which they find in the same way.

The task is not an easy one, as several of the states closely resemble each other in outline, and the one correctly placing the largest number of numerals is entitled to the prize.

It is of course unnecessary to say that on the small map the states are outlined, but not named. The maps are easily made by the use of transfer paper, or they can be drawn upon any thin paper by holding a small map against a windowpane and drawing from this upon any thin paper the outlines of the states.

Think For Yourself.

Thinking for yourself is not necessarily differing to any startling extent from your companions. Two pupils in school may work out a problem by entirely different methods, but if they work correctly they reach the same result. That is as it should be, but if the two students sit side by side and the one copies down the other's figures mechanically that is what too often happens. Make a habit of thinking. Don't accept conclusions ready made. Don't satisfy your mind with predigested food. This should not make you singular among your fellows, for if your method of reasoning is correct it will bring you, in the vast majority of cases, to the same conclusions held by the world at large. The difference will be in you. Thinking for yourself instead of accepting the results of others' thoughts makes the same difference to you that it does to the student who works his problem independently instead of copying it from his classmate's paper. Be ambitious to be something more than a convenient receptacle for other people's ideas.

The Game of Pig.

There must be three or more players for this game, each with a broom handle or a stick about that size and length. Dig a hole about six inches in diameter and if there are four players dig three other ones about five feet from the first and about seven feet apart. One player must be the pig driver—the pig is a tin can—who tries to knock the pig into the central hole with his stick, while the others try to knock the pig away. The driver tries to put his stick into the hole of another player while the other is knocking the pig away. If he does this the owner of the hole must give it up and be the driver himself. Or, if he knocks the can into the central hole, all the players have to change holes, giving him a chance for one. This is a very interesting game if there are five or six players.—Memphis Commercial Appeal.

Exhibit of Fishes.

The New York Aquarium society recently held an exhibit at the American Museum of Natural History and showed little fishes of all shapes and colors, the largest scarcely five inches in length. Fishes from the water troughs of India, the fish ponds of China and Japan, the tepid swamps of South America, tributaries of the Kongo and the Nile were exhibited as well as the goldfish and small wild fish from temperate zones. Among the more interesting are the butterfly fish and the mouth breeder, which carries its eggs in its mouth, both from Africa; the armored catfish from tropical America and the fighting fish.

Thanks Boy Scouts.

A letter has been received by the council of the Boy Scouts of America from Sir Robert S. S. Baden-Powell, chief scout of the Boy Scouts of England, acknowledging the presentation of thanks medals by the American organization through United States Ambassador Page to the British boy scouts who assisted American war refugees.

A Wishing Ring.

I wish I had
A wishing ring
That fairies
Gave to me.
So I could wish
For everything
That I would Like to be.

I'd want a castle
And some curls
(Instead of Braids to wear),
For I just think
That little girls
Look sweet
In curly hair!

And I just know
The very thing
To make it
All come true
—I wish I had

All hail, to thee, George Washington, the father of our land. All reverence and esteem to thee. At thy brave name we stand. We hope that parents will instil and let the trait hold sway. Your thoughtful, quiet, childhood's pose in our young boys today. We choose the study of thy life our beings to inspire; and as we read of thee there strikes a patriotic fire. And when conventions meet again to choose the noble men to deal with history, war or strife, our thoughts fly back again to that brave man who conquered strife by skill and judgment great. We'll ne'r grow cold, for thoughts of thee revive and animate. And to our land we dedicate, through thee, our purest thought. If we all honor truth as thee, what wonders can be wrought.

For truth is truth, since God is God;
And truth the day must win;
To doubt, would be disloyality;
To falter, would be sin.

ROUND ABOUT

Cardinal Gibbons said Thursday: "Think for a moment what this war means, if you can—I cannot. When one life is lost on board ship all the country is startled. When the Titanic sank with more than 1,000 of its passengers the world was horrified. That was a thing that occurred only once. Loss of life in great numbers occurs only once in a while. But now, in this greatest war of the world, a thousand, nay, ten thousand, lives are being sacrified every hour the war continues."

At a secret conference of Republican Senators in Albany Thursday, it was determined, it is reported, to undertake a general revision of the Election Law. One definite suggestion made at the conference has in view a change in the primary law to permit the name of a party candidate against whom there is no opposition to go on the direct primary ballot without the formality of obtaining petitions. Under the plan conteniplated by the Republicans, an unofficial State convention is to be held to recommend candidates for States offices. At the conference it was suggested that the law should be amended to provide that if after two weeks no opposition candidates for such nominations have appeared, the names of the candidates suggested by the convention should be placed on the primary ballot automatically. Other amendments contemplate doing away with all rural election boards and simplifying the election machinery generally along lines already suggested by Governor Whitman.

A meter, placed on the pipe line by the Government, would indicate the flow of beer and the tax to be paid.

In a trial warble recently, John McCormack demonstrated to a shivering audience of musical critics that he could make his voice heard through out the new Yale Bowl. He visited the vast football inclosure to prove that it was practicable to give an outdoor concert to an audience of 71,000 people. The critics were convinced. It is now expected that an outdoor oratorio will be given in the Bowl about June 1 by some of the most prominent American soloists.

General Joffre, the French Commander in Chief, continues to carry out his settled policy of weeding out those in the higher ranks of the army in favor of younger and more active men. Recently the appointment list, made public by him contained the names of nine generals of division who have been placed on the resevre list and succeeded by men promoted to brigadier generalships.

The Balance of Nature.

If everything born lived, the tenth generation of a single aphis would equal in actual weight some 1,000,000,000 men, each weighing some twenty stone, and all in ten days. The common house fly could produce 20,000,000 in a single season. Of 700 spider eggs laid by a common garden spider only two finally survive. In fifteen years each pair of birds would have increased to more than 2,000,000,000. Twice the average number of birds existing perish yearly. Even a pair of elephants in five centuries would become the progenitors of 15,000,000 elephants. Nature keeps down the numbers by starvation and other methods. —Pearson's.

Neighborhood Courtesy.

"Some years ago we moved from our home town—the town we were born and reared in and where all our friends and kinsfolk lived," said the neighborly woman. "The new town was a railroad and river town. I thought we would soon have neighbors and in time friends. I did get acquainted soon with one woman, but she moved away. She recommended some other friends of hers to me. I intended to call, but never did, my boys, my work and my home keeping me busy.

"After awhile I grew to be like the people around me, tending to my own business and making no calls. But I was lonely. One of my children came down with scarlet fever. We were quarantined. It made little difference, as no one had the habit of coming to our house, anyhow, or I of going to other people's houses. The third day of the quarantine I heard a step in the back yard and rushed to the door, thinking the deliveryman had not seen the sign.

"It was my nearest neighbor. She had a dish of something in her hand. 'For the sick little fellow,' she said. 'I'm sorry I can't come in and give it to him myself.' I stood looking at her amazed. 'I hope you are not offended,' she said.

"Offended! She never can know how good she looked to me.

"We became friends after that. Through her I met other neighbors. We never tire of doing good turns for each other. It has made life a thousand times more worth living for me."

Solving a Social Problem.

A young matron who had asked six friends to luncheon suddenly found herself without a maid. She was equal to the occasion, however, and on their arrival said nothing to her guests about the very important missing member of her household.

Before going to the dining room each guest was handed a ribbon bow, to which was attached a safety pin, and told to find her place by matching the colors at the places. It did not take long to appropriate the pretty aprons with the strings of ribbon to match each bow. They were made of large colored handkerchiefs, and the point forming the bib was pinned up by the safety pin and bow.

Anchovy canapes formed the first course. After they were eaten the hostess turned to the guest at her right and said, "Look under your plate and do what the card says." And the little card bore this request, "Please remove the plates and bring in the soup." Amid much merriment this was accomplished, the bouillon being already on a tray over the gas, which was turned low. Another guest removed the cups and brought in the next course. Minute directions were on each card. The hostess did not find it necessary to leave the table, and the absence of the maid was voted to have made the party a great success. Every one declared that the aprons were the most acceptable of souvenirs.

Etiquette of Mourning.

A widow who intends to leave off her mourning in due time wears a crape bonnet and a long veil and crape trimmed gowns a year. After this dull black, suitably relieved by white and lilac touches, should be worn for a year. When two years have passed colors may be worn.

As long as the crape veil and crape trimmed gowns are worn a woman should refrain from participation in all social gayeties. After six months a widow may attend concerts and matinee performances at the theater. When the crape trimmings are put off small dinners and luncheons and night performances at the theater or opera may be attended.

Of course these are conventional rules, which she may follow if she wishes. They are not adhered to by every one, for people are becoming more liberal about mourning and are following their own inclinations regarding the matter rather than doing as some one else has done under similar circumstances.

Lenten Entertaining.

Lent this year begins on Feb. 17. While the forty days which follow Ash Wednesday will be more or less generally observed as a time for fasting, still many informal luncheons and dinners will be given, and the ever old but not less interesting "Lenten sewing circles" will hold a conspicuous place among the entertainments of the paschal season. Knitting bees will also be popular.

The day immediately preceding Ash Wednesday, known as Shrove Tuesday or Pancake Tuesday, has been observed as a day of feasting since A. D. 250. In some sections of our country the carnival of the Mardi Gras is held at this time, and much merrymaking ensues, in which the pancake or shrove cake plays an important part.

Fine Supposition.

"There comes the coal," thought the fireplace. "I suppose I ought to be grateful."

Miss McCalmont, Efficiency Expert In Regard to Hospitals.

MISS MABEL M'CALMONT.

Miss Mabel E. McCalmont is a hospital consultant. She has a home in Brooklyn, a registration address in California, and she works wherever her commissions take her. She received her diploma as a trained nurse from the National Homeopathic hospital in Washington. Later she became superintendent of St. Luke's hospital in Baltimore. It was while she was in Baltimore that she met a director in Philippine health affairs, who persuaded her to go to Manila.

In 1908 she took the civil service examination and became superintendent of the Civil hospital in Manila, as well as supervising nurse of the board of health. This work led to the position of chief of the division of hospital construction and equipment. She returned to New York in 1911. She had seen—what numbers of the public are constantly hearing referred to—the waste of money and materials and the inefficient management in hospitals. Having been "on the inside," she knew just how difficult a perfect organization is to effect. Thus her plan: Why not create the position of one, with practical experience, whose time may be devoted entirely to solving the problems of hospitals effectively?

Thus it was she originated the profession of which she is the sole feminine member, that of consulting expert in regard to hospitals. She has frequently given advice of the highest value in the case of hospitals seeking to secure more economical and efficient service.

Points for Mothers

Children's Friendships.

The friendships that children form have a far deeper influence over their lives than many parents realize.

It is not an easy matter to influence children in the formation of friendships, for even at the beginning that seems to be a matter of personal selection. There never yet was a child who did not hate the children whom his parents talked about as particularly desirable for companions. If let alone he might have chosen them of his own accord for playmates, but not after hearing too much about their virtues.

Friendship, like love, can never be created by talking too much about it. There are other ways, however, of influencing both boys and girls, and a little tact on the mother's part will accomplish wonders. It is not always pleasant or convenient to entertain a horde of children when only one playmate would be more desirable, but the old saying that there is safety in numbers is never better exemplified than in the bringing up of children. There are more quarrels, to be sure, but sensitive edges are rubbed off when exposed to the good natured but quite honest criticism of many playmates.

It is the guiding hand on the reins, the light touch that controls the most spirited horses. They respond quickly to firmness, but resent being pulled in with a jerk. A word here, a suggestion there, little plans for children's happiness that may cause many a sacrifice of comfort on the parents' part, have often nipped in the bud undesirable associations and ended, before they were really well started, friendships that would bring no lasting happiness.

The Model Nursemaid.

The children's nursemaid should be neat and have a good disposition. Irritable manners and harshness have no place in the nursery, for they soon make the little ones sullen and bad tempered. By her influence as well as by their play and games she should make them feel the value of good manners, unselfishness and perseverance.

She should insist on obedience from even the smallest child. This once learned will give the nursery an air of sunshine and contentment it cannot otherwise have. Still she must realise that good discipline does not mean tyranny and hard discipline. Punishment should only be used as a means of last resource. Then it should be to deprive the child of some simple pleasure. Any severe punishment should be left to the parents.

It is nurse's business to see that the nursery is supplied with toys to amuse the children so there may be toys for all, but it is equally important to let the children feel that the toys are owned in common. She should direct their play and games, but let all the children pick up their toys and put them away after they have finished with them.

In her personal habits and appearance she should be neat and clean. Her work is clean, so there is no excuse for dirty hands and soiled aprons.

When Lessons Tire the Child.

"The child does not pay attention," the teacher says of the little boy or girl in the kindergarten, whose mind seems to be upon the thing that is being done and yet cannot accomplish it. But it very often happens that the child is not capable of concentrating attention for very long upon one thing. He watches the play or the drawing very carefully for a certain length of time; then he wearies through no fault of his own, but because of brain fatigue, and his eyes wander to the shape of the pencil he is holding or possibly to the waving leaves of the tree outside the window.

Mothers who study their children carefully can tell just how long they can hold the attention of the child without wearying it, but the teacher, having so many to think about, may not realise that she is tiring the child with the lesson.

Many children that are voted stupid by parents or children are only slow in their mental processes and require great patience and care in the first years in the nursery or school. Let the lesson be a little longer each day, and as soon as the child seems tired change to something else.

"Decimation."

A popular error which recurs with unvarying regularity whenever military engagements are reported is the use of the word "decimated" to imply a crushing defeat or something approaching annihilation. Yet, as a moment's consideration of the real meaning of the word suffices to show, the word is so used quite erroneously. "Decimation" means the destruction of one-tenth part of the force involved, and the loss of one in ten, though sufficiently serious, certainly does not mean anything like that wholesale destruction usually meant when "decimation" is talked of. Losses of one in three or one in four have been sustained by forces which still maintained their cohesion and discipline.—Westminster Gazette.

E. V. UNDERWOOD TALKS FARMING

Says That If Right Methods Were Used Vacant Oswego Co. Farms Would Be Things of the Past

Last night the Chamber of Commerce listened to a most interesting talk on the work of the County Farm Bureau Association setting forth clearly just what has been done, what is being done and what greater results can be accomplished by organized co-operation from all sections of the county.

E. Victor Underwood, manager of the Oswego County Farm Bureau, addressed a large gathering in the meeting room of the Chamber of Commerce and, after finishing his most thorough treatise on farm management in all its details, outlining a plan for a complete organization among those interested in farming, dairying in its various branches, answered all inquiries from the members who were seeking information.

Mr. Underwood divided his theme into two parts: First, a preliminary program to introduce farm bureau work through the farm bureau manager; Second, a permanent program through the manager of farm bureaus by means of a system of projects.

In the first instance, all personal requests for information will be gladly furnished by the farm bureau manager relative to farm management, farm organization. The use of lime, fertilizer, tests, establishment of alfalfa, seed treatment and testing, orchard renovation, balancing rations, poultry improvement, drainage needs and methods and through organization, with the aid of local committeemen. Co-operation should be established for the spreading of information statistics, etc., between the granges and other local and county-wide organizations, by means of field demonstrations, by means of farmers' institutes, extention schools, schoolhouse meetings; "The Farmers' Exchange," a four-page pamphlet containing lists of prices and dealers in fertilizers and latest farm implements, boys and girls clubs, corn centests, study of statistics and careful observation, orderly arrangement of this material in publications, showing tests, their success or failures in different sections of the country.

In the second part of Mr. Underwood's program he divided his system into primary problems and secondary problems. Under the first head he spoke at length on the methods of increasing the profitableness of farming, stating there must first be an analysis of business and a farm management survey made to stop leaks and emphasize strong features; measure of by known standards the productions from various sources and, as a result, dispensing with all non-paying productions.

Under the head of saving money Mr. Underwood showed by co-operative methods of buying fertilizer the cots to individuals would be greatly lessened. Then by a knowledge of the needs of different sections better distribution would be had and a lower cost of production could be brought about by several different methods carefully worked out with the aid of the cultivation of Vetch.

A further aid to better returns would be accomplished by standardizing crop-development, resulting in a better quality and grade.

Mr. Underwood is a strong advocate of teaching farming in schools which he states will be soon brought about with the co-operation of the district superintendent, but the greatest aid to farm development would be had through the establishment and extension of the farm bureau association which, in turn, would co-operate with granges, farmers' clubs and all other organizations interested in agricultural pursuits.

Lime in the form of calcium carbonate is a essential constituent of fertile soils. Alfalfa, clover, peas, beans and other crops can hardly be grown with success unless lime is present. The results from the addition of lime do not come with a rush, but slowly and uniformly. It does not take the place of manure and fertilizer, but aids them in producing better yields. Whether or not you need to apply lime on your particular farm, can be answered by yourself. Is your clover a failure? Do you find mossa in your meadows and pastures? Are you troubled with sorrel, paintbrush or strawberries? If so, you have a fairly good assurance that lime is needed on your farm, or at least, on certain fields of your farm.

It is unfortunate that we have so many misleading names applied to lime. For practical purposes there are three forms used—calcium carbonate (ground limestone), quick lime (oxide, burned lime, lump lime), and hydrated (slaked lime).

Calcium carbonate is the form which is more often used. It occurs in the for mof limestone, shells or marl and should contain at least 90 per cent of calcium carbonate.

Quick lime or freshly burned lime is made by heating raw stone in a kiln. It is the most concentrated form of lime obtainable. The application to the soil of fershh burned lime, after slaking has taken place(has perhaps an advantage in that it is in a finer state or condition than the other forms of lime, and consequently comes in more intimate contact with the soils.

Hydrated or slaked lime is prepared by treating quick lime with about one-third its weight of water. In as much as it is already slaked it is less disagreeable to handle than burned lime.

There is a relation between the amounts of these various forms which should he used, to get the same results.

2000 pounds Ground limestone.
1200 pounds of quick lime.

As soon as the hydrated or oxide forms are added, they readily change over into the carbonate form, so that we are confronted with the question: which is the most economical way to replenish the soil with calcium carbonate.

The prices of the different forms on the basis of actual calcium or calcium and magnesium present, must be taken into account in deciding calcium carbonate.

"Seven years' experience at the Ohio Station, eleven years' at Maryland, together with much other evidence from this and from foreign countries, have shown that finely pulverized limestone gives at least as good results and often better than its equivalent in burned lime. These experiments cover soils of various types, containing much and little organic matter and they deal with small, medium and large applications of lime." (Leaflet X, Geneva Station.)

Moderate applications made often are more valuable than larger applications. In this country two tons per acre is a fair average when ground limestone is used. In preparing land for alfalfa an application of more than two tons undoubtedly will be required. Until the time when clover shows a noral growth an application of a ton or two of lime during the crop rotation will be found to be an advantage.

Ground limestone can be spread on the soil at any time of the year without injury to the crops. It is a good plan to distribute it on plowed land and harrow it. It is well to apply ahead of nurse crop that is used for clover.

Wood ashes and lime should not be mixed with yard manure, bone tankage, fish scrapi dried blood, sulphate of ammonia, acid phosphate, nor with mixtures containing these substances.

The lecture was one which was listened to with very earnest attention and those who heard Mr. Underwood last night must surely agree with him in his plan for securing the organized co-operation of every farmer in the county.

The fee for membership in the Farm Bureau Association will be but one dollar, half of which will be used for printing and distributing the information and data collected from time to time in different parts of the county, which will show the cheaper and best plans to purchase fertilizer and all the newest and best farm implements on the market.

The Chamber of Commerce thanked Mr. Underwood for his pleasant and instructive talk and adjourned to partake of a toothsome luncheon prepared for the members and their guests.

One thousand eight hundred and forty people have attended these meetings, one hundred and nine men, women and children have professed conversion. Thirty-four men have been given lodging, supper and breakfast and often some necessary garments given. One hundred and eighty-six pairs of shoes have been given out. Five hundred garments have been given to men, women and children. In food, 600 loaves of bread, hundreds of fried cakes and cookies, 22 packages of rolled oats, 3 pounds of tea, 5 pounds of coffee, 10 pounds of rice, 10 pounds of sugar, peck of beans, 38 cans of fruit, 2 cases of can corn and beans, 20 bushels of potatoes, 6 bushels of onions, 72 cabbages, 2 bushel turnips, 2 bushels carrots, 10 bushels apples, $11 has been paid out for transportation and medical purposes. In bedding, 7 quilts, 2 pair of blankets, 8 pillow cases, 5 sheets and many other incidentals too numerous to mention. Ensign and Mrs. Fitzgerald thank the farmers who were so liberal at Christmas time in donating potatoes and farm produce and also all kind friends who have assisted in the labor of love.

MENDING NETS AND LIVES

Broken Nets Are Like Broken Lives, Which God Can Mend.

At the First Methodist church in Owego Thursday evening the Rev. H. D. Holmes of this city preached on Mending Nets and Lives He took his text from the Gospel account of St. Simon and St. Andrew, sons of Zebedee, who were called from mending nets to become "fishers of men." as Apostles of the Son of God. Mr. Holmes said that broken nets are like broken lives. Wear would have a bad effect on both. Temptations that assail the soul are like the rocks that rend the nets. The grace of God is the power that mends the lives.-Times

GOVERNOR WANTS LAW CHANGED

Comptroller Travis and the Governor May Be Drawn Into Strained Relations

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, Feb. 20.—Those who are following legislation at Albany are wondering when the measuring of lances for the joust upon the bill to reorganize the State tax commission, will take place between Governor Whitman and State Comptroller Travis. The bill in question is now in committee and will remain there until after the hearing which will be held next week.

There are many who predict that Comptroller Travis will be successful in his endeavor to prevent that portion of the bill which divides the jurisdiction as regards the corporation tax bureau of the comptroller, from being incorporated in the bill. Those who take this view of the impending fight point out that being versed in legislative matters, having been a senator, Comptroller Travis will be able to aid his own cause. They say in addition, that the friends that the comptroller still has in both houses may outweigh the desires of the Governor, who by virtue of his high office is supposed to be above individual interest in any measure.

While it is known that Governor Whitman desires that the bill reorganizing the State tax commission shall pass without any amendment, it has not been hinted that his interest in the bill is based upon anything but the belief that the corporation tax bureau be divided. The executive has taken his stand for the bill as drawn and is convinced that he should not alter his original viewpoint. The insinuation that he is trying to create places for friends or is acting in a stubborn manner in consequence, is not credited here.

The reason why Comptroller Travis has taken so determined a stand upon the reorganization bill is explained as indicating his belief that the amendment, so far as it effects his department, would be decidely unwise.

The section of the bill under consideration to which he so strenuously objects, divides the present corporation tax bureau into two bureaus; one having to do with assessments under the proposed new board of State tax commissioners, the other leaving in the hands of the comptroller the collecting of the taxes. This, the comptroller claims will cause a duplication and in some instances, particularly where appeals are taken from assessments, will increase the amount of work three or four times over.

As a matter of fact, only one position is affected by the proposed plan, that of the corporation tax commissioner in New York city. The main objection of the comptroller is based upon his belief that the governor's plan would large ly increase the cost of collecting the revenue. He holds that no evidence has as yet been produced to show that better results would be obtained by adopting the contemplated division, but maintains that such a system would bring about many complications in the collection of about $11,000.000 of indirect taxes which the corporation bureau now gathers in each year. These taxes are of no direct interest to local taxing districts, he points out.

That comptroller Travis will eventually succeed in having the tax bill amended appears certain. If amended and vetoed,it will be all in the game of politics he is playing, his close friends say. All he wishes is to prevent the bill under consideration from passing in its orginal form.

Governor Whitman has not said that he would approve the bill should it come to him containing the amendment Comptroller Travis desires. Neither has he said he would vetoe it. Meanwhile the fight continues.

THE GREATEST YET

The 6-reel Keystone comedy, "Tillie's Punctured Romance," featuring Marie Dressler, Charlie Chaplin and Mabel Normand more than filled all advance promises as a laugh producer. Absolutely nothing of its equal has ever been attempted in the movie line. Elaborate settings used in its production add attractiveness and are pleasing to the eye. The plot while simple in nature is just anough to bring to an uproarious climax ehis meritorious offering. Tonight until 10.30 for the last time.

Johannesburg, South Africa, Feb. 20.—The circumstances attending the desertion of Lieutenant Col. Maritz, one of the leaders of the rebellious Boers, were published today in the Transvaal Leader. Albert Miller, quartermaster of the Union defense forces, who furnished the information, said that last October Maritz massed 600 soldiers of the Union defense force on the frontier of German Southwest Africa where ther were a number of German troops. Maritz then renounced his allegiance to Great Britain and ordered all his men to proclaim their loyalty to Germany. All execpt ten deserted to the German forces. The ten loyalists were arrested but afterward released.

GERMANS CONFIRM LOSS OF AIRCRAFT

BL FREDERICK WERNER

Berlin, Feb. 20.—via Amsterdam—The German amiralty announced today that German submarines had successfully opened their campaign against the merchant shipping of France and England in retaliation for Great Britain's policy of starvation. It stated that the submarine U-16 had been successful in its operations in the English Channel, but gace no details as to what it had accomplished. The U-16 is one of the ship vessels whose construction was begun in 1911-12. They were constructed in secret and are believed to be the most powerful underwater craft in the world.

An official announcement that the Zeppelin ships L-3 and L-4 had been lost in a storm off the coast of Denmark caused some dismay today in the camp of the military experts who have long advocated the use of the Zeppelins. They asserted, however, that the fact that no Zeppelins have been lost as a result of battles in the ir had dmonstrated the worth of these machines.

GERMANS CAPTURE TWO STRONG FRENCH TOWNS

Berlin by wireless, Feb. 20.—The capture of two towns in the Vosges mountains by the Germans is a strong offensive movement against the French troops southwest of Colmar, is announced in an official report from the German General Staff issued here this afternoon. The towns taken by the Germans are Metzral and Sondermath. Hard fighting is in progress at other points in the Vosges mountains where the Germans have stormed heights held by their foes. The German General Staff admits a slight setback for the Germans in the Champagne region in France where the French have succeeded in entering some of the German advanced trenches. In northern Poland, it says, the Russians have been driven back from several points.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Paris, Feb. 20.—Attempts by the Germans to capture French trenches to the east of Ypres resulted in heavy losses to the attacking force, according to this afternoons 'official statement by the War Office. The Germans brought up heavy forces for this attack and charged with the bayonet. Their attack was repulsed, however, the French artillery shelling the reserves who supported the assault. The Germans have apparently brought up new artillery to replace that which has been worn out by constant use in Flanders, They bombarded Wains, a suburb of Nieuport directly on the coast yesterday. There was great artillery activity from the Lys to the Oise along the Aisne and in the region of Berry-au-Bac. It is now known that the losses of the enemy in Champagne in the last few days has been considerable.

Gibraltar, Feb. 20.—The Spanish fleet sailed from Algeciras for Carthagena today. A torpedoeboat flotilla will be kept on patrol duty along the Riff coast of Morocco.

Copenhagen, Feb. 20.—Representative of Denmark, Norway and Sweden met in conference here today to decide what action should be taken on Germany's proposal that Scandanavian warships convey merchantmen of the three countries through the war zone.

The final decision is to be reached regardless of any position taken by the United States.

In the meantime tehere has been no interruption in Danish sea traffic. Ships are leaving for England as usual.

Copenhagen, Feb. 20.—The Norwegian steamer Bjorke struck a mine in the North sea today while bound from Leith to Narstow with a cargo of coal, and foundered. The crew was saved.

Swansea, Wales, Feb. 20.—The German submarine blockade has had practically no effect upon shipping at this port.Everything was normal today.

Koenigsberg, Ger., Feb. 20, via Berlin and Amsterdam.—Thirty-one men were killed and more than fifty injured yesterday when an explosion wrecked the Juditten gas works near ehere.

Amsterdam, FFeb. 20.—A Berlin dispatch printed by an Amsterdam newspaper today declares that the Germans in their great victory in East Prussia, captured Russian funds of 250,000 roubles ($127,000).

Make Sure of Your Obligations

Washington, Feb. 20.—If you do not own property valued at $715.48 you are being cheated out of your rights. The Census Bureau today announced that all property in the United States in 1912 subject to ad valorem taxation had an assessed valuation of $69,452,936,109, an increase in ten years of $34,114,619,221, or 96.5 per cent.

The net debt of the federal and State government and all minor civil divisions in U. S. in 1913 was $4,850,460,713, or $49.97 per capita.

The national government's share was $1,028,564,055, or $10.59 per capita and that of the States $45,942,305 or $3.57 for each person.

BOLI MURDER CLUE POSSIBLE

Chief Dyer of Fulton and District Attorney Culkin of Oswego Are Working on New Clues

The many residents of Fulton, Phoenix and surrounding districts will be surprised to learn that a new clue in the Boli murder case has set the entire police force of Oswego county at work.

Today District Attorney Culkins is in New Haven following up that end of the case, while Chief Dyer is spreading the drag net about Fulton.

The story, as published in last night's Times (Oswego), that a confession has been made by a woman who at one time was believed to have some connection with the murder is without foundation.

John and Peter Boli were hermits, livining near Phoenix, and after the brutal murder that took place October, 1908, the remains were taken to Hake's undertaking parlors, at Phoenix for an autopsy which was performed by Dr. Cusick.

Sheriff Taff and under Sheriff Ed. Vickery worked on the case immediately and followed clues that lead as far as Lyons, but nothing tangible was obtained at that time. For many years the mysterious case has baffled the police authorities of Oswego and Onondaga counties, and despite the fact that a reward of $1,000 was offered by the Board of Supervisors, still clue was obtainable.

Several suspects were arrested, but upon investigation it was shown that they were not in the vicinity at the time of the murder. Amongst these w.r. Wm. Bullard; but Bullard proved an alibi by showing that he was attending a county fair at Kane, Pa., at the time.

Another was Frank Nalley, of Syracuse, an insurance agent, well known throughout this vicinity. Nally was held all winter but was finally discharged by the grand jury because of of evidence.

The murder attracted the attention of the entire State, and and for many weeks the best known officers of the State worked day and night to bring the guilty parties to justice but without avail.

At present nothing definite can be learned at the office of the Chief, nor from District Attorney Culkin, who states that just now there is nothing to say except that he is investigating certain clues.

U. S. Marines Quell Ardor of Rebels

Cape Haitiien, Haiti, Feb. 20.—The march of the revolutionary forces of General Guillaume against Port-au-Prince has been stopped as the result of the landing of 400 United States marines in the capital. General Monplaisir, the government commander, was dropped near St. Marc, while trying to swim to a Haitien gunboat following the defeat of his troops. Four United States warships are in the harbor at Port-au-Prince and the situation there is described as critical.

AHEARN WANTS TO KEEP HIS JOB

Governor Whitman Would Abolish the Office of State Fire Marshall; Official May Remain

Albany, Jan. 8.—Now that the Republican party has come back into power in the state of New York, consistent efforts are to be made by Republican newspapers to advocate Republicanism. On January 14, there is to be a meeting in Albany of the Republican Editorial Association of the state of New York, of which John A. Sleicher of New York, editor of Judge and Leslie's Weekly, is president. When this meeting is held, ways and means of presenting to the people complete details of the efforts of the Republican party to improve conditions in the state, through the medium of state newspapers, will be considered.

Charles H. Betts, editor of the Lyons Republican and a former president of the association, in speaking of the proposed plan of the Republican editors said:

"We believe that the people should receive the truth concerning the deliberations of the legislature. The best way of giving them the truth is through the newspapers. Republican editors will see to it that worthy action on the part of the legislators is not slighted or distorted by Democratic treatment in the press.

Senator Alfred J. Gilschrist of the Tenth Kings district, is receiving much homage about the Capitol from strangers who take him for William Barnes, the Republican leader. Senator Gilchrist is a heavier man physically than Barnes and his complexion is a trifle more ruddy, nevertheless his facial resemblance to the Old Guard Chief is striking. His nose is acquiline and he has the same set jaw, smooth face and wealth of dark hair.

"I have frequently been taken for Barnes," said Gilchrist to a friend, after a stranger had bowed to him with the salutation: "How do you do, Mr. Barnes."

"You may look like him, but I'd rather do business with Barnes than you just now," replied the friend.

For the first time since the Capitol fire, the Assembly Chamber is dressed in fresh apparel. When the members of the lower house took their seats this year, they found a new carpet, reupholstered desks and chairs, sand blasted walls from which all traces of the fire had been removed, new hangings and new chandeliers. The spacious chamber is most inviting in its new trimmings.

Memorial exercises in honor of the late Edwin A. Merrit, Jr., for years Republican leader of the lower house and for one session Speaker, will attract to the state Capitol hundreds of his former friends, former associates and public officials. The exercises have been set for January 20, and will be held in the hall where his voice was so often raised in debate and in concise explanation of entangled bits of legislation.

The passing of Merritt has caused a void in the ranks of the Republican party which will be difficult to fill. There are few members of the house who were members when the dead legislator first made his appearance at the Capitol.

State Fire Marshal Thomas F. Ahearn is hoping that his department will be permitted to remain a part of the state government in spite of the recommendation of Governor Whitman that it be abolished. The State Fire Marshal is of the opinion that when the debate is had upon the forth coming bill to legislate him out of office, that he can convince the legislators that his department has been of vital importance in relation to the installation of a safety device on build ings under his jurisdiction. Some provision may be made for the retention of Marshal Ahearn, whose record as a firefighter in New York is a notable one. It is generally conceded by legislators however, that the department, with its wealth of lucrative positions, must be abolished.

The election of Ernest Fay, as clerk of the Senate to succeed Patrick E. McCabe, was accomplished without the nomination of a Democratic candidate, a precedent in legislative caucuses here. Fay has served as assistant clerk for more than a score of years.

French Offensive Gains In Flanders

Paris, Jan. 8.—Capture by French troops of Burnhaupt-Le-Haut, only 8 miles southwest of Mulhausen, is announced in an official statement issued here this afternoon. This statement also says the French troops have assumed their offensive in Flanders and have gained some ground in Lombartzyde. At other points on the long battle front extending from Switzerland to the North sea coast the French have advanced their trenches.

They are now complete masters of Hill No. 425, they having driven the Germans from their positionhs The statement also admits that the Germans had a slight success in the Argonne region in blowing up some trenches and forcing the French back 20 yards.

Insult to Italian Flag Not Regretted

Rome, Jan. 8.—Secret messages sent to the Italian Ambassador at Constantinople today contained orders to leave the Turk capital at 6 p. m. Saturday as well as all members of the embassy's staff and turn its affairs over to Ambassador Morgenthau. Turkey has been given till Saturday evening to apologize for the British consul in the Italian consulate at Podeiga, but it is believed here that Italy's demand, including the salute to the flag, is not regretted. The rupture of diplomatic relations between Turkey and Italy is certain, diplomats say, and this will be followed by forcible action.

INSTALLATION MONDAY.

Neahtawanta Lodge Will Give Another Exposition of Second Degree Work.

Owing to the inability of the District Deputy to perform a trio of duties on one evening—that of installing officers in three lodges of Odd Fellows—a special meeting of Neahtawanta Lodge will be held Monday evening, Jan. 11. At the same meeting there will be rehearsal of the second degree, this in preparation for a trip to Phoenix Tuesday evening, where that degree will be given to two Fulton candidates.

In this connection, it is pretty well known by Odd Fellows in this and surrounding places, that Neahtawanta Lodge is famous for its ability to present in an effective manner the second degree of the order; Phoenix is noted for the excellence of its work in administering the first degree, and Oswego's lodge for that of the final or third degree.

MAY FIGHT IN CUBA.

New York, Jan. 8.—Juarez, Mex., or Havana, Cuba, will be the scene of the heavy weight championship fight between Jack Johnson and Jess Willard. The selection probably will be made this afternoon and the indications are that Billy Gibson will succeed in his efforts to have the battle held in Havana.

Voting in Spain.

Voting in Spain is held to be a duty to the community, not merely a privilege of the individual, and neglect of civic obligations carries its own penalty. Male adults of legal age and under seventy, with the exception of priests, notaries and judges, are required to vote in municipal elections. Failure to cast a ballot is punishable by having one's name published as censure for neglect, by having taxes increased 2 per cent, by suffering a deduction of 1 per cent in salary if employed in the public service and for the second offense the loss of right to hold elective or appointive office. — Exchange.

First English Newspaper.

The first newspaper printed in the English language, with its old English type and its quaint account of events in foreign countries, was a pamphlet issued in 1621. Its title, "Corrant or Nevves from Italie, Germanie, France, and other places," is as curious as its contents. For many years it had been supposed that no copy of the Corrant was in existence, but there is in London a copy of this interesting document which is carefully preserved.—London Mail.

ADMINISTRATION DISCOURAGED

Prospects For Immediate Peace Seem Remote; Villa Wants to Push Forward

Washington, Jan. 8.—Administration officials today plainly were disturbed over conditions in Mexico and they have begun to worry about the apparent failure of their plans for the pacification of the Republic at least for the month.

Prompted by conflicting reports from various sources as to the conditions throughout the country, the state department has summoned to Washington Paul Canova, its special agent at Mexico City, to give at first hand an account of the real situation in the troubled country.

With Carranza's army reported within sixty miles of the Mexican capital and with the Naco situation still far from settled officials and diplomats agree that prospects for immediate peace are remote.

Reports from the border today that General Villa had determined to join his forces in Sonora and make an attempt to drive General Hill and his Carranza troops out of Naco added to the uneasiness of administration officials. It was reported that Villa has decided that this is the only way to bring the border fighting to an end, but military men here could not see how the American part of the town and the residents on this side of the line could escape the perils of such an assault.

Ottoman Officials Panic Stricken

London, Jan. 8.—A news agency dispatch from Sofia states that the Turkish government is panic stricken and is preparing to go to Adrianople. Several trains with steam up are awaiting at Stamboul, in the English section of the city, to relieve any emergencies, should quick transportation of officials and records out of the city be necessary. All funds of the treasury have been placed in barrels that can be put on these trains on short notice. According to the dispatch the authorities at Constantinople fear not only attacks from the outside, but are in constant alarm over internal disorders, several of which have been nipped within the last few days.

Mexican Crisis Is Now Imminent

El Paso, Tex., Jan. 8.—Relations between provisional President Guiteras of Mexico and almost all the diplomats in Mexico City have been broken off according to advices received here today. These advices report that Guitteras has insulted many of the envoys at the capital and that they refuse to have any further relations with his government. This news quickly following reports from Mexico City that Guitteras is practically a prisoner of the guards chosen by Gen. Villa indicates that a crisis is approaching in the southern Republic.

TURKEY LOSES VESSELS.

Paris, Jan. 8.—The French foreign office announced today that the Turkish cruiser Midjidieh has been badly damaged and that two Turkish transports have been sunk by a Russian warship and a mine. This statement was issued:

"A Turkish transport was sunk by a mine on Jan. 2 in the Bosphorus. On Jan. 5 another transport convoyed by the cruiser Midjidieh was sunk in the Black sea, between Sinope and Tregizond. Two Russian war ships attacked the Midjidieh and badly damaged her."

WEATHER FORECAST.

The weather for today moderate, tonight much colder, and Saturday fair.

PRESIDENT WILSON PLANS SEVEN WEEKS' TRIP.

Washington, Jan. 8. — President Wilson expects his trip to the Panama canal, the San Diego and the San Francisco expositions and his speaking tour afterward to last from March 5 to May 1. He told callers today he planned to be away from Washington for that period, unless business necessitates his presence here.

An invitation to include the Pacific Northwest states in the itinerary was extended to the President today. He promised to take in those states if possible.

The trees have been moved to the vacant lot in the rear of the City Hall and at least a half-dozen men will be put at work.

The trees are expected to produce a considerable quantity of wood, which will be sold after it has been cut up by the men. The money will be used to help the poor of the city.

PANAMA-PACIFIC EXPOSITION OPENED TODAY

Washington, D. C., Feb. 20.—Standing amid a group of California "native sons," President Wilson pressed an electric button placed exactly in the center of the Capitol rotunda today and thus sent a telegraphic flash to the Golden Gate which formally opened the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

Besides the President many diplomatists, legislators and other prominent men were guests of the Californias. By an ingenious plan, devised by Frederic Bulkeley Hyde, the head of the Washington-California, the flash which the President sent to the exposition at the same time lights up in electric flame the message "The Exposition is now open" in many cities throughout the country and this messagewas also sent to all the territories and possessions of the United States including Alaska, the Philippines, Porto Rico,H awaii, Samoa, Guam and the Panama zone.

Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, is in San Francisco at the opening ceremonies today as the personal representative of the President. The choice of Mr. Lane is a happy one, since he is a Californian by adoption, if not by birth, and is popular on the coast.

The Washington group of Californians have on their schedule several celebrations in honor of the opening of the exposition including a big banquet.

San Francisco, Feb. 20.—A flash from President Wilson in Washington today formally opened the Panama-Pacific Exposition, the greatest world's fair of all time.

Not only the magnificent two and a half mile stretch of the exposition grounds along the bay, but the whole of San Francisco is gay with flags and other elaborate decorations, while the crowds in the streets are unprecedented.

All California is giving itself up to a gala day. Throughout the State great enthusiasm is manifest. If the feeling of the Coast proves contagious to the rest of the country the success of California's big undertaking is assured.

There are elaborate ceremonies today in honor of the opening of the exposition. These include much speech-making and several large banquets.

Visitors to the exposition grounds who had seen several other world's fairs were unanimous in praising the efforts of the promoters. Never before has a great exposition opened with so few details of the promoters. Never before has a great exposition opened with so few details of the complete whole still awaiting the hand of the carpenter and the decorator.

As to the effect of the war on the fair, it will be felt only slightly, in the direction of diminished European attendance and European exhibitions. But these will be more than compensated for b ythe increased attendance from the Western World. The great army of tourists which every summer pours across the Atlantic, Californians know, will march this year to the Golden Gate for its holidays.

The exposition consists of 250 buildings in three main groups lying in garden plots and sunken pools. It stretches in a glittering band half a mile wide along the southern shore of San Francisco bay.

It has cost $50,000,000. Of this $12,500,000 was raised by this city, $5,000,000 by the State of California, and $2,500,000 by the fifty-eight California counties. The foreign and State participation represents $10,000,000, the amusement zone $10,000,000 and the outlay by individual exhibitors another $10,000,000.

There are 80,000 individual exhibitors represented, with displays ranged along forty-seven miles of exhibit aisles in eleven of the main exhibit palaces. There are other miles of exhibit in the buildings of the States and the pavillions of the nations and a nine-acre horticultural garden, apart from the five across in the Palace of horticulture.

Forty-five foreign nations are represented, many of them having increased their space since the war. Forty-three of the States and territories of the United States are represented. Of the nations, participation ranges from the $1,700,000 appropriation of the Argentina Republic to $50,000. Of the State outside of California New York leads with approximately $1,000,000, including the appropriation of New York city for a building and participation. Twenty-eight States and territories have official buildings. Twenty-four foreign nations have pavilions. In addition to the representation is that of the fifty-eight counties of California, all of which have individual displays of products in the $2,000,000 California building, the largest structure on the grounds apart from the group of main exhibit palaces.

Enterin gthrough the main gates at Scott street one is immediately within the South Gardens, 900 feet in length, 500 feet in width, and three lagoons and rich spaces of pansies in bloom. There are 200,000 pansy plants blooming now. In two months they will give way to 200,000 daffodils and two months later to jonquils, and so on, until the end of the exposition.

To the east, and commanding that end of the gardens is Festival Hall where the greatest pipe organ in the world is installed. Here will center the intellectual musical and dramatic life of the fair. Its inspiring dome, 152 feet in diameter and 185 feet in height, the Palace of Horticulture commands the west side of the gardens. The dome is after the mosque of the Sultan Ahmed I, at Constantinople.

To the immediate right of the entrance gates is the Press Building, where the correspondents will have headquarters and the San Francisco Press Club will maintain open house. To the immediate right is the Young Women's Christian Association building.

Facing the exposition gates as one enters is the Fountain of Energy in the middle lagoon, symbolizing the power and the force that made possible the building of the Panama Canal.

Across the South Gardens are the Tower of Jewels and the facades of four of the main exhibit palaces, linked, with the four that face north and San Francisco bay, into a unit by colonnades. To the extreme right is the Palace of Varied Industries and next to it the Palace of Manufacture, the Court of Flowers separating the two. Then comes the lofty Tower of Jewels, with an acre of ground at its base, rising in successively diminishing platforms richly embellished with sculpture. To the left of the Tower is the Palace of Liberal Arts and then the Palace of Education and Social welfare, the Court of Palms separating these two. The approaches to the courts of Palms and Flowers are marked by Italian flowers, 200 feet in height.

By the tower gate under the Tower of Jewels, is the southern approach to the Court of the Universe in a general way recalling the Plaza of St. Peter's.The North approach to this court is commanded by the Column of Progress, 160 feet in height, symbolizing the march of civilization.

Two other large courts are in this main group of eight exhibit palaces; the Court of Abundance, lavish with Oriental suggestion, and the Court of the Four seasons.

The total length of this superb group of exhibit palaces east and west is 1,756 feet and north and south 1,235 feet.

East of the main group, and across the Avenue of Progress, is the Palace of Machinery, 968 feet in length, 368 feet in width.

West of the main group, across the Avenue of Administration and the Fine Arts lagoon, is the Palace of Fine Arts, its eleven hundred feet of Graeco-Roman colonnades curving around the foliaged shore of the lagoon. An unexpected result of the European war has been to bring her priceless masterpieces from old world galleries for safe keeping from the possibility of invading armies.

These latter two, with the eight of the "walled city" group and the Horticultural Palace, comprise the group of eleven main buildings.

The third or western group of buildings constitutes the amusement zone, one hundred structures flanking both sides of a 3,000 foot avenue. Of 7,000 appliacnts for space only one hundred were selected and each concessionarire was compelled to pass a test in order that the newest and swiftest features of amusement and instruction that the premier showmen of the world could present would be offered. First in concession space is Frederick Thompson, of Luna Park and the Hippodrome, with seventeen acres of toyland for grown ups. Next Comes Kumeto Kushibiki, with Japan Beautiful—a transplanted bit of Nippon. Kushibiki has been for twenty-five years managing Japanese concessions and exhibits at world fairs. There is a '49 camp in charge of the only "Sam" Davis with Mark Twain's original cabin from the Tuolumne and a Jimtown daily with "Sam" as editor. The Panama Canal—about which the entire celebration centers—is shown, covering an acre of ground and complete even to the last pump and valve.

YACHT CLUB AS NAVAL RESERVES

Training Ship May Be Brought to Oswego for Cruising the Coming Summer

Word comes from Oswego that Commodore James Parker of the Yacht club there is about to launch a movement for the organization of an Oswego naval reserve corps. Speaker Sweet will be appealed to in behalf of the project, and it is said that Congressman Mott looks upon the idea with favor. The Congressman has suggested to Commodore Parker that the Fulton Yacht club should be made a valuable and efficient adjunct to the organization.

Commander E. N. Walbridge, Ensign W G. Graham, of Rochester, and Lieutenant Harrison J. Angley, of Watertown, will be invited to come here at the proper time as representatives of the Fourth Battalion of the Naval Reserves.

The gentlemen named have recently attended the naval-militia conference in Washington, at which more than forty naval militiamen were present from all parts of the United States.

Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels was the principal speaker at the dinner held on Tuesday evening.

At the meeting it was recommended that the uniform of the officers and men of the naval militia conform exactly to the United States Navy regulations This is practically effective in New York State now, and will undoubtedly be effective in other States soon, as it needs only the signature of Secretary Daniels and the Governor of each State to make the order effective in that State.

The organization of a naval reserve corps in Oswego has been agitated for a number of years and if Commodore Parker is successful a training ship for Oswego will be obtained and a cruise of the lake will be made the coming season.

MARY ANTIN TO SPEAK IIN SYRACUSE

Known Throughout Country for Writings and for Work Among Immigrants of Race in Slums.

Syracuse, Feb. 20.—Mary Antin, known throughout this country as the author of "The Promised Land" and "The Foreigner Who Knocks at Your Door," will deliver a lecture in this city March 13, under the auspices of the Women's Alliance of May Memorial church. The lecture will be given in the auditorium of the church and will be open to the public.

Miss Antin, in private life, is Mrs. Grabau, wife of Prof. Amadeus W. Grabau of Columbia University. The story of her life is one of the most interesting ever told to the public. The work which she has accomplished among the Jewish immigrants in this country is known the world over among sociological workers.

The books which Miss Antin has written and which have been circulated widely throughout the country, incorporate the experiences of her life from the time she left her home in Polotzk, Russia, in 1894, with her parents. She was born in 1881, and until her possibilities were recognized by Edward Everett Hale and his daughter in Boston, life had held little prospect of a great future for the girl.

The family came from Russia to Boston and found a home on the North Side, the section of immigrants and poor people. There the girl lived with little anticipation of what the future was to bring. Mr. Hale and his daughter found her in these surroundings and recognized in her the character and mind which would develop her into a great woman.

Miss Antin went to the public schools of Boston and later graduated from the Latin School for Girls there. She then entered the Teachers College at Columbia University and was graduated from there in 1904. While a student in the college in 1901 she was married to Prof. Grabau.

The first literary work published by Miss Antin was "From Polotzk to Boston," in which she details the persecutions which her family and others of their race met in their attempt to escape from Russia and make a home in "the promised land."

About Sports Generally

By Frank G. Menke

New York, Feb. 20.—Chocolate caramels have supplanted liquids as a refreshing influence during the meetings of the National League magnates.

Ain't it astonishing?

The newspaper gang ambled into the magnates' room in the Waldorf immediately after the magnates had concluded their recent meeting. Did they see empty beer and champagne bottles here, there and everywhere? Nope! All they saw was a box labeled "chocolates" containing three uneaten caramels.

"What the——" began the scribes in chorus when they were interrupted by Mrs. Helen Hathaway Britton, owner of the St. Louis Cardinals, and the only big league woman magnate in this wide, wide world.

"Sh! boys; remember that a lady is present," laughed Mrs. Britton, who emerged from a corner in the room where she and her husband had been talking with President Tener.

"Righto, Mrs. Britton," responded the gang. "But these here chocolates—how the dickens did they get into this room—the last place in the world where they might be expected to be?"

"I brought them," was the answer. "I had to pass up lunch so as to get to this meeting on time and so I brought along the box of chocolates so that I might eat some during the meeting to keep from starving."

"Bring a full box?" asked one intrepid explorer for news.

Yes—two pounds."

"Ah—er—did you—that is—the two pounds—you didn't——

Mrs. Britton broke into the hesitating question with a ripple of laughter.

"Dear me, no; I didn't eat the whole two pounds," she said "I had help. There are the helpers," and Mrs. Britton's arm described a circle that included all the magnates, Secretary John Heydler and President Tener.

"Yes, they did help me eat those chocolates," asserted Mrs. Britton, seeing a look of incredulity on the faces of the reporter folks." And do you know that those men ate those chocolates with as much gusto as a high school girl. They just ate and ate and ate—and it did my heart good to see those great big grown men enjoying candy so much."

"Didn't do the supply of chocolates much good," hazarded a reporter, peering into the near empty box. "Only about three of the chocolates left. What's the matter with them?"

"Why, nothing," answered Mrs. Britton.

"How comes it that they left those three?" asked the reporter.

Mrs. Britton looked at the reporter quizzically for a moment—and then a great light dawned on her.

"Oh, they left those for you," she laughed. "Take them—they're awfully good."

"They are," answered the scribe, munching two at one time. "Taste like $1 per pound variety."

Looking in the direction of Secretary Heydler, the reporter yelled:

"Hey, John, is this chocolate diet going to be a regular thing hereafter?"

"Sure," answered Heydler." The league voted in favor of it—that is, it voted unofficially."

Far From Tipperary

A Story of Love and War
By
Gustav Kobbe

Copyright, by Gustav Kobbe.

THERE was a volley. Bullets whistled past me. At the same moment Cambrai stumbled and fell.

Slipping off his back, I quickly rolled into a clump of bushes that fringed the woods through which the road led, and called to my mount:—

"Dead horse! Dead horse!"

Cambrai not only was my faithful charger—he also was one of my greatest pets. I had taught him tricks enough to make a circus horse of him had I wanted to. At my command he settled himself down in the slight depression beside the road and lay perfectly still.

The ruse worked. The pursuing cavalry, having seen my mount fall, and sure their carbines had brought me down with it, swept on.

"Live horse!" Cambrai and I rose with deliberation from our undignified predicament—he by the roadside, I in the clump of bushes. I gave a low call. He quietly walked into the woods and waited just beyond my place of concealment. Extricating myself from the tangle of undergrowth, I took him by the bridle and led him further into the forest.

All day long my command, supported by a small force of artillery, had been fighting a rear guard action, charging the van of the pursuing enemy, driving it back on its supports, then retreating to the shelter of our guns, which had utilized the breathing spell to withdraw to another position. This manoeuvre we had repeated again and again. That we had not been drawn into a trap and annihilated, that each time we had been able to fall back in good order upon our guns, I attributed to the fact that the enemy felt the effect of the savage fighting involved by the steady drive he had been making for the last four days on our left wing even more than we, though that seemed impossible. For, if ever a horse and a human being were tired Cambrai and I were. But there was one thing to keep us buoyed up. By rights we should have been killed twenty times over. Here we were, however, alive and without a scratch.

That was luck. Was it at an end now? We were stragglers, Cambrai and I. Just how we had been cut off I shall not attempt to explain in detail. Under a hail of shot and shell we of the rear guard held on till word came that our main force had been able to effect its retirement upon the position where it proposed to make its next stand. At that moment the enemy launched at us a fresh squadron of cavalry, evidently newly arrived reinforcements, and we were obliged to scatter. But though many must have been cut off like myself, and even a gun or two captured, the loss was slight compared with what we had accomplished day after day in enabling our army to retire with line unbroken to new positions, there to hold fast for another day against the steady pounding of an enemy vastly superior in numbers and constantly endeavoring to envelop us in a turning movement.

I was so tired that I could have lain down and gone to sleep before penetrating beyond the fringe of the forest, and my horse was ready to join me. But I wanted to go far enough in to avoid all chance of capture. Fatigued as I knew the enemy to be, I was sure such fresh troops as he had been able to bring up would be sent forward to be followed after a few hours' rest by those who had been fighting. All roads, even the small wooded one from which I had rolled into the bushes, might be utilized. It was well to place a safe distance between it and myself.

As I proceeded deeper into the woods I observed ahead of me a faint glow. Stopping and carefully watching it, I made up my mind it was a small fire, possibly a couple of hundred yards from where I stood. Cambrai was uneasy. A moment later, with a recklessness that seemed unaccountable in one so wise, he let out a whinny that was answered immediately. Instantly in the glow ahead shadowy forms sprang to their feet. Were they of friend or foe? The quicker I made sure the better.

Pursing my lips I whistled. "It's a Long Way to Tipperary," the song that had swept like wildfire through our ranks and had become the marching song of the British army and had even been caught up by the French.

Back came the answer, the same tune, so that I knew the men ahead of me to be friends. Again I whistled; this time the recall, with a twist peculiar to my regiment.

Back came the signal, with the same peculiar twist. It was evident that among those who had been alarmed by Cambrai's vocal exercise there was an officer or trooper of the Fifth Dragoons. I now could see silhouettes of horses under the trees. It is my belief that Cambrai recognized them.

I hurried forward. As I came within the light of the fire a voice called out, "Major Carden!" Opposite me I saw Lieutenant Norman Heathcote, of my squadron. "Break ranks!" I ordered; for the men, weary though they must have been, had formed in line as soon as they discovered who I was. One of them took charge of Cambrai, which was the pride of the squadron, while I joined Heathcote.

Good soldier that he was, he had kept together the small body of men with whom he had escaped into the shelter of the forest, and, what was more, had seen to it that they had retained their mounts. It was not every man for himself, but the platoon for one another. There were rations in their haversacks. He had pooled them and figured out for how many days they would provide subsistence in case it was necessary to remain in hiding. In other ways he had proved himself a careful, resourceful officer, and there was no question of his gallantry in the field. A mere handful of men, some twenty perhaps, had escaped with him. But they were fully armed and equipped and with their mounts formed the nucleus of a small, mobile force that had stood the test of the severest kind of fighting—the fighting that most sorely tries men's souls, because it is not undertaken with the hope of achieving victory, but to save a retirement from being turned into a rout. They also were men of my own squadron; men between whom and myself there existed a rapport that would make them follow me over the brink of a precipice.

These facts inspired me with a plan which so thrilled me that, had I not been completely worn out, I would have communicated it then and there to Heathcote. As it was, I nibbled at an army biscuit, made sure that Cambrai had been cared for, then threw myself down for the first good long sleep I had had since the Germans began their drive through Belgium into France.

II.

No one who like myself had been through the South African war could fail to appreciate what can be accomplished by a small, highly mobile force suddenly appearing anywhere from nowhere and with equal suddenness disappearing into the unknown. It was the thought that the stragglers from the rear guard who had escaped into the forest, and of whom there probably were more than the handful Heathcote had succeeded in keeping together, might be organized into such a force that thrilled me. I would be the ranking officer, and as such in command of this little force. Here I would be absolutely independent and acting wholly on my own initiative, because thrown wholly on my own resources. How could such a situation fail to appeal to an officer of cavalry, a branch of the service in which quick thought and quicker action are imperative? Moreover, I would be utilizing the services of men who ordinarily would be ineffective because mere stragglers. By just so much I would be reinforcing British arms. Weary though I was, I could not refrain from thoughts like these as through heavy eyelids I saw the glow of the fire grow dimmer.

When next I opened my eyes daylight was seeping through the branches overhead. Heathcote and some of the men already were awake. They appeared to be listening to some distant sound, which I, too, began to catch. It was a faint but prolonged and continuous rumble, and it came from a direction opposite to that from which I had entered the woods. Again I had to thank the luck that had taken me through the war, for I knew at once the meaning of that ominous sound.

Evidently we lay in a part of the forest between the wooded road by which I had made my escape and a main highway that pierced the woods on the east and along which the enemy's artillery train was now proceeding. For to an ear trained in actual campaigning that long growl, like the roll of thunder very far off, meant wheels of guns and caissons. It was likely that the enemy, in his effort to encompass the turning and destruction of the Allies' left flank, would give his weary forces but little time to recuperate before sending them in pursuit of an army he believed already half shattered by his assaults with overwhelming numbers. Troops doubtless had been going forward all night. Even now their van might be deploying against the position on which our wing of the army had retired. What a drive! What troops they were to be able to stand the wearing pace at which it was being made! But what troops also were ours to be able to retire in good order before the numbers that were being hurled against them! Marvellous as was the force of that great forward movement, even more so was the science of that great retreat. That it would finally wear out the enemy, and that in turn our own army would be in a position to assume the offensive—of that I had not the shadow of a doubt. When that moment came my small but mobile force could strike wherever opportunity offered and thus add to the enemy's discomfiture.

All this, however, was idle speculation now. It was time to act, not to sit and think; not to take it for granted that something was going to happen, but to be prepared for whatever turn affairs might take. But if I could not be sure of the future, one thing I was sure of—the temper of my men. They were troopers of a crack regiment of British cavalry. Not they the ones, however disheartening constant retirement under merciless pounding, to prefer loafing around in a woods to what I had to propose.

Was my idea received with enthusiasm? That would hardly describe the sensation that I saw mounting in the expression on the men's faces, in their heightened coloring, in the growing restlessness that pervaded them as they stood before me and harkened to the plan I was unfolding to the accompaniment of the distant rumble of moving artillery not our own. Sloughed off in a moment was all sense of the adverse fortunes of the war so far as it had gone. The lieutenant, the troopers, they seemed but to be waiting for my last word to leap into the saddle. If I had been thrilled, they were ecstatic, too eager and needing to be restrained. I believe if I had ordered Heathcote to take a squad of men and attack the guns rumbling along the east he would have dashed off on the adventure, though it could only have meant annihilation. Such was the stuff they were made of. How glorious to lead men like that!

Raising a restraining hand, I explained further that if there were other soldiers in the forest who had been cut off from their commands I wanted to add them to mine. It was likely that the sound of the passing artillery train had driven them well into the woods, so that we should be able to discover them and bring them in without having to look far for them. I left the organizing of the searching parties to Heathcote and watched with much satisfaction the cheerful spirit with which they moved off to their work, however prosaic an opening of operations it may have seemed to them.

What I wanted was a force that would be large enough, but not unwieldy. I had to bear in mind the need of keeping in concealment most of the time in a forest. Too large a number would betray our presence. There would be passing of supply and ammunition trains, or bodies of the enemy's troops brought up in reserve; all the activity that goes on in the rear of an army obliged to keep open its lines of communication. To harass this line and delay its forward movement by suddenly falling upon and attacking any part of it seemed to me wholly feasible. But my force had to be one that could vanish as quickly as it appeared.

From this point of view the round-up made by the parties I had sent out was most successful. To be as brief as possible, I will say that eventually I found myself with a mixed command of about two hundred men. Some sixty of these were dragoons. I made of them a squadron of two troops with Heathcote in command, two other lieutenants, juniors to him, each taking a troop and "non-coms" acting as lieutenants. There was enough infantry for a skeleton battalion officered much in the same way. Fortunately there had been gathered in a field gun and caisson with a complement of cannoneers and a platoon of rapid firers. The field gun we christened "Busy Bertha," a takeoff on the huge Krupp siege ordnance, the "Beautiful Berthas," of the Germans. The rapid firers we called "Ginger Pops," from a comic picture page of the Paris HERALD that one of the men had in his pocket. Somehow the name seemed to suit these guns, which were Belgian, and with their men had been caught up and swept along in the retreat from Belgium. That they had been saved from capture was due to the fact that they were drawn by highly trained dogs, which, when the men had plunged into the forest to evade the enemy had promptly followed, giving a marvellous exhibition of skill and intelligence in the manner in which they avoided getting the wheels caught in trees and other obstacles.

Thus I had a mixed command of cavalry, infantry and artillery—in effect, a brigade in miniature.

An Ingenious Courtship

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN

Mrs. Martindale, realizing the dangers which beset young persons who step into matrimonial traps, desired that her daughter should be settled matrimonially while her mother lived and that she should marry a good man. Edward Sawyer was the person on whom Mrs. Martindale had fixed her intentions for her daughter. One day she said to him:

"Edward, I have noticed that you seem pleased with Gwen. I wish to see her settled before I leave her. If you wish to marry her I will help you to win her. If not, I shall try to make a match for her elsewhere."

"You have not been deceived in my partiality for Gwen, Mrs. Martindale, but I don't see that Gwen has any special partiality for me."

"Gwen is romantic and needs to be won by romance. That is why I fear for her. Some worthless fellow is liable to appeal to her in that way and marry her. I value that which is practical in you and wish that you might sink it temporarily, be a bit sentimental, catch Gwen and marry her. After marriage I am sure your good sense and wisdom will hold her."

Mr. Sawyer sat evidently turning something over in his mind, then assured Mrs. Martindale that, although he would be glad to win her daughter, he feared that he was too matter of fact to please her.

One day Gwen received a note which put her in a flutter. The writer declared that he had known her for some time; that he had loved her from the moment he first saw her; that he had forborne to give her the slightest inkling of his affection because he had not observed any predisposition on her part for him. He was a believer in love from the beginning. He knew the woman he wanted the moment he met her and felt sure that if she wanted him she would know him. While he would not make himself known, he could not refrain from telling her that he loved her.

In a few weeks came a second letter. In it her correspondent said that he was impelled to write to her, though he had no information of himself to communicate. He had met her once since he had written the first letter, but had observed nothing in her greeting to give him any reason to think that she had chosen him as he had chosen her. Nevertheless he had a faint hope that there might be some subtle medium of transference which would enable his love to kindle its like in her.

Whether or not this medium existed, Gwen's heart went out to this unknown lover, or, rather, to a being whom she created. She was troubled that he did not enable her to make even a written reply by giving her an address. But one day she received a letter in which he said that he was ill and was pining for a word from her. If he did not get it he feared for the result. An address was given, but she was assured that she would not be able, even if she desired, to trace him.

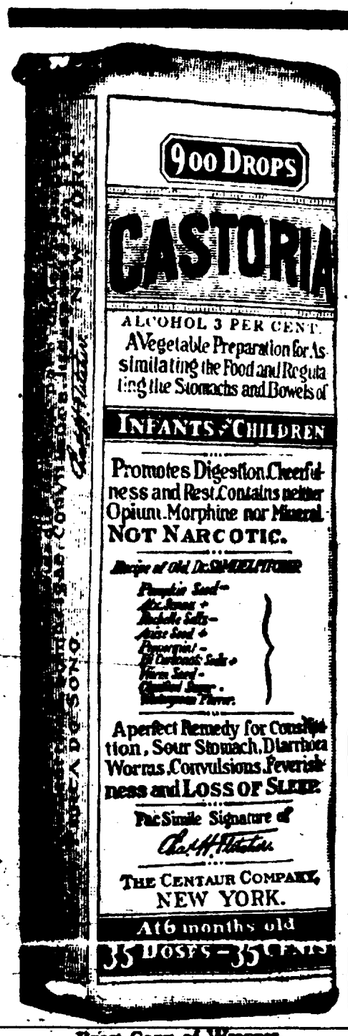
Gwen did not find the difficulty to be expected in writing a reply, because she wrote to one created by her own fancy. She did not intend to write a loving letter to an unknown man. She thought she merely expressed sympathy. But sympathy is so nearly akin to love that the expression of the one will often do for the other.

The stranger having given an address where a letter might reach him, quite a brisk correspondence sprang up between him and Gwen. She suggested that he make himself known, that if they could not be lovers they might at least be friends, and she longed to do something to show her appreciation of his preference for her. To this he replied that he was sure that when she knew which of her acquaintances he was, that he was a plain, ordinary man, she could not refrain from showing her disappointment. Nor would she believe that one she had known could have so long concealed the love buried away down in his breast.

To this she replied that such a discovery could not but interest her and might turn the scale in his favor. After much urging and the expression of many misgivings he consented to make himself known. He agreed to call upon her on a certain evening. When that evening arrived she spent much time before her glass arranging her costume, and when she heard the ring of the doorbell her heart leaped into her throat. She went downstairs, trembling with anticipation.

"Why, Ned Sawyer!"

Sawyer shrank back as though fearing she was about to cast a blight upon him.



"Can it be," Gwen added, a slight color rising in her cheeks, "that you have so long lived near me, have seen me so often and yet have been able to conceal what you have expressed in those lovely letters?"

"Oh, Gwen, tell me, are you—do you wish I had turned out to be some one else?"

"Why, Ned, do you mean to tell me that you haven't known that I"—

He clasped her to his breast. "No; had I even suspected it I would not have wasted so much time on this confounded"—

He checked himself in time to prevent spoiling what he had accomplished.

How Warships Communicate.

Every battleship at sea has its wireless installation adjusted so that it can send and receive signals and messages to other squadrons at sea or in harbor and to stations ashore. For the purpose of obtaining information as to the whereabout of the enemy and guarding against surprises wireless telegraphy is, of course, invaluable, says the Wireless World. A great number of cruisers are sent out ahead and spread a number of miles across. The duty of these ships is to keep a thorough lookout and report to the ship in the battle fleet looking out on their particular wave length. This ship in turn reports by semaphore or Morse lamp to the admiral of the battle fleet. The cruisers are sometimes assisted by torpedo boat destroyers. Now, if thirty of these ships are used it will be readily seen that the area of their vision is enormous, and it would be almost impossible for a fleet to pass unobserved. Immediately any of the ships sight the enemy's squadron they would report at once by wireless, stating the number of ships sighted, with their speed, latitude and longitude, etc. The admiral would then give his orders, also by wireless.—Pearson's Weekly.

Queerest Dolls in the World.

The dollies played with by little Mohammedan children are sadly unique. They are not allowed any features and are, in fact, little more than mere bundles of rags rolled up. Mrs. Penny in "Southern India" recalls the reason for this deficiency. The Moslems believe that any human figure that is made by man will receive life at the last day and will reproach its maker for having brought it into existence without having the power to endow it with human and spiritual privileges. One feels that the prophet might have compromised a little when it came to dolls, especially in view of what was later to happen.

When British rupees were first circulated in India the figure of the sovereign in relief was regarded with distrust. Fortunately for the peace of the merchant the eye was so small as to be almost invisible. Through this loophole the followers of the prophet found a way of escape from the difficulty, deciding that no harm would come in the use of the money.

SUNDAY TAKES CHRIST'S PRAYER FOR SERMON

Last Sunday forenoon Mr. Sunday preached in Philadelphia on the subject "Gethsemane." His text was from Luke xxii, 24:—

"And being in agony, He prayed more earnestly; and His sweat was, as it were, great drops of blood falling down to the ground."

Mr. Sunday said:—

Infidels have seized on certain verses of Scripture and have given as reasons for their unbelief that the statement therein contained did not agree with their opinion. One of these verses is the one that I have just read: "And being in great agony He prayed more earnestly; and His sweat was, as it were, great drops of blood falling down to the ground."

For, says the infidel, it is a physical impossibility for men to sweat blood. This is a lot of nonsense. Because you have two good eyes and have always known good sight, should you say that are no blind? They have never heard of such a thing happening they say. All right; but because you say that man has never sweat blood, don't say that God didn't.

When I was a boy I used to hear men say that the Bible couldn't be true, for it was impossible for a man to fast for forty days and live. They thought that settled it. Then along came Dr. Tanner and he fasted for forty days. That was the first time. He fasted again for forty-six days, and he fasted a third time for sixty-two days, and after that we didn't hear any more about a fast of forty days being impossible. The infidels quit quoting Tom Paine's "Age of Reason" on that point.

When a man gets chesty and puts his old theories up against God, then God always brings a man forward to show that he is an old marplot and an old liar.

Gets Word His Son is in Prison

Dr. Witherow, pastor of a Presbyterian church in Chicago—he went there from Boston—says he knew of a man who had a wayward son. He hadn't heard from that boy for nine years. Then, one day, they sent him word that his son was in prison. He had committed a murder and he had been tried and convicted and was about to be executed. He had refused to tell anything about his family until he was face to face with death, then he told them and they wrote to the father to ask him what should be done with the body.

Dr. Witherow said that in his agony that father sweat drops of blood.

If an earthly father sweats drops of blood for one son who has gone wrong is it strange that Jesus should sweat drops of blood for all men when they were in danger of hell?

When Jesus sweat drops of blood there in the garden it was a new sight for the angels. They had seen their brother angels rebel against God, and they had seen the conflict which followed and they had seen these rebel angels hurled over the battlements of heaven. They had seen Sennacherib come up with his men, and they had seen 180,000 Assyrians laid low by the sword when the angel of God smote them in the night. They had seen Shadrach, Messach and Adebnego cast into a fiery furnace for refusing to bow themselves down to idols, and had seen them come out from it unharmed. They had seen the brave Daniel hurled into the lion's den for refusing to bow the knee to anyone save Jehovah and they had seen him come out from that den of wild beasts alive. But never before had the angels beheld such a sight as when they looked down on the garden of Gethsemane and saw the son of God kneeling there sweating drops of blood as He agonized over man.

In this text there are many lessons valuable to us, and especially valuable just at this stage of the campaign.

The first lesson is that the divine cup is bitter. It is bitter to fallen angels and fallen man, and it was bitter to the fallen Christ. Think of the sight. Think of Jesus staining His garments with the bloody sweat, not because of any sin or fault of His own for He was without sin, but because of His anguish over man.

God Hates Sin, So Do All Men

God hates sin, and so do I. So will every man on this earth who lays any claim to decency. If you don't hate sin, you will if you ever change your ways and try to be decent.

He didn't sweat those drops of blood because of any physical suffering. It wasn't because of any fear of death, for if Jesus had been afraid to die He would have been a coward, and He wasn't a crowd, although He was willing to die if God said so. I don't want to die. I want to stay here as long as I can, and so did Jesus, but He wasn't afraid to die. No. It was because of His grief for man.

A great martyr said as he stood in the midst of the flames that were devouring him: "Though you see the flesh fall from my bones, I absolutely feel no pain."

If you ever had any doubt about a literal hell, a fiery hell, where the wicked must remain forever, it would all vanish as I see Jesus Chirst in Gethsemane, agonizing because men would not accept him and were going to hell.

Yet, it was a bitter cup for Jesus. God pressed it to His lips and told Him to drink, Jesus said, "Isn't there some way in which I can avoid this?" But God said, "No, there is no other way," and Jesus drank the cup.

We learn still another lesson—the power of prayer.

Oh, don't be careless professors of Christianity for another minute! Don't you dare to make a cold, formal prayer when you come to address Almighty God! Don't you dare to regard this campaign in a critical and carping way.

You're a big fool to go to hell, but it'll be your own fault if you do. God doesn't want you to go there, but He can't stop you. He has sacrificed His Son to keep you out of hell, and what more could He do? I am doing all I can to keep you out of hell. I have stood here and preached to you and I've done all that I could, and if you won't be saved, all right-go to hell.

When Jesus was being led out to be sacrificed women followed Him and wept, and He turned to them and said: "Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for Me, but weep for yourselves and for your children." For, He said, "For if they do these things in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry?" Jesus meant that they shouldn't weep for Him, but for those who were about to crucify Him; He meant that there was more reason to weep for them than to weep for Him.

So don't weep for other's troubles; weep for your own soul. Don't worry about my vocabulary, sister; get on your knees and pray for your salvation. Don't worry over my eccentricities; you'd better look after your own faults.

Every man and every woman that God has used to halt this sin-cursed world and set it going Godward has been a Christian of prayer. Martin Luther arose from his bed and prayed at night, and when the break of day came he called his wife and said to her: "It has come." History records that on that very day King Charles granted religious toleration, a thing for which Luther had prayed.

John Knox, whom his queen feared more than any other man, was in such agony of prayer that he ran out into the street and fell on his face and cried, "Oh, God give me Scotland, or I'll die." And God gave him Scotland, and not only that, He threw England in for good measure.

Save Souls the Time is Ripe

I believe that if you will pray as you ought to pray, you will have more people at the altar in the next week than you have had in all the weeks that have passed.

You have never had the people of this community in such a frame of mind as they are in now, and you may never have things as they now are again. Now is the time to save souls.

If you can't save them now, God pity you, for you never will.

An old infidel—a blacksmith—said that he could refute any argument that a Christian could make. There was an old deacon there—he was a Baptist, and he heard of it. He told his wife and they got down on their knees and prayed until 3 o'clock in the morning. That morning the old deacon hitched up and drove over to see the man. He went into the blacksmith shop and the infidel was standing there, and the deacon stood before him. He said: "My wife and I prayed for you until 3 o'clock this morning." Then his eyes filled with tears and he sobbed and turned away. He couldn't think of one of the arguments he had prepared. He drove back home, and when he got there he said to his wife: "I've made an old fool of myself. It was all for nothing. When I saw him I just told him that we had been praying for him, and I broke down and couldn't think of another thing, and came home."

In the meantime the infidel went into his own house and he said to his wife, "I heard a new argument this morning." She said, "What was that?" "Why," he said, "the old deacon drove in to see me this morning and told me that he and his wife had prayed for me until 3 o'clock in the morning. Then he sobbed and went away." And the infidel said, "Let's hitch up and go over and see him. I'd like to talk to him." They drove over and he told the deacon why he had come, and it wasn't long before the deacon had him on his knees and he was saved.

A mother had some daughters, and they were frivolous and coquettish girls. She couldn't get them to give up their pleasures and live for God. She prayed for them and finally one day she said to them, "I'm ashamed of you. I'm almost sorry that I bore you and held you on my knees. You care more for others than you do for your God or your mother. Others ask you to go with them, and you go. I ask you to go with me, and you won't go. I'm going into my closet and I'm going to pray for you. I don't know that I shall ever come out alive."

She went in and prayed. The hours went by and still she prayed. Finally there was a knock at the door, and one of her daughters stood there. She was weeping and she said, "Mother, I want to be saved. I've come to pray with you." So the two of them prayed and the hours went by, and presently another daughter came and joined them there, and before night came, all those girls had found Jesus.

Then we learn a lesson of the spirit of deep concern over soul.

The spirit of concern that we find in the Bible puts to shade many who are in Philadelphia. Some of you have been coming to this Tabernacle ever since the meetings were begun, but you have simply sat here. You haven't put forth a hand to bring any one to Christ. If you are one of those, you are absolutely worthless so far as God is concerned. You are of no use to Him and He looks on you as an unprofitable servant. How can you sit by while souls are going to hell? What are you going to say to God about it after awhile?

Go and see an unsaved person die, and read the obituary notices, and realize that he died unsaved, and then see what you think of it!

Some one may say, "How do I know how God feels about it?" How do I know whether He is really concerned over sinners? I know it. It would be a sin of presumption if I did not. If God cared as little for the souls of men as some of you care, not a soul ever would have been saved.

It is not possible for a human mind to have a greater conception of God than is revealed to us in Jesus Christ. For a man to say he loves God and then turn his back on Jesus Christ is an insult to the Almighty. You will find in Him just what your heart has been looking for, and you'll find it nowhere else.

I can see Jesus in the garden looking down on Jerusalem and saying, "Oh, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stoned them which are sent unto thee, how often would I gather thy children together even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not." It is a matter of history that from that day Jesus turned away from the Jews. He never appealed to them again, but turned to the Gentiles—but God's got a plan for the Jews. So Jesus is God made manifest in the flesh.

Did you ever weep over the sins of the people? Did you ever weep over the evil of the multitude? If you never did, then there's something wrong with your religion.

Dr. Chapman, the evangelist with whom I worked, became concerned for one young man. He felt that he ought to speak to him, but he feared that he might show more zeal than knowledge. He felt the man might be offended if he went to him in that way. He had the wrong idea. If any one is offended because you try to do right, let them go. If any one is offended because you ask them to be a Christian, let them go to hell. You've done your duty. He thought it over and made up his mind to speak that very night. The young man did not come that night, so on the next day Dr. Chapman drove out in a cutter to see him. He met the man and said: "I want you to be a Christian."

The man was angry. He said: "You blankenty-blank little preacher, I don't want you to come to me about that." Dr. Chapman turned and left him and drove away. He caught cold while driving out there and it stayed with him that winter, and soon after he left the place and took up evangelistic work.

One night ten years after, he was holding a meeting at Saratoga, when he saw a man coming down the aisle.

"Don't you know me?" the man asked. Dr. Chapman didn't know him.

"Why," the man said, "I'm Benedict, from Schuylerville. I'm the man who cursed you when you drove out to my home and asked me to be a Christian. I want to be a Christian now."

"What has changed you?" Dr. Chapman asked.

Oh, if you knew the power of tears for the sinner. If you only felt enough concern to weep over those who are in danger of being lost. The sight of such tears would win many souls for Christ.

Elder of Church was not Living Right

One morning when I was out in Iowa a woman came to my door and knocked and said that a man wanted to see me. I found that he was a church member—a ruling elder. He told me that he had not been living right.

"How can I get right?" he asked.

I told him that his confession must be as public as his sin had been great. I told him that he would have to stand up and tell the people that he hadn't been living right and promise that with Gods' help he would do better.

He said: "Oh, I can't do that."

"All right," I said, "but if you aren't willing to do what you must do to get right, what did you come to me for?"

He finally said he would do it, and he did. Then he asked me to pray for him, and I did. Then he asked to pray for his son Ernest, and I prayed for him at intervals that day. The boy was at Shenandoah—that was out in Western Iowa—going to school. He didn't go with his class that day. Late that night there was a knock at the door and when they opened it, Ernest was there. He had walked sixteen or seventeen miles to get home, and he was almost frozen.

"I'll tell you," the man said, "I never heard a sermon that touch me nor a song. It was your tears—the tears that were in your eyes as I cursed you and you turned away. I've never been able to forget them. I've never had a day's peace since that moment." .....

"What's wrong?" the father asked.

"Oh, father, I'm an awful sinner," the boy said.

They called his mother and they got him warm. Today he is preaching the gospel to the heathen.

God shot the arrow of conviction over fifteen miles that day in answer to our prayers.

If the church people get right, the whole world will get right. The world is challenging the church, instead of the church challenging the world. If it was as easy to get the church on its knees as it is to get the unsaved world into the kingdom, we wouldn't have any more trouble about religion. And God can't save you unless you're willing. He won't coerce you to it.

I often think of what Bob Ingersoll might have been if he had only been turned into Christianity. What a power for God that man could have been!

I often think what a power Voltaire could have been for God—that brilliant man over whose writings many have stumbled to hell, Voltaire became an infidel after memorizing a short poem on unbelief when he was a small boy.

Carey translated the Bible into twenty-four languages and dialects.

Finney brought 1,000,000 into the kingdom of God.

Moody brought hundreds of thousands to Christ.

Jesus in a Hurry to Save the World

I have never seen a minister who preached doctrines and creeds and evolution and all such things and who had any real concern for the souls of his people. Jesus Christ is in a hurry to save this world, and there never was an age when people were so hungry for the truth as they are today.

The angels don't care anything about a railroad in Alaska. What do the angels care about political principles? What do they care about a forty-story skyscrapers or reclaiming the deserts of the west? What do they care about pictures, art or science The only thing they're interested in is the salvation of man. If you want to make the bells of heaven ring, get down on your knees. Nothing will swing open the prison doors and bring men out of sin like prayer.

I never see a man or a woman or boy or girl but I do not think that God has a plan for them, and wonder what it is. He has a plan for each of us. He will use each of us to His glory if we will only let Him. We can defeat His plan if we want to.

Finally, we find that God honors this spirit in deep concern for the unsaved.

If you haven't got in your heart an agonized concern for the unsaved—even if you are a deacon or an elder, yes, even if you are a preacher—go right down there in front and fall in the sawdust and ask God to forgive you.

Nothing makes such joy in heaven as the salvation of a soul. Kneel by that old drunkard there, kneel by that fallen women, kneel by that thief, and you will set the bells of heaven a ringing. The angels don't care about your social position, they don't care about your culture. It's the salvation of sinners the angels care about.

Billy Sunday, the evangelist, is accused of stealing the thoughts, phrases, and even sentences of Robert G. Ingersoll by the Truth Seeker, an agnostic paper published in Philadelphia. The paper quotes in parallel columns sentences by Sunday, delivered to soldiers in Beaver Falls, and sentences delivered by Ingersoll in the Academy of Music, New York, May 30, 1882. The train of thought, even in the longest sentences and paragraphs, is almost identical.

The evangelist explained that he had been told he was using a part of Ingersoll's famous speech, but that he had never read a line of Ingersoll. People, he said, sent him clippings, among which was "some good stuff," which he used. Afterward he was informed it was from the Ingersoll speech.

FROM GENERAL GEORGE WASHINGTON'S FIRST INAUGURAL ADDRESS

"No people can be bound to acknowledge and adore the invisible hand which conducts the affairs of men, more than the people of the United States. Every step by which they have advanced to the character of an independent nation seems to have been distinguished by some token of providential agency. Reposing between the maxims of an honest and magnanimous policy and solid rewards of public prosperity, the propitious smiles of heaven will fall upon this nation which so regards the external rules of order and right which heaven itself has ordained."

RUSSIANS ADMIT LOSS OF 10th ARMY

Germans and Russians Still Locking Horns Along Great German Front

By Francis Lavelle Murray

Petrograde, Feb. 22.—The first detailed story of the Russian retreat from East Prussia was issued by the war office today together with an announcement that during the last two days the Russians have captured about 1000 German prisoners in Galicia. The war offices communique shows that the Tenth Russian army had a narrow escape from destruction, but that it finally extricated itself though heavy losses were inflicted on both sides.

The recent German losses in Galicia were suffered in fighting southwest of Tarnow, the Teutonic troops having attempted an offensive in the region of Zakliczyn which was repulsed.

The statement of the war office follows:

"The Germans having convinced themselves after a series of exceptionally tenacious and obstinate attacks, which cost them innumerable victims, of the impossibility of piercing our positions on the left bank of the Vistula, proceeded at the end of January to carry out a new plan.

"Having concluded the formation in the interior of their country of several new corps, they decided to continue the transportation of troops from the western front in order to bring them into operation against us. The Germans making use of their highly organized network of railroads, set great forces in motion in Eastern Prussia with the intention of defeating our Tenth army, which occupied strong positions along the Angerapp river and the Mazurian lakes.

"To insure the state of this stroke the Germans transported part of their contingents from the Bzura-Rawka front to the right bank of the Vistula.

"The German concentration in Eastern Prussia was disclosed February 4, but the extent of the concentration could only be established some days later. Not being able, owing to the lack of railways, to assemble with the necessary rapidity on the Eastern Prussia front forces indispensible to meet this development adequately, we decided to withdraw the above mentioned army from Eastern Prussia to the frontier and, farther towards the Niemen and Bobr rivers. In this movement the right wing of the Tenth army pressed by great forces was threatened with envelopment. The right flank was forced into a very rapid turning movement in the direction of Kovno. This rapid movement exposed the flank of a following corps which consequently found itself in a difficult position. Only isolated elements succeeded in escaping. (This tends to confirm official bulletins in Berlin that the Russians suffered terrific losses in Prussia. A Russian corps numbers from 40,000 to 50,000 men.)

"The other corps of the Tenth army fell back in the direction assigned them, fighting stubbornly, incessantly and valiantly, repulsing the enemy's attacks and inflicting upon his heavy losses, while all the time having to overcome incredible difficulties caused by the deep snow which blotted out all roads. As the roads were quite impassible motor transports and vans could not move. Supply trains were delayed, often not reaching their destination at all.

"The corps forming the left wing of the Tenth army held off the enemy nine days in the country which under ordinary circumstances can be traversed in four days. On February 19-20 these corps, retiring by way of Augustowe, emerged from the fighting area and occupied the positions assigned them.

"At the present moment fighting on the German front continues in the vicinity of Radziow and half way between Plock and Plansk. In some places the engagements are ofa very stubborn nature. On the right bank of the Vistula, on the roads to Plock, Austrian elements have been discovered among the German troops.

"During the last two days we have captured about 1000 Germans in Galicia. The enemy on February 19-29, after a preparatory bombardment, took the offensive to the north of Zakliczyn, but was repulsed after three attacks."

Berlin, by Wireless, Feb. 22.—German attacks upon the Allies' troops in the vicinity of Ypres are being maintained and are resulting successfully. It was announced at the war office today that the German troops captured a trench on Sunday east of Ypres and that all of the enemy's counter attacks in attempting to recapture this position had failed.

U.S. CANNOT HOLD GERMANY LIABLE

Washington Opinions Indicate That Nothing Is Due Beyond Usual Formalities

Washington, Feb. 22.—That a serious but not alarming situation has been defeated by the blowing up of the American cotton ship Evelyn off Borkum island in the North sea is the opinion of administration officials today. They waited anxiously for details of the disaster from Ambassador Page at London and Ambassador Gerard at Berlin, who were directed by President Wilson to investigate and report promptly to Washington. Pending the receipt of full information, it was stated that the Washington [illegible] will proceed cautiously.

The meager dispatch from American Consul Fee at Bremen, reporting the matter, showed that the Evelyn went down off a German island. She probably struck a mine. It was contended by officials that if this were found to be the case, there would be no ground for action by this government other than a request of Germany for an explanation and a probable case for damages. Legal experts of the country agree that the laying of mines is not barred by any international agreement now in effect. It also was suggested that Borkum is one of a chain of islands just south of the port of of Bremen and forms part of the coast defenses of Germany.

The Washington government also found ground for hope that serious consequences could be avoided in the fact that the Evelyn went down outside the war zone established by Germany and none of her crew lost. Much weight was placed on the explanation Captain Smith of the Evelyn would offer as to what course his vessel took through the North sea and whether he had received notice of the mining of the waters in the vicinity of Borkum island.

Members of Congress took a serious view of the matter and generally indicated that it called for watchfulness on the part of this government to guard against reptitions of such accidents. They were inclined, however, to place confidence in the ability of the President and his advisers to handle the situation.

The State Department today announced that pending a comprehensive report from its diplomatic officers on the sinking of the American steamer Evelyn this Government's rejoinders to the English and German notes on the flying of neutral flags and submarine warfare will be postponed. The department has instructed American Consul See at Bremen to collect and forward all details as to the manner of the Evelyns' destruction.

GARDNER SAYS COAST DEFENSCES ARE INADEQUATE

Washington, Feb. 22. — Declaring that some of prinncipal coasts of the United States are not safe from bombardment and that reports of the recent hearings before the House appropriation committee did not disclose a satisfactory condition, Representative Gardner spoke in the Hous today in favor of grrater coast defences. Gardner declared the coast defence guns are only 73 per cent of the amount of ammunition allotted for them and the pending fortifications bill raised the percentage to only 74½ per cent of the minimin amount required.

PIUTES WAGING RECIPIENT WAR

Made Up of Outlaws, Determined to Fight Until Last Man Stands

Cortez, Colo., Feb. 22.—Renegade Piute Indians who defeated United States deputy marshals yesterday in a fight near Bluff, Utah, in which two Indians and a white man were killed, are reported in a telephone message received here early today to have attacked the town of Bluff, Utah, last night. The telephone message which came from Monticello, Utah, said that the Indians had oured several volleys into Bluff and that a small force of deputies there was in danger of being annihilated by the Indians.

Additional deputies are trying to reach Bluff, but at last reports they were proceeding through a heavy snow storm that permitted them to travel only slowly.

The white man killed was Joe Aiken, a wealthy raiser of Dolores, Col., and an expert rifle shot. As Aiken fell, the whites, who had been trying to take the Indians by surprise, rolled from their ponies into the snow and began firing whenever an Indian showed himself. After a few volleys had been fired U. S. Marshal Aquila Nebeker sent Mancos, Jim, a former Indian outlaw to parley with Tse Na Gatt, leader of the Outlaws. The parley lasted some time and then Mancos Jim returned with this message:

"We will fight until we are killed."

Marshal Nebeker said that one of the Indians who fell was dressed like a squaw and seemed to be a woman. This led to the belief that the Indian men and women were fighting side by side. All are armed with modern Winchester rifles.

Tse Na Gatt has been on the warpath since last October when he defied the federa authorities after being indicted for the murder of a Mexican.

The sheriff of San Juan county today requested the Governor of Utah to ask that federal troops be sent out to deal with the Indians in his district.

SPEAKER SWEET ANGERED AT BROWN'S STATEMENT

Albany, Feb. 22.—Speaker Sweet of the Assembly today explained his position in desiring the Legislature to adjourne on April 2. Senator Brown, the Majority leader, stated last week that the Legislature was not ready to consider adjournment. This angered the Speaker, who said, "I am for economy. If the Legislators would work more than two days of the week, the state would save several thousand dollars a day on expenses, and itw would be possible to clean up all work before April 2 without difficulty. As a matter of fact, on Thursday of each week most of the members have returned to their homes and it is impossible to take up most of the bills on the calendar for those days." Speaker Sweet confered with the Governor today and told the Executive he was anxious to save the State as much money as possible.

ENGLAND HAS BIG STRIKE

Lodon, Eng., Feb. 22.—In all but one employes of the important shipyards on the upper Clyde river struck today. 10,000 men were made idle.

JOFFRE PUSHES FORWARD RESERVES

He Believes Germans Ready for One of the Strongest Fights Yet in Aisne

Paris, Feb. 22.—Confidence that the German attacks in Champagne in the Argonne and in the Aisne valleyes have been effectively checked, General Joffre is now sending large forces of the allies to the right wing where the Germans are preparing for another onslaughter. The reserves recently mustered into the active army form the greater part of these reinforcements, but veteran troops have also been sent into the valley of the Aisne. The Germans have also succeeded in building some bridges on the Lille canal and have been shelling the allies' positions preparatory for a general advance near Warrington. The official statement issued this afternoon says that at Eparges the French gained some ground at one point and withdrew slightly at one other [illegible].

In Alsace on both banks of the Fecht river the French advance guards wered riven back upon the line of resistance which they strongly occupied. The enemy attacked in massed formation which caused him heavy losses.

[illegible] BATTLESHIP DISABLED BY TURKS

By Ludwig Von Klein.

Constantinople, via Berlin and Amsterdam, Feb. 22.—Three British and French warships were badly damaged by the return fire of the Dardanelles forts in the bombardment of last Friday, it was announced at the Turkish ministry of marine today. The flagship of the attacking allies' fleet, a British battleship, was so seriously crippled that it had to be towed from the scene by destroyers, according to an official statement issued here.

The official statement follows: "The allied fleet has not renewed its bombardment of the Dardanelles forts which inflicted heavy damage on the attacking fleet Friday. The enemy's fleet consisting of four English and four French warships opened the bombardment on Friday with guns of the largest calibre. The Ottoman artillerists did not return the fire until the enemy approached close. The allied squadron approached, thinking the fortresses had been silenced. At this moment the Ottoman artillery fired 18 shots, only four of which failed to hit the mark. All the others struck home.

The Admiral's ship, a British battelship of the first class, suffered heavy damage and was towed out of the battle line by torpedo boats. Two others of the enemy's ships were disabled. After wasting 600 shells, the enemy, three of whose units were almost useless, were commelled to retire."

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Rome, Feb. 22.—Riots occurred in many cities throughout Italy today in connection with demonstrations in favor of this country goin gto war against the Germans. Dispatches received from Milan, Purin and a number of other cities in the northern part of the kingdom state that hostile demonstrations were directed against Austria and that in many other places troops were necessary to preserve order. Eight socialists were wounded in a fight.

Berlin, Feb. 22.—The greatest mountain batttle of history is now raging in the Carpathians. The Russians are displaying the greatest possible tenacity in their efforts to gain victory, but thus far all reports from German and Austrian headquarters say that the Czar's troops are bein gsteadily forced out of Galicia.

Plymouth, England, Feb. 22.— The Australian mail boat Maloja, carrying 400 passengers, was fired on five times by an unknown armed merchantman as she was entering the English channel, says the Western Daily Mercurq. The incident occurred on Friday. Instead of stopping as ordered the Maloja increased her speed and steamed on for this harbor.

Copenhagen, Feb. 22.—Danish marine circles today received information that the German cotton steamer Austrian which is ashore near Malmore struck a German mine and had to be beached to escape sinking.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

THE OLD DAYS

THEY talk about the good old days, the days of long ago—when people lived the modest and simple life, you know. Reformers say we're living in a time of graft and greed—they say we're breaking records with our modern life of speed. The graybeard sadly shakes his head and heaves a heavy sigh. He says the present can't compare with former days gone by. We hear the benedictions poured on good old days of yore—we almost wish that we were born a little while before. They had some things we haven't got in those days, I agree, but just the same the modern time is good enough for me. They travelled by canal boats with the swiftness of a snail. Nor did they go much faster by the omnibus or rail. They used no gas to fix your teeth in blessed days of yore—the dentist yanked your moler till you landed on the floor. You wet your thirsty whistle in the old days, so they tell, by drinking from a bucket that you lowered in a well. If sickness would befall you and you voiced a painful screech, they'd hustle for a doctor, who would bleed you with a leech. They had no elevators and they lumbered up the stair until they shook their systems from their insteps to their hair. Their lives were slow and peaceful and the times were picturesque, but seems to me some things they did just bordered on burlesque. Why should we worry what they did in those days, anyhow? I'm doggoned glad I'm living, and I'm glad I'm living now.

Opinions

Pensions for Widowed Mothers

It is to be regretted that a wholehearted support cannot be given to such a measure as pensions for widowed mothers. But whenever the public treasury is tapped for any purpose, no matter how lofty, there is almost always the gravest danger lest the spout be opened wide and freely. That is one of the serious things about this mothers' pension bill, which has been introduced in the Legislature. A pension for widowed mothers to enable them to bring up their children decently? What can be more reasonable? There are other things which are quite as reasonable for the government to undertake, but questions of administration forbid. There are some things which the government can't do.

Of course, governments can administer a pension system. At present the United States is paying out upwards of $150,000,000 a year to persons who were connected in one way and another largely by marriage, with the Civil War. But millions of that money are going to men and women who are utterly unworthy of it. That is one of the dangers of a government pension. It is so easy for government officials to hand out public funds.

There is that other danger of weakening the fiber of the people. There is already a sufficient number of people who believe that the government owes them a living and are willing to take the government by the throat to wrench it out. What will be the effect upon the minds of youths who were supported by the State? Possibly not very serious, for the State already provides an education. But providing a living is a little different. It is a short step from that to the idea that the State should also provide the young man with a job when his mother gets through bringing him up. How far do the people want to go with this sort of thing? How far is it safe to go?

There is a certain quality known as self reliance. Not much is heard of it these days. A great many people are running to the government to get it to do something for them and become very angry when it isn't done. This begging is not confined to the lowly and the pitifully unfortunate; in fact, the greatest noise is made by those who earn enough to pay an income tax, even if they don't pay it, or only part of it. Many people have forgotten that they can do a great deal for themselves.

If the genuinely needy widow mothers could be helped, and those alone and to a proper degree and no further, nothing could be said against a pension for their benefit. But for the State to undertake what relatives ought to do, and to face the other dangers of pensions is another matter. The Legislature hasn't an easy problem to solve.—Observer, Utica.

The Navy Chance for Self-made Men

American and altogether commendable is the system inaugurated by Secretary Daniels, which finds a conspicuous illustration in the fact, that now, for the first time in the history of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, there are at that school six young men who began as common sailors, who have risen from the ranks, so to speak, and by passing examinations have won the privilege of being trained for officers in the United States navy.

It is time for the bars of caste exclusiveness to be broken down both at Annapolis and West Point. It is a safe prediction that more will be heard of those six sailor lads who have had to win their own way, and more surprising things have happened, than for some or all of them to gain high rank in the service to which they have devoted themselves.

Whether in the vocations of peace, or the training for war, a country never loses by giving the self-made man a chance. Many of the best military and naval officers have had to hew their own way to promotion, and this country, of all others, ought to offer the fewest hindrances to laudable ambition.

These six new sailor-boys at Annapolis mean less of the taint of snobbishness in our military or naval school, and they furnish an American exemplification of the principle, that "the career is open to merit."—Times, Buffalo.

STOP WORRYING

Most men who think, who take the trouble to compare conditions as they were with the existing ones know that things usually get righted around, if we give them time. Most men who fail to think get excited over the blackboard future—over the hobgoblins that they feel are bound to get them, or their neighbors.

There are in this city a few good people who are worrying over the amusements provided by proprietors of moving picture houses. Others are fretting and foaming over a statement that churches are dying out, and that these houses of worship will be eventually converted into club houses or garages.

Bosh! Women and men will worry. In fact, men of mechanical turn of mind have been known to worry about mechanics and let their wives pound through a big Monday wash, without once helping with the pounder or turning the wringer.

To such men we say, stop worrying, and go to work. To the women and men of Fulton who are worrying over the open Sunday moving picture houses, we say, stop it, and get to work to provide for the hundreds of patrons of those houses a better place of amusement. To the same women and men, we say, do not be a party to destructive reform, but get busy at the wash board by constructing amusements that will have stronger drawing power than is provided by the churches of this and other cities. We say to the same women and men that by becoming a party to a movement that might eventually close the Fulton moving picture houses on the Lord's day, you will be giving over your energies to a cause that is founded upon a purely commercial and selfish end.

There are in this and other cities of the same size, and larger, hundreds and thousands of persons whose opportunities are limited in the matter of amusements and diversions that wipe from the brain cells the cobwebs of everyday life in the mill, the workshop, the store, and in fact, the drudgery connected with the preparation of meals, etc. in the home. All week long these souls are prevented from satiating their desire for amusement. They are not sought after by the pew holders of our churches. Several reasons exist for this fact which is a very well known fact to the objects of this mention. When the Sunday comes these workers in shop, factory, store, etc. feel that at last they can take the relaxation that is their due; that then they can spare the time from their hours of rest and devote one or two of them to looking upon the moving film. In the moving picture house those persons find warmth—a welcome awaits them. In so far as the family is concerned the patrons of the Sunday movies have been a unit.

Is there a woman or a man in this city who believes that the patrons of the Sunday movies as we have described them would, were the houses to remain closed, be found in our churches? Never. Does the reader believe that were the Sunday movies to remain closed one could find in many of this city's homes the family as a unit? No. Instead we should find in entirely too many instances that the male portion of the family had gone its way for enjoyment leaving the rest of the circle to shift for itself.

Has the reader investigated ever the moving picture houses of this city? Has he watched the complexion of the crowds of men, women and children who frequent the places? If he has not, then it is his duty to stop worrying and get to work.

An investigation will convince the reader that under no circumstances, or until the advent of the millenium, can we hope to drive into our churches hundreds of the persons who may be seen entering or leaving on Sunday afternoons.

Reform when of a constructive nature has the endorsement of this newspaper. We do not believe good can be accomplished by getting excited over a blackboarded future. Sunday moving picture theaters should not be hobgoblins, but instead they should be made into agencies for good. Why, pray, worry over the open Sunday amusement places, but why not, pray, worry over a way to improve the character of their films—that is, if the character of the films needs improving. Let us try the suggestion. Don't make of the Sunday movies an awful hobgoblin, but let's go to work to make them better—a something that will have educational value, or that will eventually help to fill many of the empty pews in our churches.

Why destroy without first constructing a better vehicle?

Why not become a party to a few thoughts, rather than to let ourselves be carried away by the selfish motives of the man who has not thought.

If we first construct before we destroy, things will get righted around—and then and then only may the reader of The Fulton Evening Times find this paper aligned upon the side of the man who has taken from his wife's hand the pound that does the family wash.

OBSERVER AGAIN IN EVIDENCE

In the Following Letter He Gives Us His Views on The Fulton Daily and Sabbath Observance

Editor Evening Times:

As a few words of introduction, permit me to acknowledge receipt of several inquiries as to what had become of OBSERVER during thhe stirring times which Fulton citizens have been enjoying since the writer, to all appearances, dropped out of sight. We have been waiting, as it were, for the noise of Brother Joslin's heavy guns which he stated he was going to turn on us after the State Fair. As he seemed content to turn light artillery on the worthy President of the Fulton Chamber of Commerce instead, we concluded that in our case he decided that discretion is better than valor, and, as one of the Fulton clergy has since agreed with the different views expressed by us, we conclude that the pleasant little controversy is at an end.

The writer at this time, wishes to congratulate the people of Fulton on their daily paper—a long felt want—and to thank the publishers for their kindness in sending us copies of same. It is with pleasure that we have been privileged to read a real daily published in a city where the knowing ones looked wise and predicted failure. The people demand news—first handed; and we believe that The Evening Times will meet all demands, both as a medium for distributing the latest news, and as an efficient means of advertising Fulton as a desirable city in which to locate. We are convinced that it is the aim of the publishers to lead Fulton to a greater era of prosperity.

Reasoning between the lines, "Observer," whose main business is to observe, learns that several questions of importance are now before the people of Fulton. At your request, we will take up these different subjects, one by one, and give you our humble opinion on each in turn; not for the purpose of creating a long winded discussion with some one whose views may differ with ours, but, with the main object in view of arousing a few thoughts in the breasts of those who are too likely to be wrapped in a mantle of prejudice.

The first, and the particular one we shall dwell upon in this letter, is, the Sunday moving pictures.

It is useless to consume space to describe a moving picture show—the large and varied subjects which one will behold on the screen if they attend from time to time. To mention the fact thhat a large army of people are employed at the present time at the different studios and film manufacturing plants and theatres—as I stated above, this information would seem an old story to all: but, whether you believe it or not, there are people in this great and enlightened country of ours today, who have never been in a picture house or witnessed a production of the silent drama. Some strict churchmen have denounced them as works of Satan and not fit for a moral man or woman to witness either week day or Sunday. I do not intend to argue the matter at this time or to defend the moral side of moving pictures. What I wish to ask, is this, is it a wise move on the part of the clergy to force the closing of picture houses on Sunday afternoon and evening in the event that they are being conducted with all due respect to city ordinances?

Have our different clergymen investigated the matter in every sense, from every agle and with a view of respecting the civil rights and privileges of others? Certain clergymen have made themselves prominent by leading crusades against different forms of vice—not alone from the pulpit, but, by resorting to legal means. The question of whether or not they were doing their duty is a question too lengthy to be debated at this time.

By using legal methods in closing the Sunday pictures, what do we gain? We may point with pride at their closed doors and proclaim "VICTORY" and a step toward a clean city; BUT, what becomes of the crowd that by your action in closing this resort, you have been the means of turning loose on our streets? They are going to seek other forms of amusement. Mr. Reformer, and the Good Lord only knows where or how their quest for amusement will end. Is it human nature to be forced? Can we compel the great American masses to attend means of Grace, or remain quietly within the walls of their own homes if we cut off their particular means of amusement? Who, as a rule, attend the Sunday picture shows? Is it the business or profesional men? Is it the Church members? Investigate, and you will find, in most cases it is the wage earners—the masses as we are disposed to call them. The small fellow who cannot afford to own an Auto takes his wife and family on a Sunday afternoon to enjoy some cheap amusement. Our Clergy proclaim from the pulpit that it is wrong, that such practices are a stain on our fair city, etc.—but, Mr. Preacher, what about your own members who are breaking the Sabbath by means of a high power motor car or enjoying themselves at their week end resorts? The Alderman who voted to close Sunday pictures, because his religious belief taught him it was a sin, hesitates not to accept a friend's invitation on Sunday afternoon to take a little spin across country. The religion taught by Jesus, was one of fairness to all. It did not teach us to prohibit others from doing something that suited their taste simply because it did not appeal to ours.

Henry Ward Beecher, attended the theatre. He satisfied himself whether or not it was an unfit place for us to go for amusement. Dr. Charles Parkhurst went through the slums of New York in order to see for himself to what exteht vice existed therein. Preachers of today should attend the picture shows if they really wish to be fair in the views they express regarding them.

Sunday pictures are a violation of a Holy Sabbath—we admit that. Sunday motor rides also come under the same head—they are wrong. Any pleasure, according to the old time Jewish Sabbath; is a sin; for, we are taught that in those days, on the evening of the sixth day every thing was laid aside uptil the time should arrive to commence their following week's work. They spent the Sabbath in rest and meditation. How does this method compare with our present American day of rest? The attendant of the picture shows on Sunday breaks the Sabbath—the man or woman who performs manual labor on the sacred day is guilty of the same crime—and, the employer who compels his men to work on Sunday while he attends Church himself breaks the Holy Day worse than any of the above. The housewife who toils and fusses over a special Sunday dinner in honor of the Rev. Blank and wife, also breaks the Sabbath. So, where will it end when we once start to unravel the snarl we get into by preaching quiet Sunday.

In our humble opinion, our only antidote for Sunday amusements is, either, make them decidedly unpopular by staying away, or, by means of moral suasion prevail upon people to let them severely alone. Start with the proprietors—change his ideas first—don't make him your sworn enemy by having the law on him—it's human nature to "get back", is it not? Then when you have convinced the people that they are in wrong by participating in these sinful amusements give them some thing to take the place of what they have lost—something better. It's all up to you, Good People, to gain your ends and also make the operation painless. American people must be amused, try and devise some means of doing it. Don't deprive them of any thing until you can replace it with something better.

What about that Y. M. C. A.?

FULTON

Keep cool, dear stranger, while in town for fear you have a pain. Our city's pinning on her curls, she's coming to the main. It won't be long before she wins, she's climbing to the top. Then every one in Fulton will be dancing "Fulton Hop." There's hundreds helping Fulton grow—there's thousands looking on. auld mon." If the thousands would take hold the beam They stand with arms akimbo, and cry—"Go easy now, and push, instead of grunt, they'd soon cry with the hundreds "This pushing is a stunt." They'd find their health improving; they'd wear a sunny smile, their hair would not get snarly, their tempers would not rile; they'd laugh instead of cry and then their feet would not play tag; they'd stop that bum old grumbling and that eternal nag; they'd wear a rose upon their coat, they'd wear a ribbon blue; you'd know just by their pleasant phiz, they joined the faithful few. We need the people who take hold and lift through thick and thin, we need the men and women who work hard and do not grin. We know that Fulton has that class, we know they are in town. Come, board our train, dear people; for Eureka we are bound, flow take a strong hold of that beam—Hip, hip—hurrah, now, heave; don't lag, dear comrades; keep it up. Great wonders we'll achieve.

Milady's Mirror

The Beautiful Profile.

It is in profile that the features show perfection or defect. A face that to front view appears symmetrical may in profile present angles and hollows and features that are too sharply delineated for beauty. So study your side view in the mirror.

Note whether the side line of the head is too long. If it is draw the hair a little farther down over the temples and if the line of the face is too long bring the hair forward a bit.

Carrying the chin uptilted ever so slightly diminishes the apparent length of the facial outline and seems to elongate the curve of the throat. If the head is tipped a trifle to the side and back, presenting a broad side face, a good shoulder line is effected, but if either throat or face is thin beware. Hollows will deepen, and the line of the jaw will become a sharp edge.

If the neck and face are too fat the fat is apt to accumulate at this particular point. Sometimes the neck is flat in front and bulging at the sides. Here the side view is distinctly not beautiful. To correct either of these defects practice the head bending exercise. Bend the head from the base of the neck first to one side as far as possible and then to the other, repeating the movements several times.

Removing Dust.

Dust is insidious. A wash cloth and warm water at best remove but little of it from the face. If you really wish to see how much dust the face can take up in a walk take a damp wash cloth when you arrive home and dip it in your cold cream jar. Then scrub face and neck. The wash cloth will be so black that one is horror struck to think that so much dust has been carried on the face even for a short while.

For some reason soap and water do not seem to remove the dust as well as cold cream and warm water. The face should then be sponged off with cold water to tighten the pores, which have been opened by the warm water and dusted with powder that has been chosen to match the color of the skin as nearly as possible. This powder should be wiped off till not a bit of it shows, for nothing is more disagreeable than smears of it on the face.

Her Ideal.

He—What is your masculine ideal? She—A man who has both sand and dust.—Chicago News.

Drink Plenty of Water.

If you would have a clear complexion drink plenty of water between meals and exercise out of doors every day.

Cold water stimulates the membranes of the stomach, and hot water soothes them.

Sipping either is better than swallowing rapidly, and when the taste of hot water is unpalatable a pinch of salt or a dash of lemon juice will improve it. A pinch of soda with the lemon juice is even better.

A rational habit of drinking water will not only improve the health, but will preserve it. Water and milk are both very good to keep the kidneys acting well.

For Tender Feet.

Carbolated vaseline, well rubbed into the skin, is said to be excellent for frostbites.

White cotton stockings should be drawn on the feet, when any cream is used.

Massage after a warm foot bath helps to stimulate the circulation where there is a proneness to cold feet and is a preventive of frostbite.

When Hair Darkens.

Light hair grows darker as one grows older. The woman who is troubled by her hair darkening might add the juice from half a lemon to next to the last rinsing water when she washes her hair. If her hair is not too dry it will not harm it to put a teaspoonful of borax in the shampoo bath.

A hair restorer is composed of twice as much Jamaica rum as castor oil and a few drops of either oil of roses or lavender. Rub it well into the scalp, being careful not to have any more than possible touch the hair.

Sties on the Eyelid.

Sties are occasioned by the irritation of the hair follicle out of which an eyelash springs. They should be opened as soon as the pus is formed, for they will not get well as long as the pus remains.

For inflammation of the follicles and scaliness add to an ounce of vaseline fifteen grains of precipitated sulphur. In applying this ointment it is well to warm it a little.

Unconscious Frowns.

Don't narrow your eyes when you wish to be impressive. If you draw your mouth into a button and allow deep lines to pucker between your eyes you will acquire a habitual cross expression. Is anything more unpleasant than an angry face with its features tied in veritable knots?

BELTED GOWNS.

Quaint Variations of This Style Favored For Youthful Figures.

BELTED SPRING SUIT.

The belted suit or the suit with the simulated belt is promised as a style leader among spring costumes. White, tan, putty and neutral shades prevail for these gowns.

A jaunty spring suit of white broadcloth is shown here. The skirt, partially circular, is laid in inverted box plaits in front. The loosely fitting jacket is belted with white kid and has a cutaway peplum falling in points at the side. Trimmings are of white novelty buttons. Worn with it is a wide brimmed sailor hat of blue satin.

Young, but Accomplished.

Woman—Does that parrot swear? Dealer—Very prettily, mum, for so young a bird.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

WOMEN IN BUSINESS.

Worry About Work Doesn't Pay in the Long Run.

Business women frequently allow their responsibilities to weigh too heavily upon them. They do not forget their cares, but take them home, discuss them at the dinner table, take them to bed and once more they are heard at the breakfast table.

It is small wonder that business eventually drives them and the family to the point of tense nerves and much unhappiness.

The brain should not be robbed of its peace, especially at night, for nothing wears off its finer edge more quickly than worry, which naturally encourages insomnia.

Every effort should be made to indulge in outdoor diversions, active and passive, so as to suit one's needs and moods.

Long hours of office work and household labor shoud be followed by periods of play, mental or physical relaxation, which serve as a balance wheel. Depression is sometimes due to too little physical exercise. Few people suffer from fatigue where the circulation is normally active.

Trying to Cure Insomnia.

The immediate cause of insomnia is the presence of too much blood in the brain. The feet go to sleep first, so use a hot water bag or a soapstone first of all to see if you cannot draw the blood to the extremities or soak the feet in hot mustard water just before retiring, but you must not do this too often.

If very nervous put a mustard plaster at the back of the neck. The little ones already prepared and sold at the drug store for 5 cents each are nice for this purpose. One of the simplest and usually an effective method is to place a hot water bottle on the stomach. Never use drugs. They deaden, but do not heal.

Why Boards Have Knots.

Some boards have knots because they are made from trees having many branches. The knot in the board is part of the root of the branch in the trunk of the tree. When you see a knot it means that before the tree was cut down and the log sawed up into boards the limb was growing out from the inside of the tree at the spot where the knot occurs. The wood in the knot is harder than the rest of the board because more strength is needed at the base of a branch and in that part of it growing in the tree than in other parts. This is necessary to make the branch strong enough to support not only itself, but also the smaller limbs growing out from it.—Boston Herald.

Other men are lenses through which we read our own minds.—Emerson.

THE KNAPSACK BELT.

New Suit That Shows This Sartorial Embellishment.

GABARDINE AFTERNOON GOWN.

An afternoon frock of sand colored silk gabardine, the full skirt gathered and plaited and hemmed with a stiff corded band, is pictured here. The bodice is long sleeved and high collared, the belt crossing in knapsack fashion over a tiny peplum at the back. Trimmings of dark blue embroidery and small self covered buttons adorn the frock.

In For It.

Modest Suitor—I have only $5,000 a year, sir, but I think I will be able to support your daughter on that. Father (enthusiastically) — Support her, my dear boy! Why, you can support her entire family on it!—Boston Transcript.

SPRING GARMENTS.

Fuller Skirts Characteristic of the New Season's Styles.

The fuller skirt is the notable feature of the new season styles. It is accompanied by simple bodices, with high neck, narrow shoulders and long sleeves. The waist line is either normal or raised, says the Dry Goods Economist, speaking of spring fashions.

Suit coats include tailored and demi-tailored effects, with preference for the tailored. Tailored coats with belts placed at a high or slightly raised waist line are particularly strong at present. Flare effects are also emphasized.

Separate coats have considerable flare at the bottom edge and are being shown in three-quarter length or slightly shorter. High waist line effects are very prominent, and belts are being freely used.

Skirts of dresses and suits and also separate skirts include the circular and gathered forms, together with box and side plaited effects. Dress skirts include the ruffled and tiered designs, together with a limited number of voluminous tunics accompanying narrow underskirts. Yokes are used on many of the new skirts.

Bandeau For the Hair.

A hair ornament that is very attractive and one that would make an acceptable gift is of rhinestones mounted on blue velvet. There is a narrow bandeau to go about the head and two curved ends that stand upright. They are all formed of a string of rhinestones held on a wired twist of sapphire blue velvet.

A Blackboard For the Children.

Many mothers want something to entertain the young child so well and so long that they may read or sew or attend to household duties undisturbed for an hour at a time.

It has been found that children work longest over blackboards, probably owing to the ease and the fun of erasing, an act of destruction which delights them and yet in some way is passed unchided by the superior powers. Next to this they like crayons and chalk on paper, and least of all paint.

They enjoy the water and the messing for a time, but the spreading of the paint, while they imagine it to be an ocean, seems to detract from the clarity of the image which the child had in view when he started.

Amusing sketches and actual school work may be undertaken on the blackboard. As to the board itself, a small, light, unbreakable easel shaped board worth a dollar or less is the one best liked and best suited to the children.

COOKING SCHOOL OPENED TODAY

Prof. Eastman Will Give a Series of Free Cooking Lessons at the Katz Store

Beginning today and continuing every afternoon from 2:30 until 4 o'clock, W. F. Eastman, president of the National Pure Food Health Club of Chicago, will give to the public, a course of lectures and a demonstration in baking in the basement of the Katz Company, First street store. Mr. Eastman was formerly professor at Lead College, Black Hills, in the western part of South Dakota for twenty years and for five years was president of the university. He comes highly recommended, being an exceptional authority in his line. The principal object of the club organization is to promote home and food reform and to unite all in a general system of home education, promoting health by proper diet and exercise, abdominal breathing, the study of physical, mental and the spiritual laws.

Cooking Schools

Cooking schools at the present time are established throughout twelve states in this country and they are meeting with great success everywhere. President Eastman of the national organization, expects shortly to perfect such an organization in New York State. All newly organized local clubs will become federated with the State body in which this reform movement will be carried on most extensively. After these clubs and cooking schools are thoroughly established, the officials expect to go before each State legislature and endeavor to have bills passed covering these paramount reforms. Training schools under the care of the local clubs will also be maintained and funds will be secured for this purpose.

Favors Eugenics

Professor Eastman for a great number of years has seen the needs for specializing along pure food reforms. He says the standard for marriage should be raised, in most states it is too low, to be of legal age and unmarried and able to raise the statutory fee is not enough. In advocating the standard, all should be industrious, moral and free from hereditary taint, every bride-elect should give satisfactory proof that she has taken training in the latest food study, and their preparation to promote health, before assuming her sacred duties in a home.

The National Pure Food Health Club has its headquarters in Chicago and since its organization in this country, a great work has been accomplished in the designing and protecting the laws and advocating reform throughout this country. The officers of the national club are: Mr. W. Fillmore Eastman, national president; B. P. Snell, secretary-treasurer; and C. K. Lipplatt, business manager.

Made Angel Food Today

Angel food was made before the audience today and the technique explained so anyone can make the beautiful cake and have them healthful and nourishing. These classes and lectures are at 2:30 o'clock each day and are free to all. Prof. Eastman said:

"How many of you make Angel Food? Only one hand went up. As this is one of our most popular cakes I want you all to learn how to make it. All our cakes are started in a cold oven. We use no baking powder. Our cake molds do not require any greasing for any kind of cake. They are sanitary and healthful. They are made of the best charcoal tin and are not expensive. Pure food cakes are made from carefully selected material and contain no adulterations of any kind. The chemistry is right to be healthful. Three things to know and you will be successful:

(a) How to select the right material.

(c) How to manage the oven.

In selecting the material for a cake we must consider the flour and sugar. The advantage of cream of tartar and soda over any kind of baking powder, and the advantage of Snell's flavoring powder over the liquid or alcohol extract. We have a chapter in our book on material for cakes that is educational. It also explains the cold oven system of baking fully. We use soft winter wheat flour. We use fine granulated cane sugar. We dot not like beet sugar for either cake or jelly. Samples were here exhibited of cake made from bothe kinds of sugar. If you use beet sugar you will get beat and if you try to make an Angel Food with it you will get a "swamp angel."

During the canning and preserving season the sugar question is most difficult. Baking powders are the pure cream of tartar and soda, and do their own measuring and mixing. We teach people how to bake with worst thing the housewife has to deal with. The only way to reform the devil is to let him alone. The way to reform baking powder is not us it. If this reform is adopted by the American people it will save the home makers about ninety millions per year. This means to improve the condition of the toiling masses who are always in a majority. The W. C. T. U. endorse the use of our flavoring powders and keep them for sale in many places. Our oven system is scientific and ensures success.

All cakes should be raised before they are baked. We have the time worked out for you for each cake. We tell you how to manage your heat to be successful and happy.

STATE WEEDING OUT IS COMING

Have No More of Blacksmiths Holding Stenographic Positions

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

(Albany Manager of the International News Service.)

Albany, Feb. 22.—An examination with questions as pointed as any asked by the State civil service commission is being made of employes of the State by Senate finance committee to determine if there are those on pay rolls who could be eliminated without crippling the service.

Firm in his belief that there are a number of employes in the several State departments who are engaged in outside work, Senator Sage, chairman of the finance committee is behind the move to learn if he is correct in his belief. Every employe in the State has been sent a huge blank containing a list of questions and plenty of space in which to write down the answers.

Among the questions are these:

Legal residence at time of entering the State service.

Title of office or position.

Duties (specify in detail)

Time devoted to duties, hours per day, days per week, weeks per year.

When appointed or elected to present position?

Term of office or employment; is it fixed by statute or otherwise?

By whom appointed to present position?

By what authority (give section of statute)?

Class, competitive or otherwise.

Date of examination, if any for present position.

If appointed in exempt class how long prior to appointment was position so classified.

Occupation at time of entering State service.

What other occupation or business, if any, in 1914. Fees received in 1914 if any; reimbursements for expenses in 1914, if any; other payments of any kind in 1914 to each individual.

Detailed statement of positions held by each individual giving date and length of service in each position and salary of each and all changes in salary.

It is said that the reason why the most pointed of the above questions are asked is because under the administration of William Sulzer and Martin H. Glynn a number of places which had at one time been in the classified service were made exempt and that also places which were exempt were made permanent. Many persons are holding State positions, Senator Sage says, who in his judgment are not entitled to occupy the places to which they were appointed.

In order that a thorough investigation might be made of the question of fitness for office, the entire finance committee has divided itself into subcommittees to visit the various State departments. One member of the committee is a sub-committee and with him on his visits there goes a memebr of the Senate not in the finance committee. The discovery has been made already that there is a blacksmith who is being paid for stenographic services.

All the above questions must be answered and the entire examination ended by March 15th of the present year. The finance committee will pass upon the fitness of the employes to continue to hold office and will submit its report to the legislature for adequate remedial legislation.

The new civil service commission is also making an investigation as to the personnel of the State employes and in eaddition is looking into the number of places which were exempted and placed in the classified list by the commission which preceded it.

THORPE—COLE

The marriage of William N. Thorpe to Miss Cora B. Cole, both of Fulton, took place at the parsonage of the State Street Methodist church yesterday afternoon. The Rev. Howard D. Holmes performed the ceremony. The couple were attended by Fred M., and Lillian B. Wells.

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS

Mrs. Terry of New York, who has been assisting berm other, Mrs. E. V. VanWagenen, in closing her home here, returned to the metropolis this morning.

GRASSHOPPERS IN FULTON

Little Girl Captured Some of Them Yesterday. Robin Also Seen.

Yesterday afternoon a number of children were sliding down 7th street hill, near Highland, and were surprized to see several small grasshoppers jumping about over the snow. A little Miss, about seven years of age, Libbie Phillips by name, capture two of the insects and took them home to show her mother, who, very kindly preserved the hoppers in a glass for our reporter's inspection.

The little things seemed more dead than alive last night, but that might have been caused from their close confinement, for, after a little coaxing and careful handling, they began to hop about the room, much to the delight of the children.

John S. Frawley of the West Side reports having seen a robin on First street yesterday morning. Frawley claims that the bird very much resembled a robin that has built its nest in a large maple tree in Hannibal st. for a number of years.

It seems that the bird at one time was in captivity and the jailer had placed a small band about its right leg before liberating it. The robin seen by Frawley had just such a band upon its leg, and hence, Frawley's belief that this bird was the same one as has been seen for several years in that locality.

GEORGE WASHINGTON'S LIVING REPRESENTATIVE

As hereditary representative of George Washington in the Society of the Cincinnati and in virtue of direct, incontestable descent from an older half brother and a younger full brother of the first President, William Lanier Washington, of New York city is recognized as the head of the Washington family. The distinction of representing the Father of His Country in the Cincinnati, the society of descendants of officers who served in the American army in the Revolutionary war, is most interesting in itself, since it carries with it recognition by historians and genealogists as being the leading male member of the Washington family.

Mr. Washington has said, however, that there are others equally as closely related to Washington himself and that he cannot and does not claim exclusively relationship to George Washington.

He is directly descended from Augustine Washington 2d, the eldest half brother of George Washington, who left issue. His only son, Colonel William Augustine Washington, married Jane Washington, the eldest child of Colonel John Augustine Washington, who was a full brother of George Washington. It is from this union of a nephew and niece of George Washington that William Lanier Washington is descended in the eldest male line.

A BABEL OF TONGUES.

The World's Languages Now and What May Be in the Future.

How many men, if asked how many languages there are in the world, could give anything like an accurate answer? The average man's knowledge or ability to speak languages rarely exceeds two besides his native tongue.

It may appear strange, but it is nevertheless true, that there are over 4,000 languages spoken by mankind, while the number of dialects exceeds this. There are more than sixty vocabularies in Brazil, and in Mexico the Nahua is broken up into some 700 dialects. There are hundreds in Borneo, and in Australia there is no classifying the complexities. Let us assume that fifty dialects, on an average, belong to each language and we have the colossal total of 200,000 linguistic abilities.

A century hence the probability is that there will only be four languages of importance in the world. Central Europe may produce a newer and more straightforward German language. Imperial English may reign alone over the North American continent, while a more businesslike Spanish will be used in South American states. Then Russia may take on some more rich Slavonic dialect, which will blend the races of eastern Europe and central Asia into a harmonious federation. So that in future these four languages will enter into what may be a never ending competition.—Exchange.

Dangerous Proficiency.

"What was the matter with your last cook?"

"She was too good."

"Too good?"

"Yes. During the month she was with us my wife gained twenty pounds."

"Gracious! What did you do with her?"

"My wife?"

"No, the cook."

"My wife very cordially recommended her to a woman she hates."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Hair Curlers.

Curlers of any description are none too good for the hair, but the kinds where the hot iron does not come in contact with the hair itself are best. Then the kid one, where no iron at all is used, is better still.

ERRORS OF SCULPTORS.

Statues in England Noted For Crude Blunders in Modeling.

Some of the statues in public places in England are notable for certain unique symbols or glaring errors in modeling. One of the former kind is the statue of Sir Anthony Ashley at Wimborne, Dorset. Carved out of a stone at the feet of the figure is a faithful representation of a cabbage, indicating that Sir Anthony introduced the vegetable from Holland into England.

Even more peculiar is the carving on one of the four panels on the Queen Victoria statue in George square, Glasgow. The subject is the knighting of James Anderson, the lord provost of that city. As no sword was available the ceremony was performed with an umbrella, and the substitute has been copied by the sculptor. This same statue is incorrect in one important detail. The stately pose of the horse is negatived by the position of the hind legs—a position which is only possible when a horse is racing at full speed.

Perhaps the worst equestrian statue in the world is that erected in front of Trinity college, Dublin, to the memory of King William III. Among other faults, one of the forelegs of the horse is straight and the other curved considerably, yet both hoofs kept side by side on the pedestal.—London Spare Moments.

Our Longest Canal.

The longest canal in the United States is the Erie canal, which covers a distance of 387 miles. The Florida East Coast canal is 350 miles long and runs from Mayport, Fla., to Miami. The Miami and Erie canal, between Cincinnati and Toledo, O., is 274 miles long. There are three canals in Pennsylvania, the Schuylkill Navigation company, between Mill Creek and Philadelphia, 108 miles; the Pennsylvania, between Columbia, Northumberland and Wilkesbarre, 198 miles, and the Lehigh Coal and Navigation company, between Coalport and Easton, 108 miles long. The longest canal in Europe is the Berlin-Stettin, 120, and the next longest, the Suez, 108 miles.—Philadelphia Press.

Beauty of Zambezi Falls.

To realize fully the wondrous beauty of the Zambesi falls, Rhodesia, one must have time to linger and watch the ever changing scene. The depths of the chasm below are veiled from sight by the rising columns of opalescent mist, and above the yawning abyss the sun glints and sparkles, weaving the drops into a magnificent rainbow. Three hundred feet below roars and boils the swirling flood as it emerges from the Boiling Pot, rushing on down the zigzag gorge between towering cliffs of rock, narrow, fierce and of unfathomable depth.—African World.

She Was Frank.

The moving picture director was having trouble in getting one of the scenes right. The girl was supposed to resist an attempt to kiss her, but the rehearsal was far from satisfactory.

"Think, now," said the director, coaching her, "haven't you ever tried to stop a young man from kissing you?"

"No," was the girl's frank reply.—London Answers.

Modern Superciliousness.

NEW YORK'S NEW FASHION TIPS

New Hats, Neckwear, Color Combinations;. Death of the "Slouch;" New Silhouette

New York, Feb. 19.—Hats of silk, satin and panne velvet are very smartly endorsed for the present wear here, and those that have a touch of straw in their make up will be useful for a long thime to come. Small turban shapes are rather in the lead, but sailors and a little round crowned Derby shape run them a close second.

McCall Design

Contrasting color notes are the salient feature in most of the new hats, and this is obtained in a great variety of ways. The spotting of the tremendously popular sailor tie, that circles so many of the crowns, ending with the characteristic floating ends that Jackies wear in a breezy fashion whihch the girls closely follow. Small dahlias of vivid colorings are prime favorites for hat garniture, grapes and diminutive fruits are also popular and a melange of color is the usual thing, rather than any single tone.

An Advance Model

An advance model pretty and practical, was a small Tipperary turban, the crown of black satin, the brim of plaided straw in green, and blue mixture. Right at the front standing out above the crown was a disk shape ornament of knife pleated silk and net. Except for the sailor tie this was the sole and sufficient ornament. A Derby of satiny split straw tipped at a rather rakish angle, had no other trimming than a loose strap of its own material and one of the double ended jet pins that are so fashionably perched askew at any desirded point on the crowns of the various small shapes which are nearly or quite brimless as well as on wide brimmed sailor types.

One notices a tendency to combine putty shades with navy blue, in many of the late dress creations. Often this takes the form of a blue silk or satin blouse, the sleeves and skirt developed in putty color, or the blue will appear in the sleeves and girdle. reen is similarly employed for contrast but is not so good with putty as with black. One sees quite a bit of peacock blue as a trimming contrast, and narrow fancy ribbons in this shade with red and other vivid tints in their pattern are used, braid fashion, on hats and waists, with attractive results. Navy blue and very dark purple is a peculiarly French combination and dashes of coral pink bring out the lines in otherwise tame looking white suits and blouses.

The New Silhouette

Trig and natty is the new fashionable silhouette, with not a trace left of the "slouch" of a year ago. However loose the dress my hang below, it is fitted at the bust, and the figure held erect in true military fashion, with a well-modelled corset having enough bones to secure trim outlines.

There is nothing stiff or awkard in the fashionable poise, quite the contrary and a pretty girl looks her best in the new Spring models.

Net dresses of the old time flounced sort the edges of the flounce bound with silk or satin, or trimmed with bead edgings, silk quiltings, etc., are very much liked, and are an excellent investment for the woman who wants to get the utmost wear from her fussy frock. For a mourning dress toilet few selections are as satisfactory. The flounces are rather smartest cut straight and gathered, in overlapping style. The number to a skirt depending on the height and taste of the wearer.

Accordeon plaited dresses of three or more tiers are very good style, the satin bindings of the flounces producing the correct flare.

The girlish set has adopted enthusiastically the frilly type of neck dressing that covers the neck to the chin. The sort of thing familiar in Sarah Bernhardt's pictures, and in medieval portraits. This seems a little queer with a tailor-made rig, but one soon gets used to it, and the transparent white frill is a boon to screen signs of wear under the chin, but the style is trying if the neck is short.

The various wide ruches and collars that end just in front of the shoulder line, mounted on black velvet bands, either plain or ornamented, are so smart and generally becoming that their popularity is easy to understand, while the fact that the high collared plain net gamp is once more worn by nearly everyone is good news to practical women who like their easy adjustment and becoming freshness.

Lunar Vegetation.

Professor Pickering of the Harvard astronomical observatory declares that there is nothing less true than that the moon is without air, water or vegetation. There are certain large lunar areas that darken toward lunar noon and fade out toward lunar sunset. They correspond in some degree to the so called Martian seas, and Professor Pickering uses the term "fields" to describe these plains or slopes, which he believes to be covered with vegetation. He is convinced that the dark fields to be seen during the lunar summer do not owe their blackness to shadow, for you can see them at full moon when shadows are absolutely invisible. The blue-black color of the fields and canals, he argues, can therefore be owing only to a discoloration of the surface that comes alike on slopes and levels in the lunar summer, and that is invisible in the spring and autumn. We know of no mineral that acts in that manner, and the only possible explanation seems to be that it is the result of a covering of vegetation.—Youth's Companion.

The Smoker's Paradise.

Mexico may be called the smoker's paradise—plenty of good, cheap tobacco in that country, where the leaf grows freely. Furthermore, no tax is levied upon it. One may buy in Mexico a cigar, every bit as good as the average ten cent brand in this country, for a sum equivalent to two and a half cents of our money. Cigarettes are cheap in proportion. To protect the domestic article Mexico levies a prohibitive tax upon imported tobacco, so that no Mexican thinks of buying an American cigar. The laboring classes are able to buy two boxes of cigarettes, containing ten each, for two and a half cents in our money. The tobacco in these is the sun dried natural leaf and of coarse grade, with coarse paper wrappings. The market is abundantly supplied also with cigarettes of high grade tobacco in the best paper wrappings. For the most part the Mexican takes his tobacco in the form of cigarettes.—New York Tribune.

The Chins of Burma.

The Chins of Burma are divided into a large number of clans, and a man may not marry a woman of his own clan, but after the marriage ceremonies are over the wife is initiated into her husband's clan and has her wrists wrapped round with cotton yarn as a witness to all evil spirits that she is under the guardianship of the kun, or ancestry, of her husband. The Chins are afraid of witches; but, as has been the case with other peoples, they find great difficulty in learning for certain whether a given woman is a witch or not. If they knew it they would certainly drive the woman out of the village and perhaps resort to further violence. Like the Burmese, they believe that witches have the power by their incantations to introduce foreign matters into the bodies of those whom they hate and so to cause them to die.

The First London Directory.

The great family of Smith, Brown, Jones and Robinson had not spread so far over London when the first directory was published as it has now. Only eighteen Smiths, ten Browns, nine Joneses and four Robinsons figure in it, the Cooks, Halls, Hills and Kings being almost as numerous. There were then but five London bankers, or "goldsmiths that keep running cash," as the directory describes them—Richard Blanchard & Child, at the Marygold, in Fleet street; Mr. Coggs, in the Strand, at the King's Head; Benjamin Hinton, at the Flower de Luce, in Lombard street; James Herriott, at the Naked Boy, in Fleet street, and James Johnson, at the Three Flower de Luces, in Lombard street.—London Graphic.

Dresses and Flowers.

If you have had a waist or a light dress stained by wearing a bunch of flowers you will appreciate how much trouble might be saved by owning a chamois case to cover the stem. Make this by stitching into shape a piece of chamois the desired size. Into this case may be slipped the stems of any short-stemmed flowers, and then they may be carried or worn without staining waist, glove or gown.—Exchange.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, Feb. Feb. 20.—State banking department officials are well pleased with the operation of the land bank, created last year to fill a void in the rural districts of the State. The law has proved so substantial and adequate that there will be no legislation this year aimed to amend or strengthen it.

The land bank commenced business with a capital of $100,000. It has a membership of over forty savings and loan associations located throughout the State with resources totaling over $16,000,000. A number of associations of this character are expected to join the bank in the near future.

The problem that the land bank is called upon to solve is that of financing the refunding of the land mortgage indebtedness of the people of the State of New York so far as they themselves desire it to be placed upon the amortization plan. The purpose of the bank is to afford people the opportunity to rid themselves of mortgage indebtedness by making installment payments. It contemplates the wiping out of renewal charges on loans by writing the mortgage for a term of years sufficient to enable the borrower to pay his debts and clear his property of incumbrance. Debtors of this class alone may be helped by the land bank.

Incidentally the land bank will secure mortgage money for these people at the lowest possible rate of interest and will give this borrowing class all over the State alike, the benefit in this particular of fair interest rates. There will come a State-wide flat rate or interest, the maximum that can be obtained in the current money markets of the country. That these are pressing matters is unquestionably proven by the interest that has been aroused in all parts of the state and by the correspondence which has been received by the institution since its incorporation a few weeks ago.

Under the law authorizing the land bank its principal office is in the city of New York. Its officers are B. G. Parker, Gouverneur; vice presidents, D. B. Hutton, Brooklyn; W. H. Judson, New York; B. E. Stanton, Troy; J. G. Farwell, Geneva; secretary-treasurer, John J. Dillon, New York; managing director, Edwin F. Howell, New York.

According to Managing Director Howell, the payment of mortgage loans is not new in this country. In fact, to a greater or less extent, there are small community land banks in every State of the Union. In the State of New York these local banks are known in the banking law as savings and loan associations. There are about two hundred and fifty of them in operation with about $70,000,000 already invested in amortizing mortgages, with a trained corps of appraisers and credit men located in all parts of the State and using for the purpose funds derived from the people of their own communities.

Director Howell points out that instead of the mere two hundred and fifty societies now in existence there should be fifteen hundred such community associations in this State. He points out that New Jersey has seven hundred of them with two hundred and fifty thousand members and $125,000,000 invested in amortizing mortgages. New York, he says with nearly four times the population, has little more than one-third the number of organizations.

It is the further contention of Director Howell that all the benefits that any community will derive from the land bank in the way of interest rates for money relief from unfair renewal charges and the opportunity to repay mortgage debts by amortization, will come to that community only by its own efforts.

CURLEY SAYS NO FIGHTING

Claims It's Impossible for Johnson to Be Fit to Enter Ring Mar. 6

By LEWIS T. MATSON

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 22.-Like a bomb froma clear sky the fistic dope went awry today. Jack Johnson's appearance is awaited. Reports earlier in the week had stated that the champion after landing at Tampico was making his way to Juarez, the scene of his fight with Jess Willard on March 6.

And now the fan sees nothing but a postponement of the big fight. With the original date less than two weeks off, and Johnson miles away from the scene of the battlefield, it is impossible that the champion can arrive here and be in per fect condition to defend his title. An unless he is in perfect condition the bout will be postponed.

Jack Curley, the promoter, says:

"There can be no fluke in this contest," he said today. "John son must be in condition when he enters the ring. Both men must be fit when they enter the ring."

In the meantime the arrival of Johnson in Havana has not stopped the workouts in the Wilard camp. The challenger is going through stiff paces every day and his handlers say there will be no let up in his work.

Relics of Old Persia.

Shuster, the old capital of Persia, is one of Iran's wonder cities. In the dawn of Persian civilization it took a leading part. On the bank of the only navigable river the country can boast, the city gets its name from the famous ruler, Shapur, who built great irrigating dams and a noble bridge across the Karun, now wrongly credited to the emperor Valerian. Sixteen hundred years have left the great bridge, a quarter of a mile in length, with yawning gaps, but the water of the river runs today through the channels and tunnels made to fertilize a land that had not yet been overrun by the Arabic barbarians who destroyed the culture of Persia.—London Mail.

ONE BOY IN FIVE SKILLED WORKER

New York Reports Show That Few Lads Get Training for Various Trades

New York, Feb. 22.—"Only about one boy in five is a skilled worker," reports Dr. Hyman Cohen, principal of Evening Recreation Centre No. 3.

"There is four times as much suffering from unemployment among the unskilled as among the skilled," he said.

Dr. Cohen's figures are based upon a study of the boys who attend his centre, but they are supported by other studies. Dr. George H. Chatfield, of the Permanent Census Board reported concerning 140,000 young people who had left the public schools.

"The most striking feature is the relatively small representation of workers in skilled trades, even among those between sixteen and eighteen years of age," he said. "If the years between fourteen and eighteen years are not to serve as the period of initial training essential to the development of skill in the earlier years of maturity, it may well be asked when such training is to be expected and how the transfer to skilled occupations will be made."

The public schools are failing to prepare young people for happy and efficient lives. Let us change them. Why not?

The committee oppointed to study the teacher-mothers and Board of Education subject is said to have decided that teacher-mothers are to be compelled to stay out of school for two years when their babies are born.

Some of these teachers say they don't want to stay out; their doctors say that it is not necessary.

Do you remember the policeman who said: "It is not because I hate you that I beat you, but because I have the authority to do so"?

A few days ago Susan Look Avery died at Wyoming, N. Y., at the age of ninety-seven. When, as a young girl, she became a school teacher in Kentucky, she met squarely the great social problem of her generation, and in a slave community she became an abolitionist.

For three generations she remained a leader.

Speaking at a public dinner when she was ninety-four years old, she said:

"Voltaire was quite right when he said: 'It is more difficule and more meritorious to win men from their prejudices than to civilize barbarians.' 'The strongest force in human affairs is inertia.' 'It is bad for the ignorant and vicious to do ill, but it is worse for the educated and the honest to do nothing.'"

I don't know much about schools. Fourteen years of study are not enough for that tremendous problem, the greatest that our generation has to solve.

But what I know about them forces me to believe that the people who say "Leave the schools alone" are either ignorant or selfish.

"Make friends," she replied at once. "There are three thousand five hundred boys and girls here, and I don't think that one is lonely.

"We have a great many clubs—nearly fifty—groups of young people working and playing together, carrying out their own ideas in their own way. They have camera clubs, walking clubs, dramatic, glee, debating, and even shooting clubs."

As we passed through the corridors—it was after school hours—I saw rooms fairly bubbling with boys and girls, very active and very gay. There was a fine atmosphere of freedom, freindliness and purpose.

"Do they work as well as they play?" I asked my friend.

"Indeed they do," she replied. "An unusually large proportion of our students enter college. But the boys and girls at Erasmus Hall work not only for their own success; they work for each other.

"The members of the X, Y, Z Club for example, are honor students in mathematics. Every day for the last ten years some of the X Y Z's have stayed after school to help backward students, to keep them from failing. Other clubs are doing similar work in other subjects."

There is no teachers' council in Erasmus Hall, and thhe General Organization of the students has control of after school activities only. There seems to be much spontaneous activity and voluntary co-operation, with little organized democracy.

Possibly the latter is unnecessary where we have the former. I don't know.

BRITISH OFFICERS RUN GAMBLING CLUB IN FRANCE

London, Feb. 22.—A lot of comment has been stirred up by "Popers," as the club attached to British army headquarters in France is called.

Gambling for high stakes takes place there. French officers who have visited Popers as guests of Englishmen have often come away poorer.

Popers derives its name from the initials of the five officers in the Guards who formed it. All officers who pay $50 are admitted. It was thought absurd to make it possible for a man to be blackballed one hour and shot in defence of his country the next.

Popers is a fairly large, square, portable corrugated iron building, or rather room, that can be packed and got ready to move when headquarters shift. It can contain about fifty persons, is comfortably furnished and has a bar at one end, where drinks can be obtained at about four times the prices charged in the best London clubs. Popers is open day and night. A few content themselves with "auction," but poker and baccarat are the big attractions.

Officers coming in from the trenches for a twenty-four hours' rest have been known to spend the whole of it at Popers, except such time as it takes them to get a hot bath and a change into clean underwear and khaki. You see men sitting at the green baize covered tables at Popers winning or losing hundreds, even thousands(who in a few hours will be on their way to the trenches, or who have come safely out of a desperate assault made on a German position four or five hours before.

George Wyndham, the night before he went into the action in which he received the wounds from which he died, lost $9,000 in three hours at Popers, and another officer in the Life Guards, killed in the same action, left Popers at 2 a.m. with a check from Mr. Behrens, a nephew of Lord Rothschild and a lieutenant in the 10th Hussars, for $4,000 in his pocket. The Prince of Wales is a frequene visitor at Popers; so is Prince Arthur of Connaught There was a big night at Popers just before Christmas, when General Joffre, with some of his staff, paid a visit to the British headquarters.

One French staff officer lost $500, another came away $2500 to the good, and the Prince of Wales won $1,500 as the result of a six hours' flutter. Prince Arthur of Connaught is reputedly a loser and one of the unluckiest gamblers at headquarters. Three nights in succession his royal highness lost $7,500, $2,500 and $2,000.

General French permits the existence of Popers on certain conditions. These are that no officer shall have to retire from the service on account of his losses or be involved in any transaction due to his losses that would necessitate his being cashiered and that no women enter the club. Several women, who are relatives or friends of officers, visit headquarters, and it is the particular desire of some of them to visit Popers, but so far, despite all the clever intriguing of these women, they have been rigidly debarred from enjoying a night at Popers.

There is, indeed, a story that the wife of a peer in the Life Guards took part in a flutter at Popers clad as an officer, but the story has not been well substantiated. If it were it would certainly result in the end of the headquarters Monte Carlo.

ROUND ABOUT

Charles Schwab left today for an exteuded trip to the San Francisco Exposition. En route Mr. Schwab will witness the Johnson-Willard bout in Juarez, Mexico next month. On the return trip he will stop at Seattle, Lincoln, DesMoines, Salt Lake City, Duluth, Minneapolis, Chicago, Cleveland and other points of interest. His cousin, Mrs. Henry Greenagel, will accompany him to the Exposition.

"Billy" Sunday is the best money-making evangelist in the world, receiving enormous sums for his work. In fact he has got to the point now where it is doubtful if he would consider a campaign with less than $25,000 in sight. In a recent issue of the Democrat and Chronicle a Bergen man had a communication in which he quotes a paragraph from the Pittsburgh Gazette-Times giving a few of "Billy's collections. Here they are: Columbus, O., $20,029; McKeesport, Pa., $13,438; Wilkes-Barre, Pa., $23,188; Johnstown, Pa., $16,008; Toledo, O., $15,423; Newcastle, Pa., $14,000; Pittsburgh, $44,288. A total of $146,374. In addition the Gazette-Times said that he made $12,000 out of his hymn books in Pittsburgh.

Louisa Y. Foote, widow of J. B. Foote of Sodus, is engaged, at the age of 88 years, in writing her memories on a typewriter at the home of her son, W. Y. Foote, of Syracuse. Mrs. Foote does all her work without the aid of eyeglasses and her mental faculties are as keen as those of a person many years her junior. She was born in Dewitt, N. Y. Her father was an itinerant Methodist preacher and traveled from Dewitt to Watertown, six weeks being required for the journey. His daughter has seen primitive methods give way to such wonders as the Erie canal, then street railways. She was one of the first women to ride on horse cars and witnessed the laying of the first ties of the New York Central railroad in this section. She believes the women of today live longer and endure less drudgery. Mrs. Foote is well remembered by many in the vicinity of Sodus from her husband's pastorate there.

Gas and electric rate schdules must hereafter be filed with the Public Service Commission and kept in convenient form for inspection in the offices of all corporations and municipalities where contracts for such service are made or payment for same received. This order of the Public Service Commission went into effect this week. It is hoped through this means to prevent discrimination. The rate schedules must be printed on some model form and be available to all customers. They must give both present and proposed rates, regulations, privileges and facilities under each rule.

Formal denial that the Hamburg-American line had ever contemplated the sale of its ships interned in American ports to the United States Government was made recently before the special Senate investigating committee by William G. Sickel, vice director of the steamship company. Out of the Hamburg-American fleet of 40 vessels, Mr. Sickel said, only nine were for sale, and these were old freighters. The line was prepared, he added, according to advices received from Germany, to hold its vessels for five years.

The Costly Legislature.

Senator Bennett is not likely to make himself popular with his colleagues by calling for an investigation of legislative expenditures, but he is doing good service nevertheless. The Legislature of 1914, he shows by compilation of statistics, cost the taxpayers more than $7,000 per member, exclusive of the $1,500 a year salary and the allowance for mileage. That is approximately the rate of expenditure for recent legislatures.

The money goes for printing, clerk hire, supplies—which in some years have included everywhere from spring water to playing cards and cologne—and expenses of the numerous legislative investigations which have been popular lately, with their "honest graft" in the way of counsel fees, clerk hire, stenographers' minutes and the like. This rate of expenditure makes each legislator, whose salary is modest enough, figure out about $10,000 a year in cost to the state.

One great trouble is that the legislators—most of them—are not $10,000 a year men. The legislative methods impose huge expenses on the state which are unwarranted. There is politics—small, job-grabbing politics—in the distribution of clerks' places, and there are clerks and stenographers drawing pay from the state who are of no more use than teeth are to a hen. The "contingent funds" are grab bags for expenditures many of which no efficient business house would sanction for a moment in the conduct of its affairs. Most of the legislative investigations are a sheer waste of money, so far as production of results in laws is concerned, and there are few in the memory of the present political generation which have not been more junket than investigation.

Senator Bennett can do good public service by hammering away on this line. The present administration is talking economy at the top of its lungs. Maybe it will really try to save money which is shamefully wasted by the Legislature, if enough attention is called to the waste.—Tribune, N.Y.

MINUTES IN MANHATTAN

By Gotham Knickerbocker

International News Service Special Dispatch

New York, Feb. 22.—New York is never tired of discussing the mystery of the Wendels. No one has ever suggested an even probable explanation of the strangest family in America.

The four Wendel sisters have $60,000,000.

Three unmarried sisters live on Fifth avenue in an antique $5,000 house on a lot assessed at $1,897,000. The fourth (married) lives on Central Park West.

The four sisters have been enormously wealthy from birth.

They have never ridden in an auto.

hey have never been on a yacht.

They have never attended a theatre.

They have not been in a church for twenty years.

They never wear any article of jewelry.

They have never used a telephone.

They have never used an elevator.

They never give a social entertainment or receive callers.

So far as known, they have never given money to charity.

Like little grey mice in an abandoned church, the three Wendel sisters flit about their strikingly ugly big house just opposite the Union League Club. A great department store has reared itself across the street on one side. A tall office buildings overlooks another side. The magnificent new New York public library is one block away. Their home lies midway between the imposing Grand Central and Pennsylvania terminals. The subway half circles them, being one block away on the east. They dwell in what has just become the heart of the fashionable shopping section. Before their doors streams the most magnificent procession of private vehicles to be seen anywhere in the Western Hemisphere, if not in the world. What is behind those doors?

Now and then an old employe of the great Wendel estate, second in wealth only to the holdings of the Astors, passes into the hall, the floor of which shows bare tiles in geometrical patterns without covering. The hall is reached by three sets of doors. In the rear of the hall is a great wooden stairway, and from the massive balustrade a ponderous iron gas jet gives a faint glimmer of light. The Wendels do not use electricity. Don't they approve of it? Nobody knows.

From the hall open the library, parlor and diningroom, all kept exactly as they were when the builder of the house, John Wendel, died in 1859. The floor, of colored tiles, is scarcely relieved of its bareness by the small rug under the great mahogany table in the center of the room. The furniture is all old and massive. Every picture on the wall, as throughout the house, is covered with white muslin, winter and summer. What is on the floors above I cannot tell you.

Although the building is four stories and a half high, there is no elevator or dumbwaiter. Two middle aged maids wait on the three strange sisters. All the sisters are clad in the same way. They wear black dresses, cut in the style of two generations back. They make their own clothes and wear them until slightly shiny. Their gray hair is drawn tightly back from their foreheads.

On two sides of their house the Wendel sisters have a yard, encompassed by a high wall. This yard is worth about a million dollars. The sisters take exercise here, but only in the evening, when no one can look down upon them from the high buildings nearby.

The life of the fourth sister, Mrs. Luther A. Swope, is almost a replica of her sisters, but she does venture twice a week to the little old fashioned Wendel office at 175 Broadway, bare of telephone or modern office fixture, where the Wendel estate centers its business. She is a slendered, square shouldered woman, who dresses in the styles of 1880 like her sisters. But she is not quite so shrinking as they, she has the firm jaw of her brother, John D. Wendel, who died last December at Santa Monica, Cal., and to her the three maiden sisters turn over the responsibilities of the $60,000,000 fortune.

Aside from Mrs. Swope's regular visits to the Wendel offices the only excursion of the strange quartet into the light of day are their spring trips to their country place at Irvington-on-the-Hudson and the fall trips back to New York. The Irvington estate is even more sequestered than the Fifth avenue dwelling. There is a high surrounding wall. Scarcely a neighbor remiembers ever seeing one of the sisters' faces, except when they arrive for the hot season and when they leave.

Their sole vehicle at Irvington is a two-seated family carry-all, of a type popular in the seventies. It apparently dates from that period. A dealer who has delivered milk and groceries to the house every summer for ten years says he never has seen any of the sisters.

Mrs. Swope's husband is past eighty. They have no children. There were seven members in this generation of the Wendel family and only these four sisters remain. Where will the money go when they die? Will a distant relative some day paint the White Way red with their millions?

Can you suggest what makes these sisters lead this dreary, misanthropic life? Have you your solution of the mystery?

By Frank G. Menke.

New York, Feb. 22.—"Hap" Myers, who first based for the Braves in 1913, wandered into the Boston clubhouse in the middle of the 1913 summer, wearing a necktie that had all the colors of the rainbow—and 18 additional ones.

Manager George Stallings, the most superstitious man in baseball, saw Myers enter, saw the necktie, and nearly threw a fit. Then he hustled off into the presence of owner Jim Gaffney.

"I've found the jinx—I've found it," gasped Stallings.

"You have?" countered Gaffney, who was as much interested in finding the jinx as was Stallings. The Braves were in the throes of a long losing streak and Gaffney was disgusted with the team.

"Yes, I've found it; that Hap Myers is wearing it. But he's worn it for the last time."

"What is it?"

"That necktie of his—that horrible looking sight, that he drapes down from his collar," snapped Stallings. "No wonder we can't win. No wonder we are jinxed. That necktie would hoodoo anybody. But I'll fix it."

Stallings went back to the clubhouse. Myers was there alone. The other players already were on the field in uniform.

"Why aren't you in uniform!" howled Stallings at Myers.

"I got a sore arm, boss, and I'd like to be excused from———"

"You hop into your uniform, and if you ain't in it in five minutes I'll bust your nose," snarled Stallings.

Myers was in uniform within four minutes.

"Now get out into the field," was Stallings' comment. Hardly had Myers left the clubhouse when Stallings nabbed that necktie, rushed out with it and found a street urchin.

"Here, kid," said Stallings. "Here's a necktie and a $1 bill. Drop that necktie into the bag and keep the $1 for yourself."

Stallings was back on the field a few minutes later, Myers came up.

"Boss, I'm not tryin gto soldier—honest I ain't," he said, "my wing is on the fritz. Hurts like blazes."

"Oh, all right," said Stallings, strangely kind and lenient. "You're through for the day, Hap. Hope your arm is all right tomorrow."

Myers hiked for the clubhouse. Fifteen minutes later he rushed back to the field partly dressed in his street clothes.

"Hey, you, Stallings, I've been robbed—robbed I tell you," yelled Myers.

"Quit yelling and tell me what you've lost," said Stallings, suppressing a chuckle.

"Lost? Who said lost?" wailed Myers. "I tell you I have been robbed—robbed—robbed—do you get me?"

"Of what?"

"My necktie—the best necktie I ever had. There wasn't a necktie in Boston to equal it. I thought more of that necktie—"

"Oh, shut up," commented Stallings. "What's the use of yowling about a necktie—especially such a necktie. You're lucky you weren't pinched wearing it."

"That was a good necktie," retorted Myers. "A darned good one if you want to know; it cost me $2."

"All right, charge it up to the club and make the price $3," responded Stallings. "It's worth that much to get rid of it." The Braves won the game that day and Stallings sought out Gaffney and said, "Told you so, didn't I?"

A Mind Reading Craze

By MARTHA V. MONROE

A mind reader had come to town and had given some astonishing public exhibitions. But this had not the effect on the beau monde of an exhibition he gave at the house of Mrs. MacGruder, one of society's leaders. This private entertainment made him fashionable, and every young man who had shaken his brains down into his heels at cotillion parties and every young girl whose aristocratic manners and conserved beauty had given her the right to look down on her sisters who had the brains to take down the dictation of a scientific constructor or a merchant prince was talking about mind reading.

Pete Barnical and Lucy Witridge were sitting together, she on a sofa, he in a chair opposite her. He was holding a skein of yarn on his hands which she was winding into a ball.

"I have heard," said Miss Witridge, "that Mrs. Powelton is very much displeased that Mrs. MacGruder got ahead of her by giving that mind reading exhibition at her house. You see, all society is talking about it. Of course it is greatly to Mrs. MacGruder's credit to have introduced the matter."

"Did the mind reader find out who had the most mind?"

"I don't think that was his object. He told what people were thinking about."

"What were they thinking about?"

"What a question! It wasn't that which was wonderful; it was that he could tell without knowing what they were thinking about."

"How could he tell what he didn't know?"

She lifted her big brown liquid eyes from a tangle in the yarn she was straightening out to his with a kind of puzzled wonder.

"I didn't mean to say," she replied when she had given her brain time to work out an answer, "that he could tell what a person was thinking about without knowing it, but he didn't know it until—until"

"He found it out," supplied Pete.

"No, not that either. The remarkable feature of his performance was the way he found it out."

"How did he do it?"

"How did he do it? Why, he did it by"— She was stalled again.

"Perhaps he didn't know himself."

"That's it. He said he didn't know how he did it."

"What did he do?"

"He took Billy Perkins' hand and, blindfolded, led Billy to what he was thinking about. Then Mr. Horton wrote something on a piece of paper, folded it, put it in an envelope, put the envelope in a book, put the book on the top of the library, and then the"—

"Where did he put the library?"

"The library! He didn't put that anywhere. It was there already."

"Well, then what happened?"

"The mind reader told what was written on the paper, though he had been blindfolded all the time."

"That's nothing remarkable. I'll bet I can tell what you're thinking about this minute."

"I don't believe you can do any such thing."

"Try me. Think of something, and I'll tell you what it is."

"Very well; I've thought of something."

"A pumpkin."

There was contempt in her expression as she looked at him and replied that she wasn't thinking of any such thing.

"Yes, you were. You were thinking of Tom Baxter. You couldn't think of Tom Baxter without thinking of Tom Baxter's head. Tom Baxter's head is a pumpkin!"

"How ridiculous!" But she did not smile. Indeed, she made the exclamation because she didn't quite grasp the logical conclusion.

"I'll tell you what you do," he proceeded, not giving her time to think it all out. "You fix your mind on something and I'll lead you to it."

She spent some time selecting an object, then told him she was ready. He took her hand and led her to the piano.

"I didn't think of that at all," she said.

"I'll try again," he said, still holding her hand, and he led her to a clock on the mantel.

"Wrong again."

He led her to a tete-a-tete in the center of the room. She didn't say whether he was right or not, nor did he ask her. They sank into their respective seats on the tete-a-tete. He still held her hand.

"I can tell you what you are thinking about," he said.

"What?"

"Tom Baxter."

"I'm not."

"Me."

She did not reply to this. She lowered her eyes.

"And I can tell you," he went on, "what you think I'm thinking about."

"What?"

"You're thinking that I'm thinking that I—that I love you."

There was a great deal more of this intellectual conversation, but at this point it became what the world has heard very often, though it is a question if it tires persons. The mind reader had at least given a young man a reasonable excuse to propose.

But why he went so far out of his way to tell a simple truth that she wanted to hear only persons endowed with sentiment know, and they can't tell.

A Rapid Calculation Trick.

By means of a simple arrangement of numbers a calculation can be made which will easily puzzle any unsuspecting person. If the two numbers 41,096 and 83 be written out in multiplication form very few will endeavor to write down the answer directly without first going through the regular work. By placing the 3 in front of the 4 and the 8 back of the 6 the answer is obtained at once, thus: 41,096x83 equals 3,410,968. A larger number which can be treated in the same way is the following: 4,100,589,041,096x83 equals 341,-095,590,410,968.—Popular Mechanics.

HOW TO LOOK TALL.

There are a great many things a girl may do which will add inches to her appearance.

The first rule should be to keep the chin up.

Dress the neck either low or with a very high, tight collar.

The second rule should be to wear the hair dressed high on the head. Never wear a wide pompadour.

The short girl should avoid round trimmings, shoulder draperies and plaits. Her wraps should be long and narrow.

Hair ornaments should be worn high and never large. Hats should be narrow, with some smart feather trimming—narrow and straight up in the air.

Tennis will narrow the hips and strengthen the waist of a short girl.

Standing a great deal—well poised, not leaning against anything—will make one appear taller than one naturally is.

Wheels and the World.

The history of the evolution of locomotion as well as an infinity of other studies of the keenest interest could all be centered in the wheel.

Without wheels we should have no watches, no steering at sea. We should be unable to utilize the waterfalls as motor force, nor should we have hundreds of other things of the utmost attraction and utility.

All our modern civilization has come to us on wheels. All we know about other countries, all the commerce we have established throughout the world and our means of wealth we owe to the wheel. It is difficult to imagine what the world would come to if suddenly all wheels vanished from our midst. No war, no famine, no revolution, could be one-hundredth part as effectual in putting us back centuries as the lack of wheels.

The romance of wheels has gone, never to return again. Wheels are now looked upon merely as accessories, whirling indifferently, faster and faster, but practically ignored.

He Saw the Battle.

There were no war correspondents in Wellington's time, but that his attitude toward such would have been friendly may be judged by a story told by Lady Dorothy Nevill.

At Waterloo the duke noticed a little man in plain clothes, mounted on a sturdy cob, who rode hither and thither in the thick of the fight. He had him brought to him to demand his business, whereupon the man explained that he was traveling for a Birmingham button maker and, chancing to be in Brussels and never having seen a battle, he was taking the opportunity of seeing this one. Wellington not only allowed him to continue his observations, but presently trusted him with a dispatch for one of his generals in the firing line. The safe delivery of the message was rewarded, in more peaceful times, by a comfortable government appointment. —London Opinion.

Plaging the Defendant.

A legal journal says that a suit brought by a portly man against a little man with a hacking cough had gone to the jury, at which time it appeared from the evidence and the instructions of the court that the big man had won the case. After half an hour the jury was called and asked if a verdict had been reached.

"No, your honor," replied the foreman. "We only want to know which is the defendant and which is the plaintiff."

"The large man sitting over there is the plaintiff, and the small gentleman here is the defendant," replied the judge.

The jury filed back to the jury room. In a few minutes they signaled that they had reached a verdict. The judge received it and read:

Early Hand Guns.

When Edward IV. returned to England, in 1471, ten years after he succeeded to the throne, he obtained some forces from his brother-in-law, the Duke of Burgundy, including 300 Flemings armed with hand guns, thus being the first to introduce these weapons into England. Afterward they became common. At first they were fired by the application of a lighted match to the touchhole by the hand. The match was a wick lighted and pressed against the powder in the pan. The invention of a lock to fire the powder in place of the hand was suggested by the trigger of the crossbow. The matchlock fired the arquebus, or harquebus, used by the soldiers of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, in projecting a ball which weighed nearly two ounces.—London Telegraph.

TEN YEARS AFTER

By F. A. MITCHEL.

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Aldrich were dining at a restaurant. They had been married ten years. Mrs. Aldrich sat looking about her, admiring or condemning the apparel of the ladies at other tables, while her husband read an evening paper.

"Tom," said the wife, "there's a bridal couple over there."

Tom looked about him.

"Where?"

"At the table by the middle window."

"Oh!"

"She has a lovely hat."

"How do you know they are bride and groom?"

"How do I know? Everything indicates it."

"What, for instance?"

"Well, in the first place, she is conscious. She looks just as I felt when you and I dined at the Summerset House the day after we were married."

"What else?"

"Look!"

The bride's glass stood midway between her and the man. He took it up and sipped the wine in it. The love-light shone in the eyes of both. He gently moved his own glass toward her, and she, too, sipped, with a repetition of the love glances.

"Very interesting," grunted Mr. Aldrich, resuming his paper.

The waiter brought the dinner. Mr. Aldrich was in the midst of the financial article, and his wife, not caring to wait for him to finish it, helped him to the viands, then helped herself. They ate the first course in silence, and while waiting for the second Mr. Aldrich resumed his paper.

"Tom," said Mrs. Aldrich.

"What?"

"Look."

He followed her eyes in the direction of the supposed bride and groom.

"Well?"

"Don't you see?"

"No, I don't."

"They are holding hands under the table—on the other side—next to the window."

"Touching," said Mr. Aldrich and resumed his paper. A page of advertisements of women's wear was exposed to his wife. She bent forward and scanned it.

When the next course came on Mr. Aldrich had finished the commercial reports and helped the viands. The only remark made during this course by the husband was, "The market closed strong;" the only one by the wife was, "Is my hat straight?"

Between the third and fourth courses Mr. Aldrich looked at his watch, toyed with his wineglass and made one remark: "I shall sell Mop tomorrow. Good sale, I'm sure." The wife replied, "I bought one yesterday."

Meanwhile the wife's attention was divided between the ladies' hats—she was thinking of buying one—and the bride and groom.

"Tom," she said presently, "look."

Again he turned his eyes, poising a mushroom on his fork while doing so. The bride and groom had risen, and the groom was holding the bride's coat for her. As she slipped it on her he folded it about her in a manner to denote excessive tenderness. She looked up into his eyes dove-like.

"Why don't you ever show me such attention?" asked Mrs. Aldrich.

"Because I don't wish to attract the attention of a restaurant full of people."

But Mrs. Aldrich did not hear. She had caught sight of a hat that pleased her.

"Just the thing to go with my tailor made suit. I wonder where she got it."

But at that moment the bride and groom sailed past her, the bride looking as if she were facing a battery of all the eyes in the restaurant, as indeed she was, and the groom looking defiant.

"I wonder," remarked Mrs. Aldrich, "why brides and grooms are so conscious of being observed and yet so bent on giving themselves away, especially in public places."

"Because they can't help it," replied her husband.

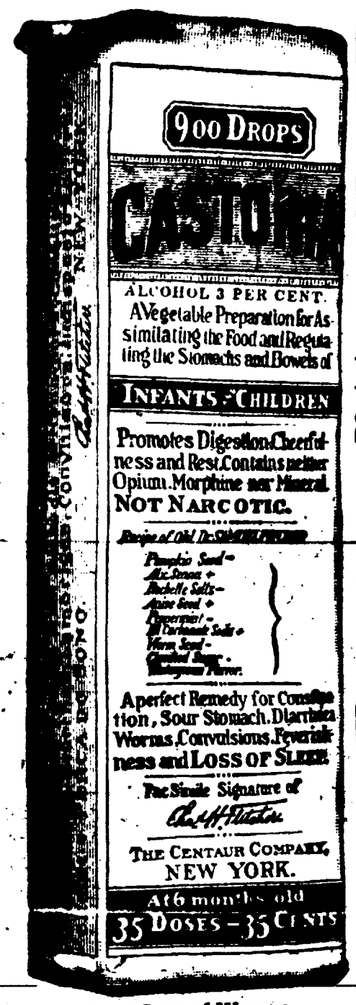
When the repast was finished and the bill was called for Mrs. Aldrich said:

"Do you remember that first dinner we had together after our wedding at the Summerset?"

"The Summerset?" trying to remember.

"Yes. You said to me, 'Anything more, sweetheart?' and when I replied 'Nothing' you said, 'Don't you think you would like an ice?' and when I said 'No' again you said, 'A little cordial to top off with?' And when I declined that you kept on asking me if I would have this and have that."

"How I must have bored you!"



As he made the last remark the waiter laid the bill before him. He did not dispute it, but looked as if he would like to, though the charge was moderate.

"Do you remember, dear," asked his wife, "how at the Summerset, knowing that we were a bride and groom, they stuck you for $19.55 when the cost wasn't more than $7.25?"

"For heaven's sake, Edith, how have you managed to keep those figures in your head so many years?"

Mrs. Aldrich made no audible reply, but she made one inwardly. It was this:

"How is it that men so soon forget that which should be nearest to their hearts?"

Animals No Longer "Stuffed."

Animals in the national museum are no longer stuffed, but a careful plaster cast of the subject is made and the skin is then stretched, glued and sewed over it in a manner that almost defies detection, and results in a remarkably lifelike representation. To add further to the illusion animals are presented in their natural environment and surrounded by natural foliage. They are often arranged in family groups, so that something more than an impression of how an isolated specimen looks can be obtained. Much care and pains were expended in the arrangement of the natural backgrounds. —Popular Science.

A Trick With Words.

An extraordinary memory was that of Dr. Addison Alexander of Princeton Theological seminary. His memory was not only tenacious of facts, but of mere words. For the amusement of young people he would sometimes say, "Now I am going to talk without thinking." He would then pour forth period after period of strange words and incongruous images harmonious and even rhythmical in sound, but wholly destitute of sense. If that seems an easy trick try to suspend your reason and give free rein to your fancy in periods that shall be grammatically correct and yet without meaning.—Youth's Companion.

THE HELPING HAND.

Only those who have extended a helping hand to those in distress know the quiet joy that is born of such good works. The secret of happiness, at least of the most assured and tranquil happiness that is possible in this life, is to be absorbed in the affairs of others and particularly in their troubles. The man who can be so absorbed is sure not to be miserable, because he will never be aware of his own misfortunes. For them he will substitute the misfortunes of others.

STEADY GAINS MADE IN TRADE

Dun's Review Says, Measured by Months, Business Improvement Is Remarkable

New York, Feb. 22.—Some further progress is noted in the direction of increased trade, although conditions are very irregular and do not apply with equal accuracy to all sections and all branches of business. The West, owing to the great demand and high prices for wheat, is more prosperous than other parts of the country. Conditions in the South have been improved by the larger exports of cotton, but that section still feels the effects of recent depressions, and there are many reports of delayed collections and small embarrassments being received. The big industrial centers, like Pittsburgh, experience the benefits of some increase in mill operations, but actual output remains much below normal. The improvement in the iron and steel industry, however, is distinctly encouraging. In the textile trades there is an irregular development, some lines being much busier than others, but the tendency is toward a wider distribution and firmer prices. Railroad earnings were 10.2 per cent. under last year in the first week of February, but there is a tendency to improvement, and recent successful railroad financing makes more hopeful the prospect for larger buying of supplies by the leading companies. Building operations are on a small scale as compared with other recent years. Agricutural conditions are eminently good and the winter wheat crop promises well. Shipping conditions are in an abnormal state, owing to the congestion at home and abroad, and commerce is carried on under extraordinary hazards and costs. The financial situation is in every respect favorable to this country. The sensational event of the week was the decline in foreign exchange to the lowest rates in nearly a half century, and nothing illustrates the tremendous change that has taken place in the financial position of the United States since last August better than this development. The decline in imports, and the extraordinary foreign purchases of domestic products, including wheat, cotton and war supplies, have created such a balance of trade that enormous imports of gold could be readily enforced if arrangements were not made to extend credit instead. The European conflict grows in intensity and some anxiety exists as to the effect upon commerce of the recent war zone declarations. Taking everything into consideration, while the business situation is still controlled by conservatism, prompted by unprecedented world conditions, it is steadily gaining in strength and activity.

Better Prices

Many of the staple lines of dry goods are in steady demand and several of the large mills are well supplied with business for some time to come. Prices are very firm and in some instances show a tendency to advance, although in certain directions trade is quiet and quotations somewhat irregular. The call for fine and fancy cottons is not up to normal, the tendency being not to order ahead except for well defined needs. Buying of cotton duck is in large volume and many important foreign shipments have been made, but duck for commercial purposese continues inactive. There is some improvement in the demand for spring hosiery and underwear, whereas the fall lines are still moving irregularly. In woolens and worsteds, advances have been made on fancy cassimeres, unfinished worsteds and some fancy overcoatings. Sales in the cloth markets are complicated by the unsettled conditions in raw wool. Many fancy dress goods lines are being opened and a large forward business in broad cloths has been transacted.

New England footwear manufacturers have received some fair-sized mail orders, but as a rule, the situation is governed by conservatism. Army contracts keep some factories busily engaged and one large eastern concern is reported to have business on hand aggregating 1,250,000 pairs. Duck fabric with leather trimmings is being taken by the French Government for summer military use. As to domestic trade, patents with cloth uppers continue the popular article in women's lines, while tan and dull calf are still the leading sellers in men's wear. Some slight improvement has appeared in leather within the past fortnight, buying being steadier and prices holding firm. Various lines have shared in the moderate betterment, including shoe leathers and also belting butts. Nothing particularly new has developed with regard to European military equipments, and there has been a gradual lessening of the foreign demand since the opening of the year.

BOMBS DROPPED ON ESSEX CITY

London Inclined to Discount Losses Incurred by Submarines off Coast of Ireland

By Herbert Temple.

London, Feb. 22.—Beset by land and by sea with German aircraft and submarines, the British isles today are more isolated than they have ever been before. The latest German air exploit, the dropping of bombs on Essex, at a point about thirty-five miles from London last night, has increased still higher the fears of the people of the English capital. British warships on patrol duty in the North sea reported seeing signal lights flashed from Zeppelins.

The activities of the German submarines has struck panic to the heart of British shipping. The sinking of the small Irish coasting steamer Downshire shows that the Germans are under orders to destroy all British merchant ships, inrrespective of size. The Downshire, which was sunk in the Irish sea by the U-12 was a small freighter of no importance.

The war ship patrols in the Irish sea and in the western part of the English Channel have been strengthened and the utmost vigilance is being exercised. Search for submarines is even being made out in the Atlantic, off the west coast of Ireland.

In the important harbors, such as Folkstone, Dover and Newcastle and Liverpool, artillery is kept ready for action on a moment's notice as it is feared that the German submarines may try to enter the ports and torpedo ships at anchor.

Army transports, plying between the British and French coasts are more strongly guarded than ever before. The passenger steamers are almost empty as no one goes on a sea trip these days unlsss ethere is imperative reason for it.

So far as known, only one German aeroplane took part in the Essex raid last night. The aeroplane was seen near Colchester fleeing toward the North seascoast. At Markstey some cottages were damaged, but no one was killed. The home of a family named Redjohn was damaged near Colchester. Near Coggeshall a bomb fell in a garden and an unexploded bomb was reported to have been found near Braintree. The German air raider escaped.

SUCCESS CLAIMED BY BOTH SIDES AT COLMAR

By Franklin P. Merrick

Paris, Feb. 22.—A severe engagement has developed in front of Colmar, in the Vosges mountains, where the French and Germans are locked in a grapple for the possession of stratgetic heights along the Fecht river. Both sides are claiming successes in that vicinity. The struggle extends over a six mile front between the pass of Bonhomme and Colmar in the immediate vicinity of Sulzern, Hohrodberg, Hohrod and Weier-Im-Thal.

Despite storms of wind, rain and snow, the French fought their way to the hills held by the Germans and routed the Kaiser's forces from their trenches at the point of the bayonet. The battle battle front lies in the form of a crescent stretching to the northeast and to the southeast from the Sulzern. The Germans after being driven from their high position retreated toward the east but afterwards delivered counter attacks against the French. The French claim these attacks were repulsed; the Germans claim they were successful.

Along the northern end of the line artillery still plays the leading role, although there has been some infantry fighting near Ypres. In Champagne the French have consolidated their new positions near Lesmil, Perthes and Beasejour. German counter attacks in that region, as well as on the Meuse, were unsuccessful.

Vienna, via Berlin and Amsterdam, Feb. 22.—The capture by Austro-German troops of Stanislau, an important town of Galicia, 75 miles south-southeast of Lemberg was officially announced here today. The Russians, defeated successively at Delatyn, Nadwerna and Stanislau are retreating across the Dniester river with the Austro-German troops in pursuit.

London, Feb. 22.—The official press bureau today issued an official denial of the report sent from Berlin that a British army transport had been sunk by a German submarine.

By Frederick Werner.

Berlin, via Amsterdam, Feb. 22.—Official announcement was made at the admiralty today that all the crew of the American steamer Evelyn which was sunk by a mine off Borkum Island in the North sea on Saturday, had been rescued.

The vessel had passed safely through the war zone proclaimed by Germany on her way to Bremen when she hit the mine. A great hole was made in her starboard side through which the water poured and Captain Smith, seeing it would be impossible to beach her, ordered his crew to the boats.

BUSINESS SECTION BURNS IN EAST ST. LOUIS

East St. Louis, Ill., FFeb. 22.—Fire early today destroyed nearly all the four city block which meet at St. Louis and Collinsville avenues in the heart of the business district. The loss is estimated from $25,000 to $500,000.

New York, Feb. 22.—No steamers sailed today.

YANKEE RESPECT FOR BELGIUM

Relief Work Incited by Her Peoples' Effort to Keep a Pledge

London, Feb. 22.—M. Paul Mussche librarian of the Belgian Parliament, writes from Brussels to the American Commission for Relief in Belgium as follows:

"In the warehouse kindly placed at the disposal of the commission at the port of Brussels we found cases of corned beef, pork and beans, evaporated milk, rolled oats, sacks of wheat, barrels of dried fish, and other cases of a more complex kind. They opened one of these before us. It contained a ham, three pots of jam covered with white paper, 25 kilos of apples, 50 kilos of potatoes and half a sausage. An inscription, almost effaced, showed that the case came from Hurstboro, Alabama. At the bottom of the case the employe discovered a soiled clip of paper, on which a hesitating hand had traced these words:

"To the unknown subject of a nation which is dying for respect of its word."

There were other cases, reaching to the top of the shed. Had they contained all the gold of Eldorado, they could not have moved us as much as this.

Thanks in the name of a martyrd nation, to the annoymous sender of the case from Hurstboro. May her example be followed.

Other cases bore different inscriptions. Amongst them we noticed a great many which came from Nova Scotia and on which was written in large letters the words: "For Belgium our brave allies, with the admiration and sympathy of the inhabitants of Nova Scotia."

With a sack of apples from Lower Grandville, Nova Scotia, came a letter addressed, "To whoever will find this letter in Belgium:

"Dear Belgains,

"Twenty-four of our neighbors met in my mother's house for the purpose of selecting these apples. We hope a great many Belgians will take refuge in our country where there is plenty of room and where we hope to continue enjoying peace.

"Perhaps the person who will receive this letter will be amongst those who will come here. If so, let him remember that the deepest sympathy and the greatest respect for your nation as also for its good King reign amongst the people of Lower Grandville, along the Annapoli basin.'

Peasants, without home or shelter, are seeking furtively in the depths of the woods some kilos of wheat which have escaped the enemy's notice. They grind it in a coffee-grinder to make a sort of reageltte, a thin cake as hard and indigestible as pebbles. We have gone back to prehistoric times. Man is a wolf to man hero, and our peasants, driven away by the burning of their destroyed homes, have not even caverns in which to take refuge.

It is easy to understand why peasants from the depths of the country take off their caps on the possing of the American Commission automobiles that fly the Stars and Stripes. In doing so they salute our only emblem of human sympathy and international solidarity.

Bad Taste as Seen in Japan.

Dr. Aston, the scholarly Japanese secretary to the British legation in Tokyo, summarized what Kenko, the fourteenth century writer of "Tsuresure Guse," considered to be "bad taste," thus:

Too much furniture in one's living room.

Too many pens in a stand.

Too many Buddhas in a private shrine.

Too many words when men meet.

Too many books in a bookcase there can never be, nor can there be too much litter in a dust heap.—London Saturday Review.

Substitute For Butter.

Olive oil as a substitute for butter is responsible for the delicious flavor of many French and Italian dishes. The American housewife who experiments with oil as a butter substitute in cooking finds that it has many advantages. It does not burn as quickly as butter and therefore does not require so careful watching. It also lends a rich flavor which cannot be secured in any other way.

Johnson Remains Favorite in Betting; Texas Reports His Condition as Good

By LEWIS T. MATSON

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 20.—The activity in fistic circles today was disturbed by rumors that Jack Johnson is not in the best of condition for his championship bout with Jess Willard and that the big black will not be able to enter the ring on March 6 in tiptop shape.

While the average public puts some stock in these reports, the wiseacres in the game do not view them with any degree of alarm. They say that the reports are being circulated to cut down the odds on the fight. Johnson is a big favorits in the betting—the odds being almost prohibitive—and the concensus is that reports of Johnson's condition are being circulated so that the gambling element can get some adequate returns for the odds they are offering. All is ready for the coming of the champion. His camp where he will put in the hard training licks has been put in shape and all the attendants are awaiting the arrival of the principal tomorrow.

Willard is going along in his training as smoothly as a new made road. He is following a systematic course of trainingand already is in fine condition. And all the challenger is confident that he will be the one that will bring the championship back to the white race.

NEW ELECTION BILL, BY ROCHESTER M... STATE THO...

Under the Argetsinger Bill As Presented Today, the Secretary of State Would Be Deprived of Many Functions

In addition to the bill introduced today to amend the election law, Senator Artsinger also presented a measure making a referendum of the question of restoring the state convention to designate state wide candidates.

Albany, Feb. 23.—Aimed to bring about greater efficiency in the operation of election machinery and to save a quarter of a million dollars, the bill by Senator Argetsinger of Rochester amending the election law generally made its appearance today.

These amendments are made to the section governing primaries. It puts forward primary election date two weeks, making it the seventh Tuesday before election, instead of the fifth Tuesday.

It provides that the major portion of all primary and election supplies shall be furnished by the state superintendent of elections.

It provides that enrollment envelopes shall be supplied without printed matter thereon, thus saving a substantial sum of money.

It provides for holding a pre-primary unofficial party convention composed of delegates from Assembly districts elected under rules or regulations adopted by the party; the convention will make recommendations for State-wide offices and positions. Full and complete opportunity is given for filing of independent designations for any such office or position.

It provides that when a party fails to make designations for all the offices to be filled, blank spaces must be retained on primary ballot so that voters of that party can write in their choice.

It discontinues the practice of combining election districts into primary districts and provides for the holding of primaries for all parties at one polling place, thus doing all they can with polling places and election officers.

This makes necessary the furnishing of twelve poll books in each of the election districts of the State, and provides that voters of all parties shall be entered in two books, with seperate columns to distinguish each party. The present law requires fourteen books.

It provides that in election districts not contained within a city or village of 5,000 or more inhabitants, a voter who was enrolled in one district for participation in the succeeding primary of his party shall not have his right to participate affected or impaired by the fact that he has ceased to be a resident of or has removed from such district during said interval.

It provides that historical cards shall be made for voters only petition is extended from three days to seven days.

It provides an easy and prompt adjudication by court review, where there is any conflict in party names or emblems.

Relative to the general election, the measure makes these changes:

It provides for one superintendent of election, instead of three; for one chief deputy, instead of three; and not more than ten principal deputies, instead of many times that number, as provided by the present law; it also provides for one principal office, instead of three as at present.

It transfers to state superintendent of elections all the duties now assigned to the secretary of state.

Where a voter was registered in the same district the previous year, he will not be required to answer any further questions than his name and address. This applies to all the State, except Greater New York.

It does away with the printing of registration lists, excepting counties containing cities of the first and second class, unless the board of supervisors is in such other counties shall direct that the same be done.

It provides for the registration of traveling salesmen by affidavit.

It abolishes the boards of election in all counties except Greater New York and provides for one commissioner of elections in counties containing a city of the first, second or third class.

tIprovides that historical cards shall be made for voters only where personal registrration is required, thus doing away with filling out cards for voters not registered personally.

Bad Indians Now In a Tight Place

Cortez, Colo., Feb. 23.—United States Deputy Marshals late last night turned the tables on the renegade Piute Indians, defeating them at the town of Bluff, Utah. Attacking the Indians under cover of darkness after keeping up to the positions held by the Red Men, the deputies drove them into thick brush. Reports received here today stated that the Indians would be unable to escape. In the night attack four Indians were killed and one white man wounded.

ROME, ITALY PARTLY UNDER TIBER'S WATERS

By BRIIXTON D. ALLAIRE.

Rome, Feb. 23.—For the sixt htime in two months the River Tiber is again at flood stage and a part of this city is under water. A considerable section of low lying ground in the Champagne district, in the compartment of Latium, is inundated and hundreds of persons are fleeing from their homes. Heavy rains, coupled with warm weather which melted the snow in the mountains of Latium and Abruzzi compartments caused sudden freshets of alarming dimensions.

RUSSIANS THINK GERMANS ARE WITHDRAWING

BL FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY

Petrograd, Feb. 23.—This is the day originally set by the German general staff for the triumphal entry of Emperor William's troops into Warsaw, according to officers captured by the Russians in northern Poland. The Germans, however, are still far from their goal.

Gains by the Russians in the Narew river region officially announced here are declared to have balked German's efforts to reach Warsaw from the northeast. The Germans have been thrust back from Lomza, it is stated at the war office, and the Russians pursuing them have recapfured Jedwabno and passed that town, again advancing toward the East Prussian frontier.

The inability to move reinforcements to help the Tenth army when it was recently caught in the jaws of the trap is no longer handicappin gthe Russians, as they are fighting close to their first line of forts. This is expected to turn the tide of victory to the Russians in the conflict now raging in northern Poland.

The Russian retreat from East Prussia was accompanied by a similar movement in Poland south of the German frontier. This left Mlawa in undisputed possession of the Germans. A battle has been raging at Przansysz for five days and at latest reports the conflict is a deadlock. The Germans are trying to swing their right flank through Racione Plonsk, but thus far their efforts have resulted only in the Russian's inflicting heavy losses upon the attacking troops and also in taking many prisoners.

After a lull of more than a week in the west front of Warsaw, the Germans have again resumed their offensive along the Bzura and Rawka rivers. The German activity in this region is believed by Russian officers now here to indicate that the troops sent from that district to East Prussia have again been transferred back.

The fighting in the Carpathians is continuing without either the Russians or the Austro-German armies winning [illegible]. The Russians claim slight local successes, but both [illegible] are making a gallant fight. Both [illegible] on the offensive and defensive.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Berlin, by Wireless, Feb. 23.—The capture of Fattle-Kopf, in the Vosges mountains by German troops was officially announced here today. The Germans stormed and took the French positions after hard fighting. Today's official report also tells of unsuccessful attacks made by French troops Nort hof Perthes in the Chaingpagne region and also Ailly and Appremont in the Meuse valley.

Amsterdam, Feb. 23.—Dutch officers at the frontier post of Eede sighted a Zepplin airship and a squadron of a dozen aeroplanes flying westward early Monday morning. They were apparently headed toward England.

Rotterdam, Feb. 23.—Another great Zeppelin airship is believed to have been destroyed by an explosion over the North sea. A dispatch received from Shiermonnikoog today stated that one of the German airships flew over that town Sunday and that later an explosion was heard to the northwest.

Petrograd, Feb. 23.—The reinforced Turkish army that is renewing its offensive against the Russians has met with another reverse, according to official advices received from Tiflis today. The commander of the Russian army in the Caucasus reported to the war office that the Ottoman troops had been repulsed on the Trans-Tschorokh on Sunday, being thrown back across the Olti-Tchai river.

RAILROAD MAN'S WIFE ROBBED

Los Angeles, Feb. 23.—Every detective in Los Angeles was assigned today to work upon one of the biggest and most mysterious diamond robberies ever reported to the authorities of Southern California. The victims were Mrs. A. F. Smith, wife of the president of the New York Central railway and her daughter -in-law, Mrs. Emory Smith. According to admissions made by the police today the robbers got booty valued at more than $50,000. The first estimates fixed the value of the loot at $15,000.

The robbery occurred in Bungalow No. 3 of the Beverly Hills hotel last evening while Mrs. Smith and her son and his wife were at dinner about four hours after they arrived here. This fact led the authorities to believe that the robbers followed the party across the continent from New York awaiting an opportunity to get the jewels from Mrs. Smith.

The robbers left no clew of value, but the police believe that the theft was committed by a man and a woman.

The robbers entered the bungalow with pass key. Rifling Mrs. Smith's jewel bag in the bureau drawer, they unlocked one of her suitcases and from this the bulk of the jewelry was taken.

Mrs. Smith was almost overcome when she realized she had lost a fortune in diamonds. Her son summoned the police and a cordon of special officers was thrown around the grounds of the hotel and a number of men and women were detained on the roads leading away from the fashionable resort.

SULLIVAN MAY UMPIRE

Chicago, Feb. 2.—Billy Sullivan, the veteran White Sox catcher, who was handed his unconditional release recently has decided to wire to President Johnson for a place o nthe staff of umpires this season. Sullivan has been with the American league since 1901.

...CH SUFFERS FROM GERMAN G...

French Lose Ground In the Vosges; Fi... Claim Successes In West Flanders

Twenty civilians have been killed and a score burned as the latest German bombardment of Rheims. 1500 shells have been thrown on the walled section of the city, and the section in which the Cathedral is located suffered severely. The Cathedral itself was badly damaged, having been smashed in by the German shells.

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK

Paris, Feb. 23.—Heavy damage was done to Rheims by the German bombardment of the city on Sunday and Monday. The Germans bombarded from two sides, the north and east and the Cathedral was struck a number of times. Many buildings were set on fire. The Germans used their biggest guns and it is believed that a dozen persons were killed and wounded by exploding shells. The cannonade was opened by the batteries stationed near Bourgogne and soon the artillery massed near Moronvillers joined in.

During the darkness flames sprang up from burning buildings, lighting up the sky for many miles. This furnished an excellent target for the German gunners who made the most of it. On Monday the sky was overcast by a thick pall of black smoke, which rolled upward in the conflagration. After a brief pause the German guns were again in action at dawn and shells began exploding in the streets all over the ruined city. The French batteries stationed to Rheims replied to the German fire and all day an artillery duel [illegible] the city.

The French trenches along the Vesle, southeast of Rheims, were also shelled b ythe Germans.

Both the British and Germans are claiming a success east of Ypres in West Flanders. On the North sea coast the French and British artillery has achieved a distinct advantage over the German guns. Along the Meuse the French and Germans are fighting for the possession of new high ground in order to push forward their artillery supports.

Along the valley of the Fecht river, between the pass of Bonhomme and Colmar, in the Vosges, the Freneh have been compelled to give some ground, but the fighting there continues without decisive result.

During gthe bombardment of Calais yesterday by a Zeppelin a number of bombs fell near the chief Belgian military hospital.

EVELYN WAS OUT OF COURSE, SAYS PRESIDENT

Washington, Feb. 23.—Captain Smith of the American steamship Evelyn, blown up by a mine in the North sea disobeyed orders and was entirely out of his course at the time of the explosion. This information has reached President Wilson, he told his callers today. The ship was, however, not in any war zone, the President stated and he indicated he did not look for any diplomatic or other complications to ensue. He had nothing further tosay. Anxiety at the State Department and at the Capitol over the blowing up of the Evelyn was somewhat increased, in view of the death by exposure of one of the men in the row boat picked up by a German patrol ship, another boat carrying members of the crew that met with disaster.

NEUTRAL VESSEL SENT TO BOTTOM OFF DOVER

London, Feb. 23.—The Norwegian steamer Regin was torpedoed and sunk in the English cannel by a German submarine off Dover today. The crew was saved. The first information of the disaster to the neutral vessel was received here this afternoon. A great hole was torn in the steel hold of the vessel. The captain learned that it would be impossible to keep the ship afloat and he ordered the crew to the boats. The Regin was a coal carrying vessel and was bound from New Castle-on-Tyne to Bordeaux, France. The Norwegian steamer Belridge was recently torpedoed in the same vicinity.

Bellfort, France, via Paris, Feb. 23.—French aviators successfully bombarded the German barracks at Muelhausen, Alsace, on Monday morning. They made a flight as far as Freiburg-im-Breisgau, eleven miles from the Rhine, and on their return dropped seven bombs upon the Muelhausen barracks. According to reports received here today the bombs killed about a dozen Germans and caused extensively damage to the barracks. All the French aviators returned safely to Belfort.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

BOOKS

SAY! Can you beat a cosey nook, a rocking chair, a good old book—when chilling breezes blow! What other pleasures can compare with books to drive away dull care—by Stevenson or Poe? And books like "David Copperfield," by Dickens, are a joyful relief from sorrow, grouch and gloom; and Kipling's works of army life just kick away old scowling strife—away back to the tomb. A good old book is bullet proof from pessimism's kicking foot—it keeps him to the rear; the man who does not like to read is like a dried up apple seed—he's somehow out of gear. I like to puff my jimmy pipe and run my glims o'er rows of type when nights are cold and bleak; a good old thrilling story book that holds a duke and a crook brings red blood to your cheek. James Whitcomb Riley sure struck home when he concocted that grand poem—"An Old Sweetheart of Mine"—and Walt Scott's "Lady of the Lake" would surely take a home made cake for reading, good and fine. And Mark Twain has 'em on the run—he spills some quaint and rocking fun in "Huckleberry Finn"—you read that volume and I swear, you'll laugh until you'll gasp for air—until your sides are thin. Sir Conan Doyle's "Sherlock Holmes" makes hair stand upright on your domes—our courage almost quails; and how our innermost soul yearns for Whittier and Bobbie Burns, and Hawthorne's "Twice Told Tales." There's Hugo, Bryant and Lowell, too—I've mentioned, friend, just but a few—and each man has his choice; but anyhow, you must admit, a good, old book is surely "it"—Oh, read, friend, and rejoice.

Opinions

An American Ship Gone in Von Tirpitz's Zone.

Within perhaps twenty-four hours of the opening of the Von Tirpitz programme of ravages on the high seas an American ship, the Evelyn, has been destroyed, though fortunately without loss of life. Yet, pending a clear revelation of all the facts, it will not be assumed by the Washington Administration and it ought not to be by the American people that this precipitates a crisis between Germany and the United States.

The Evelyn, according to the reports at hand, was not torpedoed by a submarine. If she had been, either deliberately or accidentally—granted that she was not resisting search or fleeing when summoned to submit to a visiting party—it would be for the Washington Administration to take not only immediate but forceful action; the American people would insist upon it and would not be denied.

But from the unofficial reports it appears that the Evelyn came into contact with a mine, as any other ship might have done in the last several months. Furthermore, there is a chance that the mine was out of its proper bearings.

Now it is an affront to civilization that mines have been so generally strewn and so negligently safe-guarded that one might drift anywhere on the wide ocean to work destruction to neutral ships and to neutral lives. It is an offense against humanity that anybody could so place and regulate a mine that under normal usage of the seas it might cause havoc to neutrals and friends no less than to belligeretns and enemies.

Nevertheless, if that particular mine floated away from the anchorage where it was intended to remain, if it was swept by currents and tide into the very waters which had been announced by the Von Tirpitz Admiralty as clear and safe, and if then it destroyed an American ship coursing those waters in full exercise of its rights and its confident reliance upon the word of the German Government that these were clear and safe waters, we might be outraged beyond expression at a reckless disregard of neutral property that ought to be secure and an abominable sacrifice of neutral life that ought to be sacred, but we should not be fairly justified in raising the issue of a ground for war.

If Von Tirpitz had never shocked civilization and dumfounded Christianity with his run-amuck proclamation the very thing which has befallen the Evelyn might have happened to her. For months those seas have been infested with mines. From the first there was always danger—because of the way the mine-strewing work was done and regulated—that an under-sea trap of destruction might drift into mid-ocean, or even into the harbor of New York.

So what came to the Evelyn might as easily have happened one day before as one day after the Von Tirpitz programme went into operation. The technical defense against willful responsibility, therefore, will be more easily set up than broken down, just as anybody might reasonably offer a plea of mitigation in the case of a runaway horse tearing along the crowded street of a city, wrecking property and maiming life.

Nevertheless, the fate of the neutral Evelyn, destroyed on the open sea by a Von Tirpitz mine, will draw taut the nerves of the American people in their anticipation of the next mishap or misdeed. It will sharpen the senses and stiffen the purpose of those in official charge of the welfare, the rights and the honor of this Nation.

GET THE HOSE

That normal and healthy young animal, the small boy, again is vindicated. His unwashed face and his unkempt hair have received a scientific bill of health. His abhorrence of the bathtub bears the stamp of medical approval. The verdict is pronounced with all seriousness by Dr. Charles G. Hill of Baltimore.

Dr. Hill says the inception of certain grave symptoms is indicated by an excessive desire to wash and by abnormal fear of germs. Some of the doctor's patients are afflicted with such exaggerated fear of microbes that they wash their faces and hands at every opportunity.

Knowing that germs are dangerous, some folks arrive at a morbid fear of them, not knowing that they abound on all sides, more plentiful than the poor, who are said to be with us always.

Escape lies not in flight but in sturdy defiance. The doctor continues by saying that a healthy constitution, reasonable attention to diet, exercise and general hygiene are the most effective resistance.

To all of which must be said, it is surely true, but how many of us are impressed with a disposition to overdo precaution. How many of us believe that the business streets of our city, at the present moment, show an excessive desire upon the part of the citizens to have as it were clean faces.

Unfortunately we must face the mire of the business streets; we cannot escape, even by flight, the germs hidden in the sticky stuff, but we could by turning loose a few hundred gallons of clean water hurl defiance at those constitution-sapping "bugs" of which our medical friends tell us.

Get the hose!

THE VALUE OF FRATERNITIES

The club habit is ingrained in human nature. Wherever men have a little more than usual in common they form a club. It is so outside of college; it is so inside. No legislation can eradicate the tendency or seriously interfere with its expression.

The State of Texas is contemplating the abolition of college fraternities, presumably because they are considered undemocratic. If they are abolished local clubs, sub rosa or otherwise, will spring up to take their places as surely as Texans continue to send boys to college. Colonel James B. Curtis, chairman of the Inter-Fraternity Conference, says: "The abolition of groups in universities is impossible. Were it effected it would destroy the university itself. Groups of students have existed in all universities from their beginning to the present day."

The State of Texas must choose between local, unrecognized college clubs, with no reputation to maintain and little publicity to fear, and the chapters of national bodies with well established reputations and standards. Faculties in every college where the fraternity system obtains have frequently found appeals to fraternity pride an invaluable aid in enlisting support of the student body for moral and scholarly advancement. The influence of the national council of the fraternity is often a powerful lever to compel the reform of individual chapters. There could be no more wholesome regulation of undergraduate social life. It seems obvious that these advantages must be sacrificed with the substitution of local, unrecognized groups.

Some fraternities have traditions that are undemocratic. But most of them have a pride in their disregard of social or financial background when choosing new members. The more chapters a fraternity has the more rampant is its healthy Americanism. Fortunately, there are enough of fraternities to go 'round. No university in the country can boast a chapter of every one that exists. The remedy is not to abolish them, locally or nationally, but to encourage the multiplication of their chapters so that practically no students are without the opportunity to join one or another.—Tribune, N.Y.

THE BOBTAIL BUNCH

A member of the society of the scum, of the unwashed, of the riffraff, stood watching a well-dressed man go by in his fur-lined overcoat; and he muttered, and called the successful man "Old Skinflint."

Soon another man passed by with naught but a sweater on; his hands and his feet were cold and numb, but on his face he wore a smile, and he said to the down-and-outer, "Good morning!" Then the tag-rag tramp snarled back, "Smile away, you old fool, trying to pretend you ain't cold."

It is from this bobtail bunch that we get our inspiration to want to be more than a failure.

You were put here to work, and you are a lucky dog if you are physically able to perform this function.

When I see a man who doesn't like to work, I sometimes wish him the worst thing I can think of—that he can't work, just long enough to get him to want to work. It would prove pretty tough if you were unable to work.

And what is work? Work is nothing but fun when you like it. It's the workhouse when you don't. The point is, like it. Find the work that you like, and then go at it as though it were an opportunity and not a slavish task.—The Silent Partner.

CHILDREN PLEAD TO LEGISLATURE

East Side Leaders Will Send Six Small Boys and Girls as Delegates

Six children from the East Side New York, will travel to Albany to plead with legislators not to pass the bill which requires the daily reading of ten verses of the Bible in all the public schools of the state.

To show their elders there is perfect democracy about this little committee, three of the children will be girls. So announced Harry S. Schlacht, superintendent of the East Side Protective Association.

"The proper place to teach the Bible is at 26 Broadway," said Rabbi Isaac S. Moses. "In the offices of the Standard Oil Company the minds are fully developed and 'Thou salt not steal will be understood without any comment."

"Urge every one in the factories and stores where you work to write to his Assemblyman," advised Nathan Perlman, Assemblyman from the 6th District.

Stern Tells of Former Bill

Assemblyman Adolph Stern said that in March, 1908, a bill of like character had been proposed, and at that time there was only one protest in the Assembly. Mr. Stern said his protest then was efficient enough to have the bill legislated out of the Assembly.

"It is encouraging to see the people of the East Side taking such great interest in a state matter," he said. "How sad it would be if on a Friday night, while the Sabbath candles are being lit, a child should recite to its parents some obnoxious passage of the Bible that the teacher had read that morning."

Miss Sadie American, president of the Council of Jewish Women, also opposed the bill.

To create sentiment among the Assemblymen at Albany the East Side Protective Association appointed a committee of eight. Judge Aaron J. Levy is chairman. The other members are former Deputy Attorney General Edelson, ex-Assemblyman A. Stern, Alfred E. Smith, Democratic minority leader of the Assembly; Assemblyman Nathan D. Perlman, Miss Sadie American, Assemblyman Harry S. Schimmel and Harry S. Schlacht, superintendent of the East Side Protective Association.

Mr. Schlacht announced that the committee will go to Albany some time this week, and that another committee of state Senators will be appointed to create sentiment against the bill in the SSenate.

Preachers Back Measure

Dr. Alexander Griswold Cummins, rector of Christ Church, Poughkeepsie, one of the most influential Protestant Episcopal clergymen of the state, declared himself yesterday as strongly in favor of the Greiner-Tallett bill.

"Opposition to this bill is not only narrow sectarianism," said Dr. Cummins when interviewed in Poughkeepsie. "It is also a dangerous repression of religious liberty. Such readings would have an elavating influence, and the only objection to them comes from people who fear their particular sect might suffer by the practice.

"Religious instruction, of course, is not to be thought of, but every one with a Christian point of view feels that the Bible is a book of inspiration. It should, then, be of benefit to every religious organization. The parts to be read could be chosen by a commission representing all denominations."

When asked whether Jewish and Catholic parents would not object to their children's hearing such readings Dr. Cummins said he thought no parents would object unless their religious leaders put them up to it. As the latter would have a voice in choosing the lessons, he thought there could be no valid ground for their opposition.

Dr. Jowett, of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, agreed with Dr. Cummins in every particular. He was concerned, however, lest comment creep into the readings.

"I am thorough in favor of the bill," he said. "Bible reading is compulsory in English public schools and should be here. Opposition to it would disappear once it was tried. The only possible ground of objection would be the injection of comment by the reader. That, of course, would turn the thing into religious instruction, which is wholly objectionable. So long as that can be kept out of them the readings would be of very great benefit.

"Young people should be made familiar with the Bible because of its literary as well as moral and religious value. It is our greatest piece of literature, and as such should be included in our school curriculums."

SYRACUSE RANKS HIGH IN BASKETBALL WORLD

New York, Feb. 23.—A pair of gorgeously good English golfers will be bursting into our community very shortly, prepared to teach the young—and old—Americans how to shoot—golf balls.

One of them is Wilfred Reid. He'll do the teaching at the Sea View Golf Club, Atlantic City, N. J. The other is E. Gow, who will do likewise at the Sleepy Hollow Club, New York.

Reid ranks among the best professional golfers in the world. He has played for England against Scotland in every tournament since 1907. He won the Midland professional championship twice and has smashed so many records in the British Isles that it takes an adding machine to arrive at the total.

Reid, who is 30 years old, quit his job as instructor at the Banstead club, Surrey, England, so he could grab the Sea View job which pays better money:

Gow is a good golfer. He gained considerable fame in England. He was connected with the Way monor Golf Club, Waybridge, England, last year.

They grow some pretty nifty basketballers in the University of Syracuse. Over a stretch of four years Syracuse has won an enviable place in the basketball world.

The orange team since the beginning of the 1912 team has won 35 out of 42 games, scoring 1290 points against 894 by its foes.

On its home floor Syracuse seems to be invincible. The last game it lost on its home floor was to Oberlin in 1911—four years ago. Time and again Syracuse has gone against formidable foes before a home crowd but every time the orange colors have emerged triumphant.

Syracuse went through the 1914 season without suffering a defeat. It won 12 straight games that year.

Edmond A. Dollard, an alumnus of Syracuse, is the coach of the basketball squad. He's held down the same job for five years.

Here is what Dollard, as coach, has accomplished, with the Syracuse basketballers since the beginning of the 1912 season:

	Games		Total Scores
Year	Won	Lost	Syracuse	Opponents
1912	11	3	397	286
1913	8	3	393	288
1914	12	0	369	214
1915 (to date)	4	1	131	106
Totals	35	7	1290	894

New York, Feb. 23.—Billy Sullivan quits the White Sox—and probably the Major Leagues—with a record of having caught and coached more famous pitchers than any backstop that ever figured in the national game.

Sullivan's fame as a catcher will last as long as baseball history remains. He was a wonderful catcher in his youth and even up to two years ago, after 17 years in professional baseball, he ranked as the White sox mainstay.

Sullivan, who was released unconditionally by the White Sox the other day, began his carrer in 1896 with the Dubuque (Iowa) team. In 1897 he was with Columbus (Ohio). In 1899 and 1900 he caught for the Boston Nationals, jumping to the White Sox in 1901.

Here is the list of famous pitchers that Sullivan has caught in his 17 years as a big leaguer:

1899—Nichols, Willis, Lewis.
1900—Nichols, Willis, Lewis, Dinneen, Pittinger, Bailey.
1901—Callahan, Piatt, Griffith, Patterson, Skopec, Harvey, Katoll, Hart.
1903—Callahan, Patterson, White, Flaherty, Owen, Dunkle, Altrock.
1904—Patterson, Owen, Altrock, White, Flaherty, Frank Smith, Stricklett, Ed Walsh, Dougherty.
1905—Altrock, Walsh, Owen, Patterson, White, Smith.

THE QUIRK

Offers today as one-half of its program "The Billionaire," in 3 reels. This famous comedy was produced on the stage in all the large theaters of the United States by Klaw & Erlanger featuring the late Jerome Sykes in the leading role. The writer of this article has pleasant memories of the play as produced at the Wieting in Syracuse. The other half of the bill is "The Death Sign at High Noon," one of Kalem's noted western dramas in 3 parts, frontier days and ways in a vivid manner. Tomorrow Gus Sun sends 5 acts of vaudeville of the kind that always pleases. Pathe furnishes 6 reels of pictures, five of which are contained in "The Boundary Rider." The most show for the money.

Relics of Old Persia.

Shuster, the old capital of Persia, is one of Iran's wonder cities. In the dawn of Persian civilisation it took a leading part. On the bank of the only navigable river the country can boast, the city gets its name from the famous ruler, Shapur, who built great irrigating dams and a noble bridge across the Karun, now wrongly credited to the emperor Valerian. Sixteen hundred years have left the great bridge, a quarter of a mile in length, with yawning gaps, but the water of the river runs today through the channels and tunnels made to fertilise a land that had not yet been overrun by the Arabic barbarians who destroyed the culture of Persia.—London Mail.

MASONIC LODGE ATTEND CHURCH

Baptist Church Pastor Dwelt at Length Upon Washington's Characteristics

The Baptist church was filled to capacity at Sunday night's services. The Masonic lodges of Oswego, Fulton and Phoenix attended in a body. The meeting was probably the largest ever attended in this city.

Leon Foster, the organist of the church, gave a short organ recital, and the choir rendered special athems suitable for the occasion.

Royal Schaffer, director of the choir sang a tenor solo, "Calvary," after which the Rev. M. G. Buck, D.D., delivered the lecture sermon on Washington which follows:

February, the stormy closing month of winter gave to America our Washington and our Lincoln. Of Washington it has been well said that he belonged to the whole world. No people can monopolize him exclusively. Like the tallest peak of the Himalayas, he towers above all the others, the pioneer of matchless self-sacrifice and masterly ability who first blazed the way thru the wilderness of caste, ambition, oppression and war to the successful establishment of government of by and for the people. Is it strange then that his name should be reverenced throughout the world and his birthday celebrated annually by the citizens of the great republic he founded?

That, in character and life, he is a model of well-rounded citizenship to which the rising generations may ever look up with admiration and profit all will agree. What made him so?

Now to the answer of that question lies the open secret of Washington's abiding influence in American history. His greatness was the greatness of service. It was through the surrender of ambition to patriotism, the sacrifice of personal comfort for public duty, that there was given to this man his grip on the love of his people. His life was laid without stint on the altar of national duty.

And this is the special aspect of Washington's character to which I invite your thoughts for a few minutes. Not Washington, the leader, masterful and inspiring, not Washington, the soldier, resourceful and dauntless, not Washington, the statesman, keen and prophetic. But including all these aspects Washington the servant of his people, his life a commentary on the Master's words, "Whosoever will be great among you let him be your minister and whosoever will be chief let him be your servant. The text you notice is Christ's definition of true greatness.

Matt 20: 26-27:—Whosoever will be great among you let him be your minister and whosoever will be chief among you let him be your servant."

Washington served his counry by his devotion to a high ideal of public duty. He incarnated in his varied career, as truly as a man ever did, the conception of lofty purpose and unswerving integrity in national affairs.

Again Washington served his country by the creative influence of his personalty. I emphasize the word creative, National Crises, reveal two kinds of patriots: One is the epoch-marking man, the other is the epoch-making man.

The greatness of the first is representative, that of the second is creative. The epoch marking man interprets the aspirations of his own generation and gives them tongue and purpose. The epoch-making man on the other hand by his enthusiasm and genius creates other forces which give a new impulse to his own age. It may be said that Washington's career embodied at different times both of these types. He was an epoch-marking and epoch-making man. His patriotism was representative and it was also creative.

Washington served his country by his boundless faith in its future. Never in the darkest hour of defeat did this man question the righteousness of his cause or doubt for a moment its ultimate triumph. And yet no one who has read the inner history of this struggle can be blind to the fact that a belief in its ultimate triumph was no easy thing.

As to the reason of the life of this man we look back in his life's history and we see him beginning in his young boyhood laying the foundations for his career. By his obedience and affectionate devotion to his parents.

His father died while he was quite young and this drew him closer to his mother perhaps and his desire was to become a sea-faring man, but his mother persuaded to give it up even after his trunk was packed to start on his first voyage.

Again—Washington was a gentleman. Honest, conscientious upright, unselfish, courteous in all his associations in the transactions of his business, and in the discharge of all the duties which positions of trust and vital importance imposed. He could but win the respect and command the esteem of all good people. Being a gentleman in the best sense of the word, he was absolutely free from self-seeking and lived for the good of others, gave himself and the best that was in him for God and home and country and placed himself in the service of his country then in the throes of a mighty struggle for existence, laid his all—home, lands, social position and life itself upon freedom's altar a willing sacrifice to American liberty. What a character for emulation. What a model of true citizenship for our young men to fashion their lives after. What a standing rebuke to the selfish, ambitious place seeking and grafters in church and state.

Again Washington was a God-fearing Christian.

He believed the Bible to be God's inspired message to man and he believed in Jesus Christ as the Son of God and the Redeemer of the world. He reverenced and obeyed the teaching of the man of Galilee. He belonged to and respected and contributed to the support of an orthodox branch of the Christian church.

In accord with his Christian faith he was a man of prayer. In evidence of this he is seen on his knees during the lonely night watches invoking the compassion and assistance of Almighty God in behalf of his freezing, starving soldiers at Valley Forge. Washington's prayers saved the heroes of '76 from starvation and Lincoln's prayers gave the Union Army victory at Gettysburg.

America is rich in the number and greatness of her heroes. Statesmen and philanthropists and at the head of them must ever stand the matchless and the imperishable fame of George Washington.

Some men do not realize, yes, it might be said that no man ever realizes the amount of good he does while living but those who follow after see that he builded greater than he knew, laying broader foundations than contemplated.

He built not alone for his own time but for the great future and pointed the right solution of many of the problems which were to arise in the years to come. He was indeed one of the most farsighted statesman of his generation and also having an almost prophetic vision. And so he remains an ever increasing influence for good in every part and sphere of action of the republic. And so after the lapse of years he is better appreciated, more perfectly understood and more thoroughly venerated and loved than when he lived.

And the secret of Washington's abiding hold upon the popular imagination and his abiding influence is, first of all in the moral seriousness of his life. While he was a man of eminently practical habit of mind yet his life and life's work were to him matters of solemn concern. He carried this seriousness into all the multifarious occupations. Nothing was little or trifling to him. This made him do his best in everything to which he set his hand, and when his power and influence became manifest he was kept from the possibility either of trifling or of self-seeking.

Benedict Arnold lived at the same time Washington did but you scarcely ever hear his name mentioned, while cities, markets, halls, clubs, streets and societies are named after Washington. People are attracted to that which is good and esteem character which is noble. They honor patriotic and upright men by using their names over generation after generation, while the name of a traitor is held in the utmost contempt.

America gave to France a statue of Lafayette of heroic size but she gave to the world the character of Washington in its colossal proportions and the world has erected its lofty pedestal.

"It is high," Gladstone said. "If among all the pedestals supplied by history for eminent public characters I saw one higher than all the rest and if I was asked to name its fittest occupant I should at once name Washington."

He incarnates our loftiest patriotic thought. Great forces focus in a person and from him radiate with clearer power and thus great men are at once the effect and cause of the events of their time. They meditate between principle and practice, between ideas and action. Of such leaders of the world's thought and action Washington was preeminent. And so we say long live the name of Washington. It is a proof that we esteem his life and the principles for which he stood.

Great is the power of man backed by the pow of good. Man and God—nothing impossible. All things will be swept down as before a mighty tornado. Washington without the power of God backing his native talent would not have been able to accomplish great things. But would have been swayed by every wind of doctrine that blew. But he had one great object in view and worked accordingly. Washington realized that he had to give an account to the creator of all manhind for the use or misuse of all his talents and realizing that and with the vision or the future of this country he with that great power from on high strove with his might and main that he might receive the reward—"Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joys prepared for thee from the foundations of the earth. Let us go forth and live as he did in the fear of God and for the uplifting of mankind.

LOCAL IRELAND AND ITALY WAGE A WARFARE

Dog Fight Leads to Dne "Bigga Fight"—Ireland Abed.

For some time past there have been several fights between dogs belonging to James McNeil of 371 S. 1st st., and Joe Bennetti of 365 S. 4th st. Last Sunday both dogs came together once more, and when McNeil tried to seperate them, the Italian's dog bit McNeil on the right hand, lacerating three fingers.

A few hours later the Italian's dog once more came around to the Hall house, where McNeil is a boarder, looking for trouble, and this time found it. The lesson McNeil learned from interference was enough for one day, so he let the dogs fight it out. The Italian's dog has not been seen since.

However, when young George Marshall, also a boarder at Hall's, passed the Italian's house yesterday afternoon about one o'lock, Bennetti struck him across the left shoulder with a pickaxe handle. The same thing occurred when McNeil passed a few hours latter; only with more telling results this time.

Benneitti lay in wait for McNeil until he had passed the house occupied by the Italians, then crept upon him (McNeil) unawares and struck him a hard blow on the head felling to his knees. McNeil tried to get up, when the Italian again struck at him with the pick handle. This time McNeil threw up his arm to check the blow and received a painful injury upon the muscles of his right forearm.

As a result of the encounter today McNeil lies abed suffering painful injuries about the head, arm and hand. Dr. Jay was called to attend the injuries cause d both Bennetti and his dog.

Bennetti has threatened to kill all the Halls, McNeils and Marshalls in the neighborhood, and if not taken care of by the police soon may try to put his threats into effect.

INSTALLING OF LOCAL PASTOR

The Rev. Chas. R. Robertson Was Formally Installed at Presbyterian Church Last Night

Last evening at the Presbyterian church were held the installation services for Rev. Chas. S. Robertson, pastor of the church.

The Rev. Dr. Steele of the Grace Presbyterian church of Oswego presided, and delivered the charge to Dr. Robertson. The Rev. Dr. Pierce of Baldwinsville gave the scriptural reading, and the prayer of installation was by the Rev. Mr. Fuess of Syracuse.

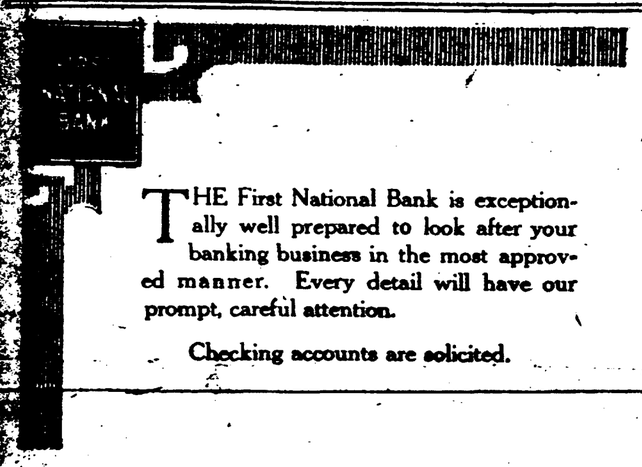
The Rev. A. M. Fulton of Syracuse preached the installation sermon, and Rev. G. W. Wellburn of Scranton delivered the charge to the people.

The theme chosen by the Rev. Mr. Fulton was taken from James 1:6,—"Pure Religion and Undefiled." The thought given was that there are many kinds, or types, of religion in the world, but not all types are pure and unspotted. The kind of religion which does not touch the foundation of a person's life ,Dr. Fulton pointed out, is not a pure religion. The kind of religion which does not serve the person that he may benefit his church, his community, and in turn the world is an empty religion.

The world today, Dr. Fulton said further, is full of religion; it is a great living force, and man is incurably a religious being; even the devils believe and tremble. The prime factor of religion is helpfulness to man, and when man and church do not serve the community toward better ends that community has the right to place a question mark after the creed of the church. Religion to be pure, and to be unspotted means service for God toward mankind.

The Rev. G. W. Wellburn in his charge to the people dwelt upon the great need today in building up the sinew of the church. At no time in the world's history, Rev. Wellburn stated has there been greater need for preparation by the church than at the present time—preparation, not for fighting ability but for leadership.

Never in the history of the civilized world, Rev. Welburn pointed out, has the church been so left out of the councils of the world than at the present time.



And, but a few months ago the leaders in religious circles, were declaring war to be impossible. In America our leaders say "We shall never fight," but wait! Let the church prepare, not to fight but for a mighty leadership.

Then in his old time grace of speech, Rev. Wellburn congratulated the people of the church upon having Dr. Robertson as their pastor, and expressed the assurance that the kindnesses that had been his while acting in the position now occupied by Dr. Robertson would in turn be meted out to their present pastor, and, that the church would become a still greater power in the community which it serves.

The Rev. Dr. Robertson gave the benediction, and an informal reception was held.

"IS IT WELL WITH THEE?"

DEMANDS BILLY SUNDAY

Philadelphia, Feb. 22.—Billy Sunday preached last night on the topic "Is it Well with Thee?" He said:—

Text: Second Book of Kings, 4th chapter, 26th verse: "Is it well with thee? Is it well with thy husband? Is it well with thy child?"

Fifty-three miles north of Jerusalem, eight miles from Tabor and four miles from Jezreel, there once stood the famous and unfortunate city of Shuman, situated in one of the most beautiful spots on the globe, surrounded by olive orchards and fields of waving grain,with babbling springs and shaded groves, an ideal place for an idcal home, and in that city there was such a home, presided over by one of the famous women of antiquity.

Elisha, the prophet, used to pass this home on his way to Mount Carmel and back again to the schools of the prophets at Jericho, of which he was head, and there was something in his actions that led this woman to conclude that he was a man of God, for she said one day to her husband:

"I preceive that a man of God is passing by us continually.

Women are of keener perception when it comes to things spirtually and morally than are men.

I perceive that probably her husband was too busy running the bank, or the farm, or "balled up" in politics. I preceive he had no time to think of bringing any influence beneath his roof that might be a moral or spiritual uplift to himself or his wife or his children.

I perceive that a man of God is passing by us continually.

And many a time, if God is ever brought beneath the roof, He will have to be brought there by the pleadings of the wife, and many a man has to have his attention called to things that are decent by his wife.

"I perceive that a man of God is passing by us continually."

She felt they were losing much. She wanted all the benefit that could accrue to her or her child by associating with a man that walked close with God.

"I perceive, husband, that a man of God is passing by us continually."

"Why don't we ask him to stop and come in and be a benediction and blessing to us?"

And she said to her husband:—

"Let's build for him a little room and place therein a bed, a stool, a pitcher and a candlestick that he can ever afterwards call that his home.

The suggestion evidently met with the approval of the husband for they did it, and ever afterwards the man of God, tired and worn on his journey, had a resting place, and he made that his home.

Laid the Dead Boy Upon Elisha's Bed

There was in that family an only child, and I can see him out in the field where his father was with the reapers, and the hot sun of the Oriental country beat down on his head and the boy threw his hands to his head and cried:—

"My head! My head! My head!"

And the father said to the servants: "Carry the lad to his mother."

And they bore him to the house.

An then, to my mind, occurs one of the saddest statements found upon the pages of the Old Testament. He sat upon his mother's knees until noon, and then died.

Broken-hearted, she carried him upstairs and laid upon the bed of the man of God; then turning to the young men, her servants, she said to them:—

"Saddle me a beast and drive on."

Down yonder at Mount Carmel was the man of God who, she believed, had power to bring to life the dead child. But there on the highway was the mother with her heart breaking; down there in the home at Shuman was the boy lying on the bed of the man of God, dead—and you have the picture.

And they went on and Elisha looked down the road and saw them coming, and he said to Gehazi, who was sort of a private secretary:—

"Yonder comes theShunamite. I wish you would see what she wants and what brings her hither."

And Gehazi ran down the road and met her and saluted her in the words of my text:—

"Is it well with thee? Is it well with thy husband? Is it well with thy child?"

She answered after the manner of Eastern salutation:

"It is well."

She drew near to the man of God, dismounted from the beast, fell upon her knees, threw her arms about him and wept.

Gehazi possibly thinking her insane, came, seized her by the shoulders and by sheer force was about to drag her away when the prophet of God put out his hand and stopped him, and said:—

"Do not so rudely use her. The poor woman's soul is vexed and troubled within her and God has not revealed to me the cause of her sorrow."

Send for Sky-pilot When Heart Breaks

Then he turned to the woman and asked her why she had come and why she wept. She told him her boy had died and believed by what she had seen and learned of him as she watched him pass her house and as he had been a guest in her home, that he walked close with God, and if there was anybody in all the nation that she believed had power with God it was that same man, and she made that trip to have him help her.

Yes, sir, when your heart is breaking the first man you want to get under your roof is the preacher, the man that walks close to God.

You don't want the dancing master then, nor the saloon keeper, nor the card prize winner.

When your hearts are breaking you want somebody that keeps in touch with God. Then you will send for the sky-pilot.

She said:—

"My boy is dead and I want you to go back and help me and bring to life again."

And Elisha said to Gehazi:—

"Gehazi, here, you take my staff and go lay that on the dead child that he may live."

I don't know, but I have always thought that God told him to do that.

What we want is a personal touch; there is too much of this other business. I think one of the curses of the church today seems to be a perpetual sign hanging from the pew:—

WANTED—A recipe whereby our work can be accomplished by proxy.

And they think if they drop a check in the plate, they are released from responsibility and absolved from any necessity for doing anything for God.

She said:—

"I want you to go with me."

And Elisha said to Gehazi:—

"Go lay the staff on the dead child that he live."

But she clung to him weeping and said:—

"As the Lord God liveth and as my soul liveth I will not let thee go."

And she compelled the man of God to accompany her home. He put everybody out of the room, out of the house. He walked into the chamber where the dead boy was lying on the bed, and we are told that he spread himself upon the dead child, put his face to the boy's face, his hands on the boy's hands, his heart to the boy's heart, and he prayed and God heard his prayer, and the heart in that child started like a huge pump and drove the blood through the veins and the arteries; his eyes moved, his lips trembled, he sat up and asked for his mother.

God Wants to Teach Importunity in Prayer

Elisha called to Gehazi and said:—"Carry the lad to his mother."

And the house of sorrow was turned into a home of mirth; that of grief into happiness; that of misery into joy, because the woman's confidence was not misplaced and God had heard the prayer of the man and restored the boy to life.

Now why do you suppose God gives us that beautiful and matchless story? I'll tell you.

That's simply an Old Testament incident; that is simply a pastoral incident of centuries and centuries ago, but there is a lesson in it that I think and feel is peculiarly applicable to this meeting tonight, and for that reason I bring you the message, and that is, God wants to teach us importunity in prayer, determination to accomplish the thing upon which our heart is set no matter what difficulties or obstacles may be in the way.

Years ago in Cincinnatti a minister had preached as best human wisdom could depict the life of God to a sin-cursed world, and as he was drawing to the close of his sermon the Lord seemed to say:—

"Make the application of your message personal. Ask if there is not one here that would like to be a Christian."

And he did what he hadn't done in that rich and fashionable church for years. He said to the people:—

"Let us bow our heads in prayer. If there is some one here that is sick and tired of sin and wants us to pray for you, lift your hand."

And as all were still, just then the door opened and a young man walked in, dropped in the rear seat, leaped to his feet, raised his hand and then cried out:

"Pray for me, sir; I am sick and tired of sin.'!

And the minister prayed. Then he hurried down the aisle and took the young man by the hand. He learned from him a sad story of prodigality and wandering. He learned that for eight years he had been a wanderer on earth; had heard nothing from home; knew not whether his parents were living or dead.

His Dying Old Father Wouldn't Let God Go

The minister advised him to write home and tell his parents what he had done. He didn't expect a reply from Brooklyn for four days. The fourth day no answer came; the fifth day no answer and he was worried.

The sixth day no answer and he was troubled. The seventh day and no answer and he was in distress. The eighth day and no answer and he was in agony.

The ninth day and the letter came, but the envelope was bordered with black. With tear-dimmed eyes and trembling hand he broke the seal and read something like this:—

"My Dear Son: The joy which your letter brought to our home and hearts was only exceeded by the sadness which was there at the same time, for as nearly as we can conclude, the same day and the same hour that you found Jesus Christ as your Saviour, your old father was going out into the skies.

"All day long he rolled and tossed upon his bed; his mind wandered up and down the earth, he knew not where, and ever and anon he would cry out in misery:—

" 'Oh, God, save my poor wandering drunken boy today.'

"We would turn his mind from you; and divert his attention from your prodigality and your sin, but ever and anon his mind would roam from place to place and he would cry out in sorrow:—

" 'Oh, God, save my poor wayward wandering, drunken boy today.'

"And just as he passed into the skies he cried:—

" 'Oh, God, save——'

"And he finished the prayer in the presence of Jesus."

Do you know the result? Down at the bottom of the letter the mother added this footnote. She said:—

"You are a Christian tonight because your old father would not let God go."

Oh, for men and women that could pray like like that or mothers that would forget, or husbands that would forget.

An Effective Retort.

The late Rev. Patrick Watson, vicar of Earlsfield, was a great authority on the Holy Land, and he was also a stickler for accuracy. An amusing passage of arms once took place between him and the archbishop of Canterbury. A committee report was under consideration, and Mr. Watson objected to the heading "Removal of Premises" on the ground that the things inside the premises were removed and not the building.

Dr. Temple replied, "I suspect you often tell your wife the kettle boils, but it doesn't."

The meeting roared with laughter and passed on to the next business.—London News.

NO EXCUSE FOR IMPURITY TODAY

Boys and Girls Told They May Live As Purely As of Yore

The chapel of the State street Methodist church was filled last night with young boys and girls who listened to a most inspiring uplifting address.

Miss Maud B. Perkins, of Syracuse, President of the W.C.T.U. or Onondaga county, and organizer of the Young People's branch in this city, was the speaker of the evening, and her talk will no doubt be long remembered by all who heard her speak on moral lessons last night.

Miss Florence Kelly conducted the devotional exercises, and her prayers were inspiring as they were helpful to the cause that so many old and young people of this city are fighting and struggling for—temperance and purity.

The members of the W. C. T. U. headed by the President, Mrs. Sylvester, were in attendance. They were the honored guests of the young folks.

Miss Hart, president of the Young People's branch, called the meeting to order at 8 o'clock, and began by asking the assembly to sing "True Hearted, Whole Hearted," a Y. P. B. song. The chorus closes with these words: "God is our leader; and His Will be done."

Miss Kelley read a verse from the Bible according to St. John, which was appropriate for the occasion, and closed with prayer.

President Hart then introduced the speaker of the evening, Miss Maud B. Perkins.

The speaker said, that she was glad to be with the boys and girls of Fulton once more, and announced that speakers and members of every branch of the W.C.T.U. from all over the State were coming here for one week in July, 2d to the 6th, and hold one of the largest parties ever held in this city.

She then claimed that New York State leads all other states in the union in the number of boys and girls who were members of the Young People's branch of the W.C.T.U.

"New York State has 1500 more young men belonging to our organization than any other one of the 48 states, and every one of these young men have signed the triple pledge. A great many more have signed the single pledge and from what I have been able to discover everyone of our large organization is keeping their promise to abstain from all alcoholic drinks.

"When the young people of today read the stories of their grandparents, and they learn the purity of those relatives of a generation or more ago, they ask themselves, 'why they did not live in those times?' There is no reason why you cannot live just as pure a life as did your grandparents, if you but watch and pray.

"All along the railroad lines between New York and the Pacific coast you will see signs that have a bearing one way or another upon prohibition, and by 1920, those that are living will see this whole country marching under the Prohibition banners of purity and temperance.

"Today there are more saloons in New York city than there are in 36 states in the south and southwest. Statistics show that every seventh girl in New York is a recruit of the white slave traffic, and for the year of 1914 there were 60,000 girls ruined by the vice in the United States.

"It is tiem that something is done to prevent it, and we relie upon the Young People's branch of the W. C. T. U. to help us crush this canker that has come into our midst. Every boy and girl of this organization should work and strive to abolish this traffic in souls and to drive the liquor habit out of this State.

"The habits and lives that you now lead will effect the coming generations. If you lead lives of purity, love and sobriety, those that follow in the future will also be pure and holy. If your life is spent in wastefulness and intemperance so will the children of the future be. This is called inheritance, and inheritance is a powerful organizer, either for good or for evil. Which do you choose?"

The speaker at this point gave many demonstrations of her meaning by reciting moral lessons that have come under her observation. For instance a young girl about the age of 23 had always lead a live of purity and yet was often attacked with the alcoholic liver complaint. She visited several doctors who told her her ailment, and she became insulted; until Miss Perkins, to satisfy her own mind and that of the young girl, called upon a specialist and, after describing the patient's trouble, the doctor remarked: "That if the girl had always lead a liife of purity and sobriety the disease must have been inherited. Upon investigation this was proven to be so. The father at one time had been a drunkard but from the time this little girl was a child of six had not touched a drop of alcoholic liquor, and now because of that father's intemperance the girl must go through life a physical wreck.

Continuing the speaker said, "You are building your characters today and in this wonderful land of opportunities there is a place for you, and the ones that demand and receive the highest salaries are those who neither smoke cigarettes or drink whiskey, beer or cider. The business world today demands that their employes shall be temperate they have no room for the other kind.

The speaker then cited the changes that transpired in the works of Henry Ford, the automobile manufacturer, and Thomas A. Edison's plant where the smoking of cigarettes are forbidden.

Miss Perkins then described a saloon keeper who went into a business place to pay a bill, and paid the debt with a check given by a hard working man who was an habitual drunkard, and as he paid the bill, the drunkard's little boy, sick and weak for the want of nourishment looked through a window into the store during the transaction. This is but one, or we might say two, of the many moral lessons the speaker gave to the young people last night to awaken their dormant powers and stimulate into their hearts the ambition to go out and fight for the good of the cause.

Miss Perkins described in detail the use license money is put to. The chief thing being the poor fund, and with alcohol out of the State there would be less poor people to draw upon charity, and there would be less money for the grafters to use in election campaigns.

The speaker then told of a meeting in Washington not long ago when North and South joined in singing "Home, Sweet Home" because the song written by Payne so many, many years ago was teeming with the purity of the soul.

"Can you imagine our future generations singing, "O, You Million Dollar Doll." Looking back after an age has passed away the many songs of old are still sung, but the songs written now-a-days, are doubtful. There is neither sentiment nor purity in them and the sooner forgotten the better for the public."

The meeting closed with a prayer by Mrs. Sylester, president of the local W.C.T.U.; after which a supper was served the guests in the basement of the chapel.

Young German Patriots Saluting Kaiser Wilhelm.

Young people, as a rule, are intensely patriotic. They believe—and it is natural they should—that no country equals their own native land. No other nation is so great and powerful and nowhere else are the soldiers so brave. It is entirely proper that one should cherish a love of country and home, for without patriotism to inspire it no nation would amount to much. The boys in the picture are German, and their picture was taken during a recent visit of the German emperor to Berlin. At the present time he does not spend much time at his capital, but more frequently is at the battle front. The boys, you will notice, are dressed in uniform. They were standing at their window so as to be able to see their loved ruler, and when he arrived opposite their place they saluted in true military fashion.

The Game of Teapot.

An amusing game to be played by any number is called "teapot." Let one player choose a word. The others are to guess the word. In order to do this they all ask questions which the word chooser must answer. This sounds simple. The difficulty, however, is that the chosen word must have two meanings, "roll," for instance, which may mean either the variety we enjoy for breakfast, or to turn over and over. Or it may be words spelled differently, but pronounced alike, such as "night" and "knight."

In answering the questions the player must use the meanings alternately, substituting "teapot" for the chosen word. Thus, suppose the word is "roll," the beginner might ask, "Does it belong to the vegetable kingdom?" The answer would be, "Teapot does belong to the vegetable kingdom."

Suppose the next player asks, "How would you get to the top of a high mountain?" The answer might be, "I could not teapot there." The successful guesser has the privilege of choosing the next word.

Advice For Hiking Scouts.

There are several things for boy scouts to remember when going on hikes. An old woodman gives the advice, "Never walk over anything you can walk around; never step on anything that you can step over." H. W. Gibson, in an article on the subject of hikes, advises a pace of two or three miles an hour and warns against excessive water drinking on the part of the hikers. He also advises that the scout carry only the things absolutely needed, rolled in blankets, poncho army style.—Chicago Tribune.

The Town of Hollowell

By EUNICE BLAKE

Edgar Wharton when he came of age inherited $10,000. He did not consider the amount sufficient to compete in trade with the larger concerns doing business in the city and formed a plan to go west and grow up with the country. But with the whole west to choose from he was at a loss where to betake himself.

One day he received a circular directing his attention to the town of Hollowell, in a new fledged state beyond the Missouri river. The circular named numerous advantages that Hollowell possessed. The climate was a perpetual summer; the earth was so rich that seeds dropped anywhere would produce in abundance; the water was as clear as crystal.

"That's just what I'm looking for!" exclaimed Edgar, and he went right off to his fiancee to tell her about it. She was so delighted with the description of Hollowell that she said nothing would please her better than to live in such a place, whereupon Edgar proposed that since the distance there and return was great they be married and go there to remain. To this the young lady agreed. They were wed, and, prepared to settle in Hollowell, they started west.

The circular was signed by one Alphonse Honeydieu, a real estate agent, who was selling town lots in Hollowell like hot cakes. Wharton wrote him that he was coming, and Mr. Honeydieu, who proved to be a French Canadian, met him at the station, a handsome brick structure that bespoke prosperity for the town. He took them to his house in a $3,000 auto and insisted on their being his guests while they looked about them. After a rest overnight he took them on a tour of inspection, calling their attention to various properties that he had sold and resold at rising prices, making a number of persons rich. On the outskirts of the town was a very large factory surrounded by a forest of noble trees, a part of which had been cut down and the timber removed. Mr. Honeydieu explained that the factory was used for the manufacture of wood paper and employed 2,000 hands. It was shut down at the time for the purpose of putting in additional machinery, but would be started again in a week or two.

Then the couple were driven back to the town and stopped at the library, which had been founded by Mr. Gardner Hollowell, the president and principal owner of the wood paper company. There was no one in the building except the librarian, a young woman who was spending her time embroidering. Mr. Honeydieu explained that books could be taken from the library and the citizens of Hollowell usually read them in their luxurious homes.

Mr. Honeydieu told Wharton that there was a tract of land that he thought he could get for him at a bargain in the direction toward which the town was growing. The owner had recently died and his estate must be settled within a given period. There was but little time to effect a sale, and he thought the property could be bought for a song. In a year or two it would be worth a fabulous sum. He drove the bride and groom out to look at it, and they were much pleased.

Wharton told Honeydieu that he wouldn't trouble him to take him and his wife in his auto any more. They would walk about and see the town for themselves. The real estate agent protested against this, saying that his car was especially intended for his clients; that he expected a dozen or two at once in a few days, but just now there was an interval. He couldn't think of permitting them to walk. Edgar insisted, and Honeydieu, when he found that he couldn't prevent Wharton from having his own way, reluctantly consented.

When they were alone Mrs. Wharton remarked to her husband that for such a prosperous place Hollowell looked very quiet. Mr. Wharton said that there were not so many persons in the streets as might have been expected. Meeting a man, Wharton stopped him and was on the point of asking him some questions about the location when Honeydieu swung around a corner in his car, interrupting the conversation by telling Wharton that he had got a price on the property he had shown him so low that it fairly took his breath away.

Mrs. Wharton expressed a desire to do some shopping and insisted on her husband accompanying her. This shut off Mr. Honeydieu, and the couple were left to themselves. Entering a dry goods store, a clerk who had evidently been asleep came forward.

"What's the matter with this place?" asked Mrs. Wharton. "There are a number of attractive buildings, and it looks prosperous, but there are few people in the streets, and there is an absence of hurry."

"I don't mind telling you," said the clerk, "since I'm going away tomorrow, that the town was built by the Wood Paper company. For some reason or other, tariff or trust, the plant has been left to rot away, and every one who bought property here at high prices is trying to sell out for what he can get."

ATTRACTIVE SPRING SUIT.

An afternoon suit of shepherd checked serge and black lacquered satin in oriental design, the skirt consisting of straight gores of serge alternating with circular gores of the satin, is pictured here. The kimono jacket of satin, lined with white pussy willow taffeta, has edges banded with black silk military braid embroidered in gold and green. It is a fine specimen of the modiste's art in adapting Japanese ideas in regard to dress to the taste of the occident.

III.

It was Heathcote who told me that one of the Belgians was familiar with the forest. In the rolling country upon which it gave to the south was a château, where he had been employed as a hunter until the outbreak of the war, when his own country had called him to the colors.

Here was a find! I did not even know where our retreat had brought us to. Of what woods these were I was ignorant. On the surrounding country I had never laid eyes. As a preliminary to operations it would have been necessary to spend some time reconnoitring and to run the risk of securing some one of the neighborhood as a guide. Now here was one right among us.

I sent for the man and was favorably impressed with him. He had the quick, alert eye of the hunter. The woods, he told me, were the forest of Vervé. They belonged to the château of the same name. He had been in service there almost up to the outbreak of hostilities, when he had been called to the colors in Belgium.

"Mr. de Vervé, no doubt, is with the French army?"

"Yes. He is a colonel of Chasseurs d'Afrique."

"And madame?"

"She has sent the children to her sisters in Paris. She herself remained at the château."

"What about Mr. de Vervé's niece, Baronne de Favreille—Mlle. Henriette?"

Of course my questions had made him aware that I knew the family of Mr. de Vervé or was well informed about them. But he had no inkling of what it meant to me to learn that this was the forest of Vervé, and that Henriette was at the château.

She was my sister's dearest friend. They had met at a girls' school near Paris, had soon become chums and had continued close friends. Amy had been at the Château de Vervé, and it was barely six weeks before the wholly unexpected outbreak of the war that the charming French girl had left Carden Hall.

United in Henriette were the finest traits of French character, traits unknown to the casual traveller and even less to the tourist, because he judges the French by a certain style of their literature and by that side of Parisian life especially provided for the entertainment of foreigners. From generations of high born men and women Henriette had inherited the charm of manner that can never be taught, because it must be innate. She was a product of the country to which we owe the porcelains of Sèvres, and she was as elegant, exquisite and rare as the daintiest of these bibelots. Every country has its styles of beauty, ranging from the statuesque to the slender. But no country has produced anything so graceful, so delicate, so subtle and yet so true as the high born French ingénue. Vivacity, illuminated by culture; a lightness of touch that evades the merely trivial, but never permits the serious to become dull; a delicious coquetry that, however, always reveals at some point the true woman in the background; and, when occasion demands them, sincerity and courage—add to these a figure slender, supple, yet strong; the shapeliest of hands; eyes that sparkle; curls that laugh in the sunlight—and you have Henriette. As Claude says in "The Lady of Lyons," "How like you the picture?" (I hope I am quoting correctly. I rarely do.)

The original—not "The Lady of Lyons," but the Baronne de Favreille—meant so much to me that I never had been able to muster up courage to tell her how much. It is really disgraceful that a man who has led troops in battle should lose his grit when it comes to pronouncing the three monosyllables, "I love you." But, you see, in battle the greatest risk you run is of losing your life, whereas upon the answer to these three monosyllables also depends the answer to the question, "Is life worth living?"

Amy was simply disgusted with me for allowing Henriette to leave Carden Hall without having confessed my love for her. My sister was not aware of my fear of coming a cropper at the three little words I've mentioned. But when I pleaded this in extenuation she was even more disgusted.

"The idea," she said, "of you, who have twice been promoted for bravery in the face of the enemy, suddenly turning coward in the face of a splendid girl like Henriette!"

"Has she ever said anything to you?" I asked weakly.

"No," she answered, and none too pleasantly.

"Isn't that a sign that all the odds are against me?"

At this she gave me a look which plainly said, "How little you know about women!" and, without deigning further comment she resumed her book.

IV.

But now I was in the woods of Vervé and in that part of the forest which belonged to the owner of the château whose roof still sheltered Henriette.

Determined to see her? Of course I was, and at the earliest moment. Nor would I sneak into the château by a back way. Whatever the risk from the enemy, I would be admitted at the front door or not at all. I questioned the Belgian regarding the distance to the château. It was inconsiderable. Could he ride? Yes. It was evening; the night promised to be clear. I bade him choose a mount for himself among some riderless horses that my men had found in the forest and brought in.

Silvain, such being my Belgian guide's poetic and appropriate name—since he was a hunter and forester—reported to me shortly afterward that he was ready. We threaded our way along a narrow saddle path, little more in fact than a forest trail for mounted huntsmen. By and by the woods grew a little clearer and we found ourselves at their edge. We had ridden in single file, with Silvain ahead. I watched him carefully. He had found and taken the path without hesitation and with the assurance of one familiar with his surroundings.

Beyond the edge of the woods the country was rolling. On top of a large knoll, about a mile away, I saw the château with its square, squat, crenellated towers, relics of an earlier castle that had stood there in the Middle Ages, but had been partially destroyed in one of the wars of that ruthless period. The slope between where we stood and the building looked like pasturage and good riding. Bidding Silvain await my return, I gave Cambrai the word and we were off through the dusk toward the dark mass into which the château had deepened. As we scampered up the slope we hardly could have seemed more than swiftly moving shadows.

In the château itself were but few lights and these few on the main floor, probably a lamp or two in the entrance hall, which, if an ancient part of the building, would be of large dimensions and used both as hall and apartment. There was a crenellated wall and a gateway to the court. The gateway was flanked by turrets, but the gate was open. In these war times no man capable of going to the front would want to remain behind as seneschal, or even be allowed to. I rode into the court and, slackening Cambrai's pace to a walk, up to the door.

Even before I had ascended a few stone steps the door was swung back by an old servitor, who, though he tried to conceal his alarm, was plainly nervous. He had not had time to notify Henriette that some one had ridden into the courtyard, for from one of the darkened apartments off the entrance hall I distinguished her touch on the piano, and her light, sweet voice singing:—

"It's a long way to Tipperary"

as I had often heard her sing it in England. You can readily imagine how it appealed to me as the marching song of the English army in France when I tell you that when Henriette chanced to hear it while she was stopping at Carden Hall she was so charmed with it that she sang it over and over again. To describe the delicious inflection with which she pronounced "Tipperary" is impossible, nor could I do justice to the delicate suggestion of pathos with which her voice and manner clothed several of the lines. Now in the almost deserted reaches of the château the effect was even more distant and sad. How far we were from Tipperary—from Carden Hall! Would that before she left there I had had the courage to tell her in the words of the song that she was "the sweetest girl I knew."

But the old man was waiting. Casually, and as if making a social call in time of peace, I drew out my card case, extracted my visiting card, handed it to the man and told him to take it to the Baronne de Favreille. What a look of relief came into his face as he glanced at the card, and—from Amy's stay at the château and Henriette's visit to Carden Hall—at once knew who I was! He was too old to sprint, but the speed at which he managed to cross the hall and enter the apartment whence came the sweet, sad voice singing "It's a long way to Tipperary" was amazing.

Equally so was the swiftness with which Henriette came upon the scene. The song broke off. A graceful figure paused an instant in the doorway. The next a slender hand held mine and a voice half wonder, half joy spoke my name.

V.

Profound as were my feelings for Henriette, I yet did not permit myself to attach too much importance to the warm, even excited welcome she gave me. Think of the time and circumstance. A country that two armies had just fought over; a château, "whence," so to speak, "all but she had fled." For her aunt, instead of sending the children to Paris, as she had intended to, had taken them there herself and the swift events of the war had cut off her return. "We had expected so much more of Namur," said Henriette sadly. Picture to yourself the harried loneliness; then, into that loneliness suddenly to appear a friend, who also is the brother of her dearest girl intimate. Are these things not enough to account for a sweep of the emotions from one extreme to the other? At least that is the way I accounted for her quite evident joy at seeing me, which in other circumstances might have thrilled me with hope. There was also another factor to be considered. Men were depending upon me to lead them, and it behooved me to keep a clear head.

I was aided in this resolve by the need of explaining to her how I chanced to be there. It was not necessary for me to go into details of the war. It had swept past her like a nightmare on the level ground at the foot of the gentle hills, on one of which stood the Château de Vervé. My own commanding general, with his staff, had made the château his headquarters for a day. The next day one of the enemy's general officers and his staff had been there a few hours, then moved on rapidly with the advance of their army. They had been confident of crushing the Allies within a week. But Henriette had seen the orderly withdrawal of the British troops and noticed that the English general and his staff did not bear themselves like defeated men.

I outlined to her my own plans, to which she listened with eager interest.

"Splendid!" she exclaimed. "You English never know when you are beaten. As for yourself, you will be a general before the war is over! Perhaps I can be of help to you. Listen. In the woods, on the high ground behind the château, is a small hunting lodge with a long, low building with stalls for horses. You will be more protected there from discovery, and the wooded edge of the hill will afford you better opportunity for watching your chance to attack bodies of hostile troops. Besides (and this was said with a piquant arching of the eyebrows), if you should have the leisure to honor me with another visit, your camp will be nearer the château."

Of course that settled it. But before I could say so there was a low whinny from Cambrai. That meant a warning to me of something unusual.

I went out, followed by Henriette. There was a whirring sound far above. Looking up, I saw two aeroplanes. It was their noise that had made Cambrai whinny for me. The higher of the two was English. Evidently in reconnoitring the German lines it had ventured too far and a Taube had come up in its rear. The Englishman, pursued by the German, was now making a circle of many miles in an attempt to escape and get back to his own lines with the information he had gleaned. It was clear that our aviator was alone, while the German carried a rifleman and was steadily mounting to get within range of the Englishman and bring him down. At that very moment there was a flash and the crack of a rifle from the Taube. The English aviator swerved from his course in order to throw the German off his range. But as I watched the flying craft swing and turn, like huge black birds in the moonlight, it was only too evident that the Englishman was playing hide and seek with death. His machine was darting hither and thither in efforts to spoil the German's aim. Now it surged almost directly upward, now described a giant spiral, now rose, now gave a sudden swoop downward as if to gather headway for another climb. But always like a hawk after its prey the German followed each manoeuvre with a similar one.

There was a rapid footfall on the steps of the château. A moment later Henriette, who must have left me without my noticing it, was beside me. Gleaming in the moonlight was the barrel of a rifle which she held out to me. If I could kill or even only wing the German aviator it would result in the machine falling precipitately to destruction and fatally to the two men on it.

Many a time I have stood in the butts and shot at birds wheeling on high. To miss had merely meant no grouse for supper. But here an English soldier's life was at stake and with it the information he had gathered and perhaps of vital importance.

I took aim and fired. The Taube reeled and staggered, zigzagged and glided about in aimless fashion. Then from its dizzy height it plunged headlong into the woods, too far away for the smash-up to be heard from where I stood with Henriette.

The English aviator came down near the château. Hurried as he was to get back, the winging of the German airman from so unexpected a quarter was worth investigating. I told him about the command I had organized and what I expected to accomplish with it and requested him to report the facts to the commanding federal of my division, who had served with my father in India and been one of his closest friends.

Henriette and I watched him fly away. I then turned to mount.

"Cambrai!" she exclaimed, now she was able to take a good look at my charger, who was thrusting his head toward her. "Oh! he remembered that I always gave him sugar." Lightly she darted into the château and when she came back held out her open palm with the sugar in it, which Cambrai contentedly crunched.

"It made me think of your visit to us in England to hear you singing my favorite song when I came in." I had swung myself into the saddle and was looking down at her.

"Yes, it is a beautiful song—so lively and yet so sad. I have sung it many, many times to myself since I left Carden Hall."

Slowly I rode down the hill to where Silvain was awaiting me at the edge of the forest.

A Matter of Sentiment.

"The artist who painted that picture never could have gotten such a price from you as you paid the dealer."

"Of course not," replied Mr. Cumrox. "I have some professional pride of my own. If somebody gets a good bargain out of me I at least want the satisfaction of knowing it was another human man."—Washington Star.

ERRORS OF SCULPTORS.

Statues in England Noted For Crude Blunders in Modeling.

Some of the statues in public places in England are notable for certain unique symbols or glaring errors in modeling. One of the former kind is the statue of Sir Anthony Ashley at Wimborne, Dorset. Carved out of a stone at the feet of the figure is a faithful representation of a cabbage, indicating that Sir Anthony introduced the vegetable from Holland into England.

Even more peculiar is the carving on one of the four panels on the Queen Victoria statue in George square, Glasgow. The subject is the knighting of James Anderson, the lord provost of that city. As no sword was available the ceremony was performed with an umbrella, and the substitute has been copied by the sculptor. This same statue is incorrect in one important detail. The stately pose of the horse is negatived by the position of the hind legs—a position which is only possible when a horse is racing at full speed.

Perhaps the worst equestrian statue in the world is that erected in front of Trinity college, Dublin, to the memory of King William III. Among other faults, one of the forelegs of the horse is straight and the other curved considerably, yet both hoofs meet side by side on the pedestal.—London Spare Moments.

Our Longest Canal.

The longest canal in the United States is the Erie canal, which covers a distance of 387 miles. The Florida East Coast canal is 350 miles long and runs from Mayport, Fla., to Miami. The Miami and Erie canal, between Cincinnati and Toledo, O., is 274 miles long. There are three canals in Pennsylvania, the Schuylkill Navigation company, between Mill Creek and Philadelphia, 108 miles; the Pennsylvania, between Columbia, Northumberland and Wilkesbarre, 198 miles, and the Lehigh Coal and Navigation company, between Coalport and Easton, 108 miles long. The longest canal in Europe is the Berlin-Stettin, 120, and the next longest, the Suez, 108 miles.—Philadelphia Press.

Beauty of Zambezi Falls.

To realize fully the wondrous beauty of the Zambezi falls, Rhodesia, one must have time to linger and watch the ever changing scene. The depths of the chasm below are veiled from sight by the rising columns of opalescent mist, and above the yawning abyss the sun glints and sparkles, weaving the drops into a magnificent rainbow. Three hundred feet below roars and boils the swirling flood as it emerges from the Boiling Pot, rushing on down the zigzag gorge between towering cliffs of rock, narrow, fierce and of unfathomable depth.—African World.

She Was Frank.

The moving picture director was having trouble in getting one of the scenes right. The girl was supposed to resist an attempt to kiss her, but the rehearsal was far from satisfactory.

"Think, now," said the director, coaching her, "haven't you ever tried to stop a young man from kissing you?"

"No," was the girl's frank reply.—London Answers.

Modern Superciliousness.

"My ancestors came over in the Mayflower."

"Yes?" rejoined Mrs. Cumrox. "I understand that the fare was really quite low. But, gracious me, the boat must have been terribly overcrowded."—Washington Star.

The World's Languages Now and What May Be in the Future.

How many men, if asked how many languages there are in the world, could give anything like an accurate answer? The average man's knowledge or ability to speak languages rarely exceeds two besides his native tongue.

It may appear strange, but it is nevertheless true, that there are over 4,000 languages spoken by mankind, while the number of dialects exceeds this. There are more than sixty vocabularies in Brazil, and in Mexico the Nahua is broken up into some 700 dialects. There are hundreds in Borneo, and in Australia there is no classifying the complexities. Let us assume that fifty dialects, on an average, belong to each language and we have the colossal total of 200,000 linguistic abilities.

A century hence the probability is that there will only be four languages of importance in the world. Central Europe may produce a newer and more straightforward German language. Imperial English may reign alone over the North American continent, while a more businesslike Spanish will be used in South American states. Then Russia may take on some more rich Slavonic dialect, which will blend the races of eastern Europe and central Asia into a harmonious federation. So also in future these four languages will settle into what may be a never ending competition.—Pittsburgh Gazette.

Drink Plenty of Water.

If you would have a clear complexion drink plenty of water between meals and exercise out of doors every day.

Cold water stimulates the membranes of the stomach, and hot water soothes them.

Sipping either is better than swallowing rapidly, and when the taste of hot water is unpalatable a pinch of salt or a dash of lemon juice will improve it. A pinch of soda with the lemon juice is even better.

A rational habit of drinking water will not only improve the health, but will preserve it. Water and milk are both very good to keep the kidneys acting well.

For Tender Feet.

Carbolated vaseline, well rubbed into the skin, is said to be excellent for frostbites.

Where the skin is broken zinc oxide is sometimes very healing.

White cotton stockings should be drawn on the feet, when any cream is used.

Massage after a warm foot bath helps to stimulate the circulation where there is a proneness to cold feet and is a preventive of frostbite.

When Hair Darkens.

Light hair grows darker as one grows older. The woman who is troubled by her hair darkening might add the juice from half a lemon to next to the last rinsing water when she washes her hair. If her hair is not too dry it will not harm it to put a teaspoonful of borax in the shampoo bath.

A hair restorer is composed of twice as much Jamaica rum as castor oil and a few drops of either oil of roses or lavender. Rub it well into the scalp, being careful not to have any more than possible touch the hair.

Sties on the Eyelid.

Sties are occasioned by the irritation of the hair follicle out of which an eyelash springs. They should be opened as soon as the pus is formed, for they will not get well as long as the pus remains.

For inflammation of the follicles and scaliness add to an ounce of vaseline fifteen grains of precipitated sulphur. In applying this ointment it is well to warm it a little.

Unconscious Frowns.

Don't narrow your eyes when you wish to be impressive. If you draw your mouth into a button and allow deep lines to pucker between your eyes you will acquire a habitual cross expression. Is anything more unpleasant than an angry face with its features tied in veritable knots?

Rothschild Arsenal.

The Austrian Rothschilds are the only members of the family to manufacture armaments. As proprietor of the Witkowitz iron works in Moravia, Baron Louis de Rothschild, the head of the Austrian branch, furnishes the army with metal for its guns and the navy with armor plates. These huge works, the technical organization of which is perfect in every detail, have grown out of a small foundry purchased by the late Baron Albert de Rothschild. The development of the Austrian railway system is also closely connected with the Rothschilds. They financed the two largest lines in the empire—the north and south lines—and still hold a good portion of the shares.

Other men are issues through which we read our own minds.—Emerson.

Their Longest Run.

"Your show was the worst we have ever had here," said the manager of the Hicksville Opera House as he handed the manager of the Fly-by-Night company his share of the box office receipts.

"That's queer," said the manager of the company. "Why, when we played in Chicago we had the longest run in the history of the city."

"I'm sorry," replied the manager of the opera house.

"Sorry about what?" demanded the manager of the company.

"Sorry the audience abandoned the chase," replied the manager of the opera house.—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Badly Expressed.

Mabel—I don't believe you really meant it when you said you were anxious to hear me sing. Sam—Oh, I assure you I did! You see, I had never heard you sing before.—London Telegraph.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, Feb. 23.—Every person in the state who has a joint savings bank account with another, is interested in the outcome of a test case which State Comptroller Eugene M. Travis is about to take to the Court of Appeals for a final decision.

For the past decade it has been the custom to tax one-half of a joint bank account upon the death of the party interested is such account. However a few months ago a proceeding was started before Surrogate Newton Van Derzee in Albany county, which had for its object a test of the law. Surrogate Van Derzee held that these joint savings accounts were not taxable by the State; that nothing was transferred and that the survivor in interest had an absolute right to the account as it stood in the bank.

A different view of the matter was taken by William Schmer, who was at that time State comptroller and as a consequence he appealed to the Appellate Division which has just handed down a decision in which it affirms the position taken by Surrogate Van Derzee. Judge Woodward wrote the opinion of the court.

John S. Tilley, a manufacturer of ladders, died in Albany county on March 25, 1913. For about thirty-five years he and his wife had a joint savings bank account and at his death he had $28,481.49 on deposit. His wife did not appear to be interested in her husband's business, yet certain realestate which she owned was used for the business. Mrs. Tilley always had the possession of the bank books of deposit and the accounts were in both her own and the name of her husband.

Upon the death of Mr. Tilley the bank accounts became known and the appraiser made a finding that Mr. Tilley was the owner of half of the joint account and an order was accordingly made assessing the tax on the sum of $19,240.74. Mrs. Tilley took an appeal to the surrogate where it was reversed. From this order the State took an appeal in turn.

It was argued on the appeal that it "matters not whether the rights of the survivor accrued as alleged contractural rights, or as voluntary provisions, if the decendent intended that only at his death the survivor's title in interest should become absolute and fixed, a tax should be imposed of the transfer of his interest in the funds."

"But," writes Judge Woodward, "we are not here dealing with an equitable but a tax problem; we are not interested in the intent of the deceased but with the legal relations of the parties to these joint accounts. No special tax should be imposed upon the citizens unless it is within the letter and the spirit of the law, and the only question to be determined is whether the law has provided for the termination of joint accounts."

Judge Woodward then quotes Section 144 of the Banking law, declaring that when a deposit shall be made by any person in the names of such depositor and another person and in form to be paid to either of the survivor of them, such deposit thereupon and any additions there to made by either of such persons upon the making thereof, shall become the property of such persons as joint tenants and the same together with all interest thereon, shall be held for the exclusive use of the persons so named and may be paid to either during the lifetime of both, or to the survivor after the death of one of them." Such payments, Judge Woodward says and the receipt therefore is a sufficient release and discharge of the bank.

JOHNSON AFRAID TO GO TO JUAREZ

By LEWIS T. MATSON

El Paso, Tex. Feb. 23.—Despite the statements of Jack Curley, the promoter, and those interested with him, that the fight will surely take place, therre is a growing conviction that the championship battle between Jack Johnson and Jess Willard will not be fought at Juarez.

The reason is plain: Jack Johnson is afraid to come to Mexico. He does not want to be returned to the United States to answer the white slavery and fugitive from justice charges hanging over him. He believes he will be convicted again and face a term in prison. This would eliminate him from the pugilistic map, whether champion or not.

The fact that Johnson hinted that Havana would be a good place for the title bout to be decided bears out this contention. The big black knows he is safe in Cuba and he knows he may not be so in Mexico, especially in Juarez with only a bridge separating him from that country and the United States.

The announcement by Curley that the fight may have to be postponed is taken by those on the outside to mean that the promoter is rather dubious about pulling off the big go. He insists that if the fight is postponed it will be only for a week or so. El Paso wants the fight. The people here want to see a bout for the world's title. But how can they see one if the champion will not be here to step into the ring? And between the lines in Johnson's dispatches to Curley can be seen that fact that the "big smoke" is afraid to place his liberty in jeopardy.

Willard is anxious to fight the champion. He believes he will bring back the title to the white race. He has hopes of the bout being pulled off in Juarez, but if it cannot be done, he will go to Havana or any other place to fight Johnson.

About Sports Generally

By Frank G. Menke

New York, Feb. 23.—Lemon Kegg, brother of one Orange Kegg, is a pugilist and not what his name implies. And, from all accounts, Lemon Kegg, who fights under the romantic ring name of Roger O'Malley, is one of the best feather-weights in these United States. At present he's the champion of the northwest.

Lemon, who was born in Johnstown, Pa., 22 years ago, realized at an early age that the name of Lemon Kegg was something of a handicap. He realized it even more when he busted into the ring game in 1910, just about the time when the word "lemon" was being used to describe joke fighters, joke ball players and other kinds of false alarms in the athletic world.

"They call me 'lemon' and I am 'lemon' mused Lemon Kegg. "There's no denying that. But I don't think I am a 'lemon' as a fighter. When some people yell 'lemon' at me I don't get sore about it, those who don't know that my name is 'lemon' will think they mean that I'm a lemon fighter."

Then it was that Lemon Kegg looked over a lot of fancy names that one could take upon one's self for prize ring purposes, and finally chose the name Roger O'Malley.

As Roger O'Malley, this Johnstown, Pa., boy has cut a wide swath in the pugilistic world in the past four years. His record is such that it entitles him to a battle with Johhny Kilbane, champion of the featherweight division, and Kilbane's manager has promised him an early bout if he keeps on flooring the other aspirants to the featherweight title as he has in the past.

O'Malley, who is being managed by Johnny Creeley, of Toledo, Ohio, has mingled in 47 fights. He has a punch like a mule's kick. Twenty-five of his fights have been won over the knockout route. In practically every one of his fights he has scored at least one knockdown. O'Malley never has been knocked out and only three times in his carreer has he lost on decisions.

O'Malley is the type of fighter that the fans like to see in action. He goes after his man at the tap of the gong—and he never lets up. He is a two-handed fighter, and he carries a terrific wallop in either mitt.

Lemon Kegg, alias Roger O'Malley, has a brother named Orange Kegg. He also is a feather-weight—a mighty good one. But he's not quite as good as his brother Lemon. This fellow Orange Kegg fights under his real name of Orange Kegg because an Orange Kegg is not as bad as a Lemon Kegg.

"Why were you boys named after circus fruits?" was asked of Lemon Kegg, alias Roger O'Malley.

"Darned if I know," answered Lemon Kegg. "Only possible reason I can figure out is that father or mother wanted girls at the time we came, and because we were boys they named me Lemon and named my brother Orange which is the next thing to a lemon."

Won by knockout	25
Won by decision	6
Won on foul	1
Draw	3
No decision	9
Lost on decision	3
Total fights	47

What do you think the bleacherites will do upon the first appearance in the box this season of Pitcher Hopper, of the Senators—the fellow who is said to have been swapped for a dog?

Fake interviews:
"I am in the market for a shortstop."—George Stallings.
"I'm off the umpires this season."—Heinzie the Zim.

"How much do you expect to hit this season?" was asked of Ty Cobb.

"Well," answered the slugging demon, "that all depends on what Joe Jackson does."

Tyrus, if you have noticed, doesn't shoot at any particular each year—that is, not any mark higher than from 10 to 25 above that of the runner up.

John J. McGraw plans to take 17 pitchers and Rube Marquard South with him.

The Brook Feds also plan to take Rube South with them.

Well, Rube's long enough to cut in half and allow each club enough for a suitable pitcher.

LEAGUE BEGINS COST TESTS

Contestants Giving Exact Expenditure for Materials in Each Loaf

New York, Feb. 23.—Still another investigation into the cost of bread began yesterday when the National Housewives' League's contest for the best home-made bread opened at No. 25 West 45th st., Mrs. Julian Heath, the president, announced.

Cash prizes have been offered by the league for the best yeast and the best baking powder bread. With every loaf submitted must go a ticket showing the ingredients and the cost of the materials. By tabulating this information Mrs. Heath hopes to discover what it actually costs to bake bread with flour at its present price, and whether the bakers are justified in raising prices.

The contest will continue the whole week, but housewives intending to exhibit their bread are asked t o register their names and addresses at the league's headquarters today. They will then receive the official blank, which must be filled out and presented with each loaf exhibited. Mrs. Heath desires that all women, whether members of the league or not, exhibit their skill in bread making.

Free lectures in bread making will be given throughout the week at the headquarters of the league by Emma G. Bossong, domestic science teacher of the league. Miss Bossong is prepared to answer any questions on the subject and will give practical demonstrations every afternoon. A woman may receive a lesson in bread making one day and then bake her loaves for the contest the next day.

Each exhibitor may submit either white or whole wheat loaves in the yeast bread and either tea biscuits or breakfast muffins in the baking powder class. The first prize will be $5 and a blue ribbon, the second $3 and a white ribbon, and the third $1 and a yellow ribbon. There will be a fed ribbon for honorable mention.

The blanks to be submitted with the bread call for information as to material used, cost of each ingredient, total cost, weight, time of preparation and kind of heat used in baking.

To-morrow William A. DeFord, Assistant District Attorney, will lay the evidence before the Grand Jury of an alleged conspiracy in restraint of trade in the selling of bread. On the same day the Attorney General's investigation at No. 299 Broadway will be continued. C. H. Canby, president of the Chicago Board of Trade, is expected to be present to testify as to the methods of wheat speculation in the pit.

Employes of the Ward Baking company who, it is alleged, made an agreement with their customers to all raise the price of bread also will be examined by Alfred L. Becker, Deputy Attorney General, in charge of the inquiry.

Davod McCarthy, 13, and his brother, Elmer, 9, were playing near the car with other boys and David entered the empty tank. He dared the others to follow him but the only one to accept the dare was his brother.

The two brothers lowered themselves in the basin in the container and hearing nothing from them the other boys raised an alarm. Elmer was found dead and his brother unconscious.

BRITISH TRANSPORT SUNK BY U-16 IN ENGLISH CHANNEL

Stringent Rules Intended to Prevent Continued Carnage of Vessels in Waters Infested With Submarines

By FREDERICK [illegible]

Berlin, Feb. 24.—by Wireless.—The admiralty issued a statement early today announcing that a British transport was sunk by a German submarine in the English channel. The statement follows: "A German submarine sank English transport No. 192 off Beachy Head at 4:45 p.m. yesterday."

Dover, Eng., Feb. 24.—An unidentified steamer sank this morning off Folkestone Pier. It is believed to have been torpedoed or to have struck a mine.

LATEST MINE AND SUBMARINE ACTIVITIES

Paris, Feb. 24.—The French ministry of marine today announced the receipt of the definite information that a German submarine which attacked the channel steamer Victoria on Monday was later sunk by a French torpedoboat. The submarine is believed to be the U-16, which has been attacking merchantships in the channel for a week. She was sent to the bottom off Cape Alprech, near Boulogne.

Dover, Eng., Feb. 24.—The British steamer Oakley of West Hartlepool was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine of Headstone today. All the members of the crew were landed. The Oakley was not far from Folkstone pier when she sank, indicating that the submarines are hugging more closely to the British coast. The Oakley was destroyed in the land traveled by English transports between France and English ports.

Copenhagen, Feb. 24.—A German submarine signalled the Swedish pilot boat Iris for assistance off Mundal last night. The Iris was unable to approach her because of mines and the submarine sank. It is believed she struck a mine.

Amsterdam, Feb. 24.—The Holland-American liner Moonderyk has gone ashore near Poorpershaven, according to a dispatch from the Hoop-of-Holland. Tugs have gone to her assistance. Rumors are current here that she struck a mine and had to be beached.

Stockholm, Feb. 24.—The Swedish steamer Stecia was sunk by a mine in the North sea. The marine bulletin posted here today announced her loss. She sailed from Liverpool on Feb. 2 with a crew of 18 and a cargo of 2600 tons.

PARIS CLAIMS U-16 WAS SENT TO BOTTOM

By Herbert Temple

London, Feb. 24.—The decisive result of German's submarine warfare against British shipping is an order from the English admiralty restricting all navigation in the Irish sea and the North channel, where a big section of the home fleet is stationed. Ships passing through the North channel must follow a certain route and they will not be allowed passage at night.

The Irish sea, the English channel and the North sea are swarming with submarines. In these waters the underwater craft have damaged or sunk about twelve ships since the "war zone" proclamation went into effect less than a week ago.

A dispatch from New Haven states that 18 members of the crew of the British collier Dranksome Chine were landed there. They report that the collier was torpedoed without warning about twenty miles from Beachy Head. The Branksome Chine left France Tuesday morning. The explosion was so great when the ship struck that her hatches were blown open. The vessel began to settle at once and the lifeboats were lowered.

A radiogram from Berlin conveys an official announcement to the effect that a British transport was sunk near Beachy Head, but the Germans evidently mistook the collier for a troop ship.

But the Germans have to pay their price for the consternation they are causing in British government circles and the panic they have struck into British shipping. A telegram from Paris announces that a German submarine, believed to be the U-16 had been sunk in the English channel by a French torpedo boat destroyer off Cape Alprech on Monday night.

An attempt to sink the Folkstone-Boulogne steamer Victoria proved unsuccessful. The packet was attacked in the darkness by a submarine which fired a torpedo across the bows of the vessel. The phosphorescent glow of the torpedo could be seen less than 30 yards in front of the Vicoria's bows. The attack took place within 4½ miles of Boulogne.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, Feb. 24.—Public hearings which give opportunity to those opposed or in favor of legislation as the case may be, to be heard before the members of the committees to which the bills they are interested in have been referred, will be the legislative program for the next few weeks.

According to th method of procedure in both the senate and assembly, after a bill has been introduced it is referred to a committee. If the members of a committee fail to report it, the chances are that such measure will never get on the day calendar. There are methods of bringing a bill from committee, the most prevalent being to cause a vote to be taken to discharge a committee from further consideration of it.

Schedules have already been arranged which include some three score of bills which are to be aired before both senate and assembly committees. The forthcoming hearings include all manner of bills.

On March second there will be a hearing on the bill to prohibit the practice of vivisection in schools; on the measure to reduce telephone rates throughout the entire State.

On March third will be heard arguments pro and con on the Mills-Pinkman bill which seeks to create a department of markets in the city of New York. The Ryan bill which aims to abolish capital punishment will also be given a hearing on the same day. This bill is by no means a novel measure, having been introduced for the past few years, yet without favorable result. It is not believed that this bill will be reported this session, in that Governor Whitman is on record as being opposed to substituting life imprisonment for electrocution for those found guilty of murder first degree.

Senator Springs bill relative to compulsory vaccination, is to be given a hearing on March 4. This bill has created considerable comment during the present session since there has been considrable contraversy over the wisdom of forcing children to be vaccinated against the wishes of their parents when there is no outbreak of disease. On March 4, also the Norton bill relative to the sale of canal lands will be given a hearing. The Walters measure bearing upon the subject is to be given a hearing on March 4, too.

Still another bill which is to be given a hearing on March 4, is that of Senator Horton which prohibits the selling of drugs or medicine by mail or express direct to the user, except upon the written order or prescription of a physician. This bill aims to put an end to advertisements which leave the impression that the medicines and drugs have been advertised and furnished by the advice of a physician.

On March 10, State?wide prohibition will be the sole topic for hearings. The Wilson-Gillette bills will both be discussed on that date and one of the largest delegations of the session is expected in Albany. The Assembly chamber will be used for the hearing.

Another Liquor law amendment, the bill by Assemblyman Preswick, will be given a hearing on March 11. This measure prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors in any city of the third class where there is a college or university supported wholly or in part by the State. The voters of such a city are to either or reject the proposition by a referendum. The measure has specific reference to the city of Ithaca, where Cornell university is located.

RAPIDLY CONSTRUCTED ROADS IN MODERN WARFARE.

The above picture shows a road made by Germans in five hours in East Prussia, which afforded a rapid movement of troops, following a fierce engagement. There are emergencies occurring like this very often during the great conflict, when it is necessary to construct roads, when impossible passes are encountered, and quick action is most necessary in modern warfare.

CUBA SUITS JACK, MEXICO DOESN'T

Would Fight Willard in Havana; Begins to Look Favorable for That City

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 24.—The conviction is growing that the championship battle between aJck Johnson and Jess Willard will not be fought at Juarez on March 6 or at any other time. Preparations for the big go are at a standstill, the promoters do not know where they stand. Willard has stopped training. And all in all the outlook is very dubious.

The latest information from Cuba is that Johnson will not leave that island for Mexico. He will not take any chances of being held by General Casranza's troops and the probability of being turned over to the United States authorities. From all reports the "Big Smoke" appears to be well satisfied with his stay in Cuba and is not anxious to leave. He is willing to fight Willard at Havana and it is more than likely that the big fight will be pulled off there.

Willard himself has no hope of the fight being pulled off here. He has stopped training, giving the excuse that he does not want to go stale. He will not take up the hard work of conditioning himself until he finds out where the fight will take place.

Until Willard knows what Johnson is going to do there will nothing doing.

Jack Curley says the fight will be pulled off in Juarez on March 7 but he is the only one who thinks so.

WELSH TRAINED DOWN

Milwaukee, Feb. 24.—Freddie Welsh lightweight champion, arrived today to finish training for his fight with Charley White tomorrow night. He is only 1½ pounds over the weight, 135 pounds. White is a slight favorite in the betting.

JAMES HOLDS OUT

San Francisco, Feb. 24.—Bill James, the Braves' star twirler, on his way to Los Angles, said today that he would not join the world champions unless his claims for a $600 salary are met. His contract calls for $4000.

NO "ROUGHING" LAW

Chicago, Feb. 24.—The 'Emery ball' was driven out of the Federal league. A rule calling for a fine of $200 on a pitcher guilty of "roughing" the ball, will be passed at the Federal league meeing in Buffalo the end of the week.

FIRE THREATENED RECORDS IN PATENT OFFICE

Washington, Feb. 24.—Valuable records in the U. S. patent office were menaced early today by fire which started in basement of the building. Prompt work by the firemen saved from destruction the originals of some early patents which were stored in the room where the fire started.

WHITMAN FINDS FURTHER DIRECT TAX NEEDED

Last Administration's Claims of Economy Had No Basis for Existence

Albany, Feb. 24.—Calling attention to the fact that the administration of 1914 had evidently made a pretext of economy, that it had deliberately exhausted the financial surplus of the State by failing to levy a direct tax as provided by the Constitution, and that the claim that $11,000,000 had been saved, was an empty one, Governor Whitman today in a lengthy message to the Legislation reviews the State's finances as he finds them. He says that the balance of the proper resources as approved by the Legislature will have to be met by a direct tax to the amount of substantially $11,000,000 which the last had claimed to have saved. He says that a direct tax of that amount will not leave a dollar of surplus in the treasury on October 1, 1915, and will not provide the necessary funds to meet the State Sinking Fund contribution which may mean a further direct tax.

The Governor shows that the adjusted surplus at the beginning of the fiscal year up to 1914 was $8,517,733.88, and that here was a lapsed balance of former appropriations of $1,102,713.90. He also shows that the total resources to meet budget requirements for the fiscal year of 1915 ending September 30 was $62,881,234.88, and that appropriations were made by the administration of 1914 for $40,222,338.75 for general purposes and $7,677,138.99 for Sinking Fund appropriations.

The Governor calls attention to the fact that a deficiency bill having $5,000,000 has been made necessary already and that the $101,000,000 for the Barge canal has been exhausted, and that $4,000,000 must be immediately raised for outstanding contracts.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Berlin, by Wireless, Feb. 24.—Gains by the German troops in the Vosges region and in the fighting around Przasnysz, Russian Prquand, were officially announced here today. In the Vosges 500 more French soldiers have been captured, while in the other towns the Germans have taken 1200 Russians and captured two cannons. Russian attacks have been repulsed near Grodno, southwest of Warsaw and northeast of Lonza.

Paris, Feb. 24.—The continued French offensive in Champagne is resulting successfully, according to this afternoon's advice. It states that the French forces have made new progress south of Perthes and, that also, during yesterdays engagement in the direction of Aubrize resulted favorably to the French.

Dover, Eng., Feb. 24.—All hope for the government collier Branksome Chine of Cardiff, which was torpedoed in the English channel yesterday was abandoned at noon today. It is now believed that she has gone to the bottom, as she should have reached Dover several hours ago if she had managed to keep afloat.

The Branksome Chine is probably the ship referred to in the German announcement that a British transport was sunk by a German submarine.

Vienna, via Berlin and Amsterdam, Feb. 24.—The government has taken over all stocks of flour, grain and produce.

FUN RAYS

By Ray L. Hoppman

CIVILIZATION

THE caveman slammed his brother with a heavy wooden club. We lift our hands in horror at the antics of this dub. The red man chopped the paleface with the feathered tomahawk and danced in joyful manner when he heard the victim squawk. The savage in the jungle gayly grins from ear to ear a'stabbing missionaries with a poison pointed spear. We voice our indignation at the fierce, bloodthirsty Turk — too handy with the pistol and the scimitar and dirk. We read of middle ages with a horror that's intense and shiver when we think about the armor covered gents. The Puritan his victim put in pillory and rack and gave him sixty wallops for a trifle, on the back. The pirate tortured seamen on the high seas by the score. They did not waste affection in the awful days of yore. We thank our stars we're living in this grand enlightened age. We compliment ourselves for having reached this cultured stage. We teach the howling heathen that it's naughty, don't you know, to slam a loving brother with a mallet on the toe. And so we pride ourselves that we're as noble as can be. We're boastful of our culture and our high mentality. We're civilized, I tell you, though we use the Gatling gun to mow 'em down by the thousands as we put 'em on the run. We're civilized, I tell you, though we drop bombs from the sky and kill 'em by the hundreds in the twinkling of an eye. We're highly cultured mortals, though we use the submarine to sink a thousand sailors—from the ocean depths, unseen. Ah, yes, we're much more civilized than people were before. We've made a lot of progress in the noble art of war.

EAR MARKS OF PROGRESS

Professor Eastman, who is giving a series of free cooking lessons to the women of Fulton, has a message of progress for each woman attending these demonstrated cooking lessons.

Through the courtesy of Katz and Co., in whose store the lessons are daily given, and too, the generosity of the Gas Co., which contributes the use of two modern ranges and the fuel, the women of this city are enabled to receive free, valuable, modern, up-to-date lessons in home-making. The Katz Co., and the Gas Co., are both to be congratulated upon their modern methods as business heads in a community. These are activities such as make for community interest. It is such saving grace as this that keeps interest in Fulton rather than sending it to neighbor cities.

About sixty women attended the class yesterday and went away with pleased exclamations. On Saturday the school girls are especially invited to be present, and Professor Eastman will no doubt in his jolly, happy way give the girls a lesson that will in a new way make home making have an added charm.

Farm Facts: By Peter Bradford

Every consumer is a market-maker.

The silo is the farmer's best friend.

In the country you keep your cheek close to the breast of Nature.

Let farming become an abandoned profession, and everything would stop.

Help to organize rural life and make the country a better place to live in.

Good cultivation not only helps growing crops, but permanently improves the soil.

We can best serve our interests by giving all possible attention to marketing.

Production without thought to marketing is like building elaborately on foundation premises that are not true.

The man that owns the soil on which he lives is the only man whose feet do not rest on shifting sands.

As the season advances, the plow is the farmer's best friend, but when the season closes the silo comes in handy.

The commonly accepted theory that we are short on production is all wrong. We are short on marketing information.

Many wealthy corporations and individuals have been telling the farmer how to plow, when they should have been telling him where and when to market.

The problem of marketing is the biggest business proposition of any age or nation, and one that will require the combined efforts of all the agencies of civilization to solve.

Opinions

Germany's Resources

Certain of the salient features of Germany's growth and development in recent years are contained in a statement recently given to the press by Gilbert H. Grosvenor, a prominent American geogropher and statistician.

"Only Belgium, Holland, Japan and the United Kingdom," says Mr. Grosvenor, "have denser populations than Germany. That country manages to crowd a population of 67,000,000 people into a territory so small that you could add New England to it and still have an area smaller than the State of Texas. Possessing only one-fifteenth of the area of Europe, Germany produces one-seventh of Europe's wheat, one-fifth of its oats, one-fourth of its rye, and one-third of its potatoes.

"The average farm in Germany is very small. Out of a total of 5,756,000 farms nearly one-half are smaller than 2½ acres, and less than 700,000 are larger than 25 acres. Of our own 5,373,000 farms more than three-fifths contain upward of fifty acres."

According to the same authority the Germans use more commercial fertilizer than any other three nations on earth, the farms being developed by scientific methods of intensive farming. Germany imported farm produce to the value of a quarter of a billion dollars more than it exported during a recent year, and groceries and confections to the amount of $120,000,000 above the exports of those commodities.

During the past quarter of a century no other nation has made such a wonderful bid for foreign trade as Germany. While the trade of the United States increased 275 per cent. in that time, and Great Britain's increased 100 per cent., Germany's increased 300 per cent. The secret of this success lies in the efforts to meet every condition of every market into which German goods went. Germany's merchant marine in 25 years rose from a negligible quantity to 4850 ships, with a net registered tonnage of 3,153,000 tons, and employing 78,000 sailors.

"The theory of the German government is that every able-bodied man is entitled to work, and that the government must find something for him to do if he cannot find it himself. Wherever there is a disagreement between a laborer and his employer it must be settled in a court created for that purpose. Neither party is permitted by law to offer or to accept a compromise.

"The people of German cities live amid surroundings of the law that are different in theory and practice from our own. In Berlin, for instance, it is forbidden in apartment houses to water flowers except between the hours of 4 and 5 in the morning; no one can play a piano before 7 in the morning or after 9 at night; no bedding may be aired from a front window; bathing at night is forbidden; one may not employ a servant without complying with police regulations or change his residence without police sanction. The German justifies these things on the ground that while they may sometimes interfere with his convenience, by and large they protect him from annoyances much greater than those that they entail. He says they give him a freedom from annoyances without his household that are infinitely more bothersome than the restraints they impose within his household."

The habits of methods and system charactistic of German's agriculture, manufactures and commerce, go far to explain the secret of German military efficiency.—Times, Buffalo.

Democrat Admits Party Blundered

Representative Broussard of Louisiana, who has introduced a resolution repealing the provision of the Tariff law which would put sugar on the free list on May 1, 1916, says that in order to put the treasury in sound condition, the Democratic revenue laws must be revised.

In a statement which he gave out for publication, Mr. Broussard declared that the Tariff law has proved itself a failure as a revenue producer, that the revenue from the income tax has been inadequate, and that unless changes are made in the revenue acts, the deficit at the end of the next fiscal year will be something like $190,000,000.

This frank confession by a Democrat, that his party has blundered, brings to mind again President Wilson's significant omission, from his last speech, of any reference to the Tariff law and the "new freedom" which he used to say that measure had secured for American business.—Journal, Albany.

Sunday Scored

The Public Press of Northumberland has devoted much space recently to the cause of temperance and evangelism and we were surprised to note the following in last week's issue but express the same sentiments and gladly reproduce the editorial:

"Billy Sunday has taken away booze, he has taken away the theater, (which must include church entertainments and all home talent productions which savor of theatricals), moving pictures, cards and dancing, and now he would take away pool and billiards from the Y. M. C. A.'s. About the only "worldly" pleasure he has not taken away from folks is that of sitting in the tabernacle and hearing him send all folks to hell who do not agree with him, unless he still tolerates base ball—and he may even send his old standby game to perdition, when he once finds that it too, is sometimes corrupted by gambling pools. All reasonable and broad-minded folks recognize the fact that Billy does a great amount of good. He hits and condemns a great many things which deserve just such treatment, but like many another reformer and evangelist he is an extremist, and a great many things that he says must be taken with a grain of salt. Possibly it is necessary for him to be an extremist and fanatic to set the world on fire, but it is a question whether he would not wield a wider influence, reach and effect more people, were he a little more reasonable and not such an extremist. Of course, one may excuse his position in regard to amusements by the fact that he combines all the fascination of the theater, the movies, dancing, cards, pool and billiards in his tabernacle gymnasties, and he will permit no competition. If folks were to take his advice literally in regard to these amusements they would all sit around like mollycoddles. Billy may learn yet that he will have to allow folks to have a few pleasures anyhow."—Public Press, Northumberland, Pa.

ZAIA'S ALLEGED ASSAILANT TAKEN TO AUBURN PRISON

Sheriff W. L. Buck yesterday escorted three prisoners sentenced by Judge Coville for varying terms in the State prison at Auburn. Thomas Moore, convicted of burglary and larceny, was sentenced to ten years on account of being an habitual criminal. This was the minimum sentence under the law, Maers having been previously convicted five times, twice before for felonies. This was his third conviction for a felony and he became thus automtically an habitual criminal. He broke into and robbed freight cars owned by the New York Central, stealing shoes and other articles. It was charged that he also induced two boys, Charles Bradshaw and Ralph Roy, to rob freight cars. Both young men pleaded guilty. Maers will probably be transferred to Clinton prison at Dannemorra, where it is customary to confine all habitual criminals. Bradshaw was also taken along. He will serve a sentence of one year and seven months in Auburn prison. This is his first sentence.

Natali Muscato, who was convicted of assault in the first degree on Frank Zaia, of 117 N. 4th st., this city, must serve a sentence of not more than two years and four months nor less than one year and six months in Auburn. He claims that he is not guilty and his attorney, James R. Somers, has declared that he will appeal the case.

Antonio Cottispotti, convicted of perjury in connection with the Black Hand cases in this city, and who furnished the alibi for Jim Branabi in the Morello case, was taken to Onondaga penitentiary at Jamesville by Deputy Sheriff Papetino.

Alton Hicks, who was sentenced to the Elmira Reformatory for placing an obstruction on the N. Y., O. & W. railway near Bunday's Crossing, in October last, will be taken there in the near future. Hicks must serve until discharged and will remain at the reformatory for fourteen months, which is the minimum term.

Jim Branabi, the alleged black hander of thisc ity, who pleaded guilty to assault in the second degree on Joe Morello, was also sentenced to the reformatory.

IT CAN BE DONE

BY I. E. HYDE FULTON N. Y.

I cannot find a reason why some people are so prone to cry: "It can't be done." Oh, shucks! Oh, fie! It can be done. I know that I am shouting facts. It's up to you, and you, old Slats; to place this statement on the racks. It can be done. But, if you sit and suck your thumb or, choose ragtime and stand and hum and let the other fellow drum. It can be done. I'll tell you this: Sir Old Kido; for this swift world you are too slow. Might better cash your checks and go. It can be done. Earth does not need a putty face, for things are moving at a pace. It seems we've challenged Mars a race. It can be done. We want the active on these runs. So now, move out, inertia sons; else heed my poor well meaning puns. It can be done.

What Prof. Eastman tells his cooking class. He both makes one laugh and think hard too. With his cakes he stirs in humor and science.

By Helen Hoyt.

There is nothing more heart-rending to the average housewife than a cake failure, and when that failure is one to nothing more or less tha an ill-shaped pan, which refuses to give up its contents without great difficulty and insists upon retaining half of the bottom, exasperation, pure and simple, is entirely to be forgiven. Baking utensils have been clecerly fashioned by various clever persons bent on the inevitable patent that is the twin brother to Genius as well as Vice is, (which makes them triplets, I suppose) and there have been such happily fashioned things placed out that are designed to eliminate the trouble of poor pans. The only trouble that one might find lurking in the existence of these very useful and desirable articles of kitchen comfort is the very important trouble of their being too expensive for the average woman's purse. The flexible knife, for instance, is a thing that every woman ought to have in her kitchen, for there is no knife so designed to save time and material as this knife which bends itself so willingly and wonderfully in curved basins of any size or shape. I suppose that if a woman would deprive herself of the little daily something that she does not need and would expend her pin money more segaciously she would find herself possessed of all the handy utensils so necessary, to good baking and cooking, and consequently to the happiness of her whole family.

Professor Eastman, the white-clad baker and "pure-food" cake expert, who is giving demonstrations of his methods and telling of his own experiences in cake baking in the Katz store, is also selling the most amazingly simple and highly useful utensils for that art that could possibly be procured anywhere, and he is selling them in a set, the "family set," at a very reasonable price, when one considers their high virtue of necessity. Prof. Eastman understands cake baking and eating and health in a really remarkable way, it might be said, and the way Professor Eastman can turn out cakes is the wonder of all the women in town. Just put the mixed batter in the oven and then light the gas. Mind, it isn't light the gas and then put the cake in, but it's put the cake in and then light the gas, a method at which a good many women openly gasped.

That is another of the Eastman ways of doing things. Another is, "Don't grease your caketins," In fact, Prof. Eastman does not call them tins or pans, but just what they are, moulds. His moulds are the kind that do not need greasing, for there is no difficulty whatever in taking a cake, entirely intact, from any one of them, and he has them for all kinds of cakes, layer, sponge, angel's food and any other kind that you can name.

That is another of the Eastman ways of doing things. Another is, "Don't grease your caketins." In fact, Prof. Eastman does not call them tins or pans, but just what they are, moulds. His moulds are the kind that do not need greasing, for there is no difficulty whatever in taking a caee, entirely intact, from any one of them, and he has them for all kinds of cakes, layer, sponge, angel's food and any other kind that you can name.

"By greasing the pan," says Prof. Eastman, "you take all support away from the cake and leave it slipping up and down in the pan, and not sticking to the pan as it should. The cake should stick to the sides of the pan, just as it will stick to your ribs, if you make the cake the right way. The grease won't let the cake get to the pan at all, and when you take your cake out of a greased pan you wonder why it is flimsy and sometimes you wonder why it falls like that."

The pans in which he bakes the best looking cakes you ever saw have a little knife-like arrangement in each end which slides up and down and when the cake is done, just pull these out and it is released from the pan at once without stocking. That is rather vague description so I guess you had better go and see the pans. (Which is one for, by the way, and two for Prof. Eastman).

Another Eastman proverb is, "Don't use baking powder but substitute cream of tartar and soda. It serves the same purpose and in the opinion of the bakers in general all baking powder is doped and in the manner of pure food experts who use pure food methods of doing things you will use no baking powder if you are on the lookout for good health.

Prof. Eastman lectured happily on the subject of health and illustrated his discourse with the story of his own experience that led him to take up the work of teaching others what is best for them to eat. He said that some years ago, at about the age when men are said to be in their prime, his health failed him entirely and he was said to be suffering with an incurable case of Bright's disease, which would leave him with about one more year to live. He was taking all the medicines and drugs that could be had to cure himself and he found nothing did him any good. Finally common sense told him that he was not eating the right things, that the body, the temple of man, was not being kept in the right sort of repair and had not for the past twenty years of his life, and that the food he was eating was the reason for it all. So he took up the study of what he should eat and the result was entire and complete cure, in a very short time. So delighted and thankful was he for the return of that most valuable thing that a man can have, health, that he took up the great work in which he is now engaged and he understands not only what one should eat, but also what ingredients are needed to form them and for the best benefit to the system. His method of baking pure, food cakes, is quite remarkable in its extreme simplicity and when one tastes them one is convinced that he is a born baker of cakes, despite the fact that he has at one time been a president of a college.

He advised thorough mastication, not only of heavier foods but also of soft foods, and particularly of starchy foods. Chew your food so that you swallow it involuntarily, he says, and understand that all the diseases and pains and illnesses that beset the health of human beings are due to the putrefaction of undigested, poorly masticated foods, which the system of bowels, kidneys and liver can not dispose of properly and hence can not rid the body of its waste matter.

Professorr Eastman's cakes are in themselves with the eating and to watch him bake them is a treat. But to hear him tell of the things one ought to eat, of pure food and of clean interior bodies, is worth a goodly amount of your time, so it is to be hoped that you will go to the store today and hear him.

The recipes used by Prof. Eastman in his two lessons have been that of Angel Food and Golden Loaf Butter cake. The recipes follow:

Angel Cake

Whites of 8 fresh eggs, or one cup; 1 cup flour; ½ teaspoonful of Snell's Flavoring Powder; 1 teaspoon of salt; 1¼ cups granulated sugar; ½ teaspoonful cream of tartar.

Golden Loaf Cake

½ cup butter; 2½ cups flour; ½ teaspoon soda; ½ teaspoon Snell's flavoring powder; 1¼ cups granulated sugar; 1 cup sweet milk; 1 teaspoon cream of tartar; 8 yolks of eggs.

Eastman Hints

Baking powders are dangerous.
Start all cakes in cold oven.
Greased tins are unsanitary.
Science is necessary.
Suitable materials important.
Eggless cakes in bread family.
First raise egg mixtures.
Bake egg mixtures after raising.
Bay window cake was cooked first.
Invert cakes in tin; let cool.
Never stir the milk into the creamed butter and sugar without flour.

An Effective Retort.

The late Rev. Patrick Watson, vicar of Earlsfield, was a great authority on the Holy Land, and he was also a stickler for accuracy. An amusing passage of arms once took place between him and the archbishop of Canterbury. A committee report was under consideration, and Mr. Watson objected to the heading "Removal of Premises" on the ground that the things inside the premises were removed and not the building.

Dr. Temple replied, "I suspect you often tell your wife the kettle boils, but it doesn't."

The meeting roared with laughter and passed on to the next business.—London News.

M'CRISKIN CASE GOES TO JURY

First Case of Its Kind Under New Law; Other Petitions Filed

[The Times]

For the first time since the law was enacted several months ago, a motion was made yesterday in Surrogate's Court for a jury trial of objections to a will. The form of procedure was invoked by Thomas L. McKay, attorney for Mrs. Lucy McCriskin McKay, who seeks to set aside the will of her grandfather, Patrick McCriskin. Mrs. McKay is the wife of James O. McKay, brother of Attorney McKay. The McCriskin estate, of which decedent's two sons, William P. and Henry McCriskin, are executors, is valued at $5,000 real and $2,790 personal. He left nothing to Mrs. McKay, who was his favorite grandaughter and who lived with him for many years. Bequests were made by Mr. McCriskin to his grandchildren, and $200 was divided between the three McKay children, but Mrs. McKay was not mentioned in the will. The residue of the estate was left to the sons, William and Henry. It is said that some time prior to his death Mr. McCriskin deeded much of his property to his family, Mrs. McKay getting one parcel. John J. White represents the executors.

Mrs. McKay claims that at the time of the making of the will her grandfather was not of sound mind and understanding and also that undue influence was used.

A jury trial was granted by Surrogate Miller and he will certify the case to the Supreme Court, it being stipulated for the calendar of the March term. The decision of the jury in the Supreme Court will be certified to the surrogate, who will then confirm it. Certifying the case to the Supreme Court obviates the expense for drawing a special jury to serve in Surrogate's Court.

A petition was filed yesterday for the probate of the will of Thomas McSweeney, late of Fulton, who left an estate valued at $6,000 real and $100 personel, to his wife, Mary McSweeney, who is made executrix.

The will of Margaret Manwarren, late of Mexico, disposes of an estate valued at several thousand dollars. The residue of the estate goes to Ella and Addie B. Hubbard, to be equally divided, the latter to receive at the death of another a farm at Texas, New York.

Letters of administration were applied for on the estate of George Herman, late of Minetto, by his daughter, Mrs. Anna B. Modry. He left an estate valued at $1,000.

Letters of probate were issued on the estate of Mrs. Catherine Garahan to her sister, Mrs. Patrick Judge, to whom the estate was bequeathed.

Letters of probate were issued on the estate of Lewis Gilmore, late of Oswego, to his widow. The will was filed several months ago.

Letters of administration on the estate of Michael Farrell, late of Oswego, were issued to George E. Farrell to administer $89 received by the estate from the Homestead Association of Utica. The estate was administered several years ago.

Sarah Althouse was appointed guardian of Raymond M. Althouse and Ella J. Althouse. The minors are legatees to the amount of $100 under the will of John F. Brown, late of Minetto.

FREE SWIMMING LESSONS

Oswego's Y.M.C.A. will in the spring teach boys of the city to swim, whether or not they are members of the organization. The swimming campaign will be in charge of the association physical director, J. B. Moore. Last year a campaign of the same kind was held and over 100 boys were taught to swim.

An educational campaign is also to be inaugurated through the assistance of the State Educational Department. A number of stereopticon views have been received showing views of Niagara Falls and other places of natural and historical interest. A lecturer, familiar with the places, will be secured and will explain the views.

"SANITO"
COOKING UTENSILS
are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

Every year they bring together at a general convention the results of a year's work along some special line.

CHURCHES WANT TO HOLD THEIR PRESENT PASTORS

At Monday night's quarterly conferences of the First and Trinity M. E. churches of Oswego, resolutions were unanimously adopted asking for the return of the two pastors who are at present serving those fields—the Rev. Jabez Stallwood and the Rev. Mr. English. Respecting the case of Mr. Stallwood the Palladium says:

"The resolution as adopted was couched in the strongest language. It recited Mr. Stallwood's strength as a pastor and as a preacher and asserted that it was imperative that he be returned to the church in order that the society can carry out its enterprise in the shape of the new church now rebuilt and being paid for.

Portuguese People Falsely Represented as Eager to Fight Germany

Lisbon, Feb. 24.—(by mail to New York) Dozens of times dispatches have been sent out through English or French forces representing Portugal as about to plunge into the great war on the side of the Allies. Americans may well have wondered why this much heralded event failed to happen.

The British wish is father to the thought. There is a war party here, but the mass of the intelligent Portuguese realize clearly the folly of embarking on hostilities if the peace can possibly be kept. As in the case of Italy, sentiment for peace has been augmented steadily by the recurrent object lessons of misery caused by the war from Belgium, France, Poland and Serbia.

The war question has caused a grave political crisis in the Portuguese republic, now five years old. The country is now under a military government. The new cabinet is a war cabinet, but it found the opposition to its policy far greater than anticipated. One month after the war cabinet took office the President suspended it and called General Pimenta de Castro to form the military government which now rules.

The cabinet had put the control of the government into the hands of a secret revolutionary party called "The White Ants." The cabinet found its stumbling block in the army itself, for the Portuguese officers are opposed to joining an expedition to England.

The anti-war newspapers were severely suppressed, but nevertheless the insurrection against the war cabinet became so alarming that on January 20 sixty-four officers were arrested in Lisbon. Several officers retired when they learned they might be ordered to Great Britain.

The arrest of these leaders only added to the discontentment, and when it was seen that the movement was gaining power the military government was installed, ostensibly to take the Government away from the political factions and put it into the hands of the people. As Gen. Castro is opposed to sending troops to England until Portugal is threatened it is not likely that the war enthusiasts will have much to do with the new regime.

Gen. Castro's first act after assuming charge of the government was to release the sixty-four officers and restore their swords to them. He annulled the suspensions of the newspapers and re-established the freedom of the press.

The insurrection is merely an echo of the great popular belief that, despite official statements, Portugal has no cause for war in Africa. The Government has announced that Germans have invaded Angola and has given out the list of dead and wounded. But, despite popular hatred of Germany, the Government has failed to convince the public that it did not take the first step.

This belief has been strengthened by the surreptitions circulation of private letters, from reliable persons in Angola describing what has taken place.

When the first expedition went to Angola the commander had sealed orders which were not to be opened until his troops landed. Reports from Angola insist that these orders told him to attack the German province at once and take it by surprise. The attack was made berofe the troops were inspected, with the result that when it came time to shoot men armed with one make of rifle found that they had cartridges which should have been given to some one else. The sight of a Zeppelin flying over them added to the consternation of the troops. All the modern rifles had been sent to England.

These reports from relatives and reliable friends have strengthened the Portuguese determination to fight only when Portugal has a cause for war. Germany's patience with the tactics of the war party has added greatly to the belief that the Germans have not taken the initiative.

OSWEGO VOTED TODAY FOR BETTER STREETS

The special election for taxpayers to pass upon the proposition of increasing the Highway fund of the Oswego Department of Work by $14,000—from $21,000 at present—was held at the City Hall. While the general sentiment is in favor of the increase there is, of course, the danger that those advocating the increase will not make the effort they should to get to the polls.

Mayor Hennessey, the Common Council and the Chamber of Commerce have all gone on record as favoring the increase and Commissioner of Works Linsley in a letter to the Council requesting the special election gave some convincing reasons why the Highway fund should be enlarged.

The amount of the present Highway fund has been the same for about twenty years, namely, $21,000. During that time the price of labor and materials of construction have been constantly increasing so that a dollar spent today will not produce the results that it would twenty years ago. Inquiry has developed that the cities of Auburn, Watertown, Kingston, Poughkeepsie, New Rochelle and Newburg, N. Y., all cities of about Oswego's population, appropriate annually for their highway funds amounts more than double that of ours, the average amount appropriated for these six cities being $62,300 annually.

Commenting upon Oswego's streets, The Palladium says:

"Unquestionally the strongest argument for an increased highway fund is the condition of the dirt streets in the outlying sections of the city. These streets are poorly graded, have little or no drainage and are a disgrace to a city of Oswego's size, for the simple reason that there was enough money appropriated for the highway fund to permit any repair work to be done on them. A considerable improvement in a majority of these streets could be effected by proper grading and rolling, as in most cases good drainage, the fundamental essential of road building, is absolutely lacking. The funds of this department shold be of sufficient size to permit the employment of a road machine gang on both sides of the river each year, especially in the spring and early summer months. The meagre equipment of the department is mostly old and should be replaced with new equipment in order that satisfactory work may be done."

BUNKOED BY A GREEK

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

The pair of us had been in Athens three or four days when a party of English excursionists who were making a tour arrived. Among them was an antiquary who was looked up to and respected for his knowledge of ancient history and ruins.

Professor Himstead, as he was named, had been charged to pick up all the old Greek manuscripts to be had for money, and it was his inquiries for such documents that doubtless led to our undoing. One day a man named Talanti, who had somewhat the manners and dress of a gentleman, brought the professor two ancient manuscripts as a present, and to show his further good will he announced a valuable discovery which had just been made on the island of Aegina, about forty miles distant. He was the owner of the island, and while his workmen were getting out some stone they had come across some rare treasures in art, but had developed only a small portion of them. They had partly uncovered a stone box which he believed held a large number of manuscripts and valuable coins, but he had delayed the opening of it that some of his friends might be present. Three or four of them were going to his island home tomorrow, and he would be glad to have on his yacht as many of us foreigners go along as could make it convenient.

Aside from the English party, there were Americans, Germans and Frenchmen to the number of twenty in Athens, and when the list was made up we numbered over forty, of whom ten were ladies. When we went on board there was considerable surprise at finding her the craft she was. She was nothing more than a trader, and her accommodations were of a primitive character.

My friend the professor could speak Greek, but when he entered into conversation with Mr. Talanti's friends he found them sulky enough. This excited our surprise, as they were supposed to be gentlemen. When we came to look them over we began to get a little suspicious.

As we approached the island we saw it was fairly covered with trees, yet it did not have a hospitable look. As we made a close approach we could see a couple of rude huts and a primitive jetty, but Mr. Talanti explained that his castle was hidden by the forest and that he was landing at that point to save us a long walk.

As soon as the craft was made fast the three eminent friends of Mr. Talanti suddenly produced pistols and knives and took their station by the gangway. The sailors divided into two parties, and, handling their naked knives in a menacing fashion, they drove the people into line.

When Professor Himstead had rubbed his eyes, scratched his head and got it into his brain that something not down on the program was going on Talanti mounted a box and smilingly observed:

"Ladies and gentlemen, you are now about to pass ashore to behold my wonderful discoveries, but each one of you is required to leave all money and jewelry behind you. I will see that everything is safely cared for!"

The men cried out in anger, but what could they do? I do not think there was a firearm among them, while the Greeks seemed overanxious to use their knives. There were protestations and threats of the law, but Talanti only smiled at them and ordered the work to go on. Each man in the crowd was regularly held up—that is, his pockets were thoroughly searched and everything of value taken. The women were requested to hand over, and each one had her watch and rings in hand as she moved up. In the course of half an hour every one was ashore, and then Talanti took off his hat, made a sweeping bow and sailed away with his piratical crew. He had no sooner gone than half a dozen villainous looking men came down from the hut.

They told us they were fishermen, but their actions belied their statement. Their first move was to demand cash, and great was their indignation and disappointment at being told that Talanti's crowd had taken the last coin. When sure of this they left us, and an hour later two genuine fishermen came ashore in their boat. There were a dozen vessels within five or six miles of us, and a dollar would have been big pay for them to go out and notify the nearest one of our situation; but, realizing our helplessness, they demanded the sum of $100.

It was almost dark when a battered old schooner came sailing up to take us off, and the terms were $2 a piece, to be paid in Athens. We spent a dreary night on deck and landed in the city at noon next day. Immediately notice was given to the various consuls and to the Greek government, but no one had any faith that anything would be accomplished. The government made loud promises and seemed to be making all possible efforts; but as a matter of fact, Mr. Talanti was not even pursued. He never could have put up such a job without a number of officials standing in with him and each and every one of them doubtless shared in the plunder when it was divided. It was said that the money and jewelry amounted to about $6,000, and the only consolation any of the victims had was the privilege of living a country where such things could be carried out.

"IS IT WELL WITH THEE?"

ing hours, 2 to 4, and you are not an ordained minister. They have access at any time. And, third, that young man is in the emergency ward with a malignant disease. You can't see him."

My friend told him why he was there at that unseemly hour and pleaded so hard that the warden said:

"Well, Mr. Smith, you can see him. I will go with you. If you want to talk and pray with him you may, that's your privilege, Catholic or Protestant, but you can't touch him."

Found Young Scotchman Mass of Putrefaction

I will not tell you what my friend said he saw for two reasons—first, I haven't the language to describe or express it, and, second, you would not have the time nor the disposition to hear it, but suffice it to say in passing he looked up at the man who was a mass of putrefaction and corruption from head to foot.

Not a hair on his head, eyebrows fallen out, great chunks of putrefied flesh dropping from his bones. His fingers were separating, his teeth dropping out, and my friend looked upon the young Scotchman and recognized the haughty, Godless, arrogant young man of two years before, and when my friend made himself known the young man gazed, struggled and sat up and looked and he said:—

"My God, is it possible? Is it not awful, sir? Look at me, will you? I would give the world if I could be back where I was two years ago and heeded your advice."

He fell back on his pillow and beckoned to my friend. He stepped to his bedside, and the poor fellow, weak from exhaustion said:—

"Mr. Smith, I wish you would tell the young men of Chicago that they can't stem the tide of life, neither can they win its battles without Jesus Christ. If they think they can, tell them about me, will you?"

And I take it up and bring it to you, for the same devil that damns in old sin-cursed, whiskey-soaked gambling, bloated, harlot-ridden, Sabbath-breaking Chicago is the same devil and the same sin that will damn you in Philadelphia, that will damn you in your home, and you cannot win without Jesus Christ.

No. "Is it well with thee?"

Not if you are here without Jesus Christ for your Saviour. God pity you.

I would rather have standing room in Heaven than to own the world.

No. No. You can't win.

Say. Why? Why are you not as pure as a sunbeam?

Why are you not as sweet as a dewdrop?

Why are you not as lovely as the sunkissed Alps?

Why are you not as unchanging as a spring morning, pulsing with bird song?

Why? I'll tell you, sir.

God made those things and God can make you like those things if you will only let Him.

Don't Blame Others; You Are the Duck

You say:—

"Mr. Sunday, I had a bad start in life. I have come from bad stock. I have bad blood in my viens. I was born with the devil in me an with evil inclinations."

You can be born again with the devil out of you if you want to be, if you will give yourself to Jesus Christ and turn from your sins.

Certainly! Don't blame your parents. They brought you into the world, that's true, but you yielded to its sin when you came in. Don't blame them.

If you lived in a palace with a bad heart in you you would turn the palace into a slum.

You can't get small-pox, or scarlet fever or diptheria by crawling in between clean sheets.

If you turn a pole cat loose in a parlor you know which will change first, the pole cat or the parlor.

Sin doesn't start in a stale beer joint or a brothel. Sin started in the Garden of Eden, so I say don't blame society; you are a part of it.

Society is what it is and you have helped to make it what it is, and if you wanted to be different why didn't you follow Christ and set the example? So don't blame the church. That's the place for you to go to learn to do what you ought to do.

Don't sai.

"We are only human."

Don't blame the devil; all he can do is to tempt you, and there are not devils enough in hell to make you a drunkard if you don't want to be one, and there are not angels enough in heaven to make you walk home sober if you don't want to.

So be fair and square. Look yourself square in the face and say:—

"I'm the duck."

Poets, Beware of the Spring Liars

New York, Feb. 24.—There is no record to the effect that Diogenes ever swung his lantern in the streets of Winsted, Ct.—famous wherever telegraph wires are strung as the home of the most truthful correspondent whoever sent in a space bill—but listen.

All in the same day, and from Winsted:

One robin! One bluebird; One swarm of bees, buzzing! One swarm of grasshoppers, hopping!

Add to this the temerity to announce at usual space rates that Fifth ave. has spring hats ready to ship—c.o.d—and you have it.

Either spring is here, or else aforesaid truthful correspondent's wife has come out barefooted for one of those spring hats.

There is a chance that Diogenes passed up Winstead, and there is another one that T. C. places domestic peace above reputation.

Anyway—it's a little bit of spring.

Wheels and the World.

The history of the evolution of locomotion as well as an infinity of other studies of the keenest interest could all be centered in the wheel.

Without wheels we should have no watches, no steering at sea. We should be unable to utilize the waterfalls as motor force, nor should we have hundreds of other things of the utmost attraction and utility.

All our modern civilization has come to us on wheels. All we know about other countries, all the commerce we have established throughout the world and our means of wealth we owe to the wheel. It is difficult to imagine [illegible] come to it suddenly all wheels vanished from our midst. No war, no famine, no revolution, could be one-hundredth part as effectual in putting us back centuries as the lack of wheels.

The romance of wheels has gone, never to return again. Wheels are now looked upon merely as accessories, whirling indifferently, faster and faster, but practically ignored.

He Saw the Battle.

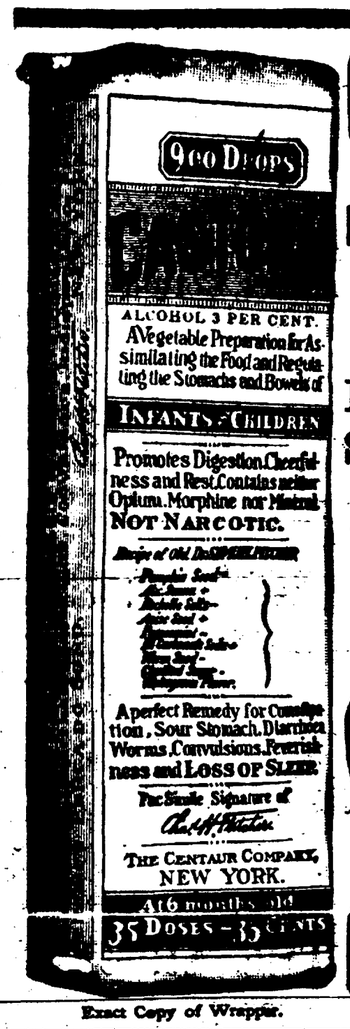
There were no war correspondents in Wellington's time, but that his attitude toward such would have been friendly may be judged by a story told by Lady Dorothy Nevill.

At Waterloo the duke noticed a little man in plain clothes, mounted on a sturdy cob, who rode hither and thither in the thick of the fight. He had him brought to him to demand his business, whereupon the man explained that he was traveling for a Birmingham button maker and, chancing to be in Brussels and never having seen a battle, he was taking the opportunity of seeing this one. Wellington not only allowed him to continue his observations, but presently trusted him with a dispatch for one of his generals in the firing line. The safe delivery of the message was rewarded, in more peaceful times, by a comfortable government appointment. —London Opinion.

Placing the Defendant.

A legal journal says that a suit brought by a portly man against a little man with a hacking cough had gone to the jury, at which time it appeared from the evidence and the instructions of the court that the big man had won the case. After half an hour the jury was called and asked if a verdict had been reached.

"No, your honor," replied the foreman. "We only want to know which is the defendant and which is the plaintiff."



"The large man sitting over there is the plaintiff, and the small gentleman here is the defendant," replied the judge.

The jury filed back to the jury room. In a few minutes they signaled that they had reached a verdict. The judge received it and read:

Early Hand Guns.

When Edward IV. returned to England, in 1471, ten years after he succeeded to the throne, he obtained some forces from his brother-in-law, the Duke of Burgundy, including 300 Flemings armed with hand guns, thus being the first to introduce these weapons into England. Afterward they became common. At first they were fired by the application of a lighted match to the touchhole by the hand. The match was a wick lighted and pressed against the powder in the pan. The invention of a lock to fire the powder in place of the hand was suggested by the trigger of the crossbow. The matchlock fired the arquebus, or harquebus, used by the soldiers of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, in projecting a ball which weighed nearly two ounces.—London Telegraph.

CANNOT SHIP CATTLE OUT OF ERIE COUNTY

The federal quarantine on Erie Co. on account of the hoof and mouth disease, which was promulgated Saturday went into effect Monday. It means that Erie county cattle may not be shipped beyond the confines of the county.

There is no quarantine on the Buffalo stockyards. Cattle may be received in Buffalo [illegible] outside of New York State and immediately slaughtered, or may be received in Buffalo from any outside State such as Michigan and resold and shipped through to another State, such as Connecticut, providing they are immediately slaughtered when they arrive at their destination.

The entire area of the hog pen; the entire area of the sheep pens and most of the cattle pens have now been thoroughly disinfected. These disinfected yards are open for the reception of cattle provided they are destined for immediate slaughter, but no cattle may be yarded in the Buffalo stockyards.

AMERICAN COMMERCE ATTAINS GRAVE PLACE

Washington Anxiety Increases As Result of Sinking of Another Cotton-Laden Vessel

Washington, Feb. 24.—The anxiety of the Washington government to reach an early agreement with the belligerent European nations on the questions now pending between them was increased with the announcement today that another ship—the Carib—had been sunk in the North sea by a mine. Administration officials admitted that a serious situation exists. It was said the Secretary of State desired to remain in close touch with President Wilson and be in a position to receive the earliest news of oversea developments.

As in the case of the Evelyn, it is announced by the German government that the Carib was not following the course prescribed by the German admiralty. This, officials believe, if proved, will relieve the United States of necessity for diplomatic action. No effort was made by officials, however, to conceal that they consider the position of American commerce to be grave as the result of the retaliatory measures adopted against each other by the belligerents, and would welcome an early understanding between the nations.

FRENCH MAKE SLOW GAINS IN THE ARGONNE

By Franklin P. Merrick

Paris, Feb. 24.—While the French keep pounding away at the German left-center between Rheims and the Meuse river, the Germans continu their assaults against the British at the left end of the allies' battle front. On the North sea coast the Germans succeeded in making a gain and the French war office now admits that fighting is taking place west of Lombaertzyde.

Between Ypres and the French fronting the Germans have been making furious drives against the British trenches, the infantry attacks being varied by terrific artillery fire.

In the Champagne district, between Rheims and the Argonne forest, the French continue to move forward slowly. The Germans have been compelled to abandon three of their first line trenches and wered riven out of two other lines of field works at the point of the bayonet. Two other lines of redoubts were blown up. The country north of Perthes, Les Mesnil and Beausejour is a perfect network of trenches.

In the valley of the Meuse, near St. Mihiel, the French have gained a further success and counter attacke of the Germans to force them from their new positions failed.

In the Vosges and upper Alsace attempts af the Germans to force the French back through the pass of Bonhomme have failed. Despite the blizzard which has been raging in the mountains, the Germans have continued to deliver attacks every day.

Artillery duels are in progress near the Oise, the Lys and along the Aisne. Heavy cannon fire is still in progress in the sector of Rheims. Batteries of high angle guns are being mounted as Dunkirk, Calais and Boulogne where the base hospitals of the allies are located. It is now learned that considerable damage was done to the railway at Calais by bombs dropped from a Zeppelin on Monday.

ST. JOSEPH'S UNION

New Building Needed to House Big Number of Little Fellows. Substantial Brick Home Proposed

The Rev. Mallick I. Fitzpatrick, Rector of the Mission, 375 Lefayette street, New York City, is sending out circulars, asking all Catholics, and especially the members of St. Joseph's Union, for contributions.

The money received is to be used in building substantial brick buildings that will be more safe and more healthful than those now in use, which were built a quarter of a century ago.

When it is realized that there are at the present time about 700 orphan boys provided for by the society of which His Eminence John, Cardinal Farley, is the president, it is most evident that a vast amount of room is necessary to take care of the little fellows.

St. Joseph's Union has a large number of members, and if all would donate, if but ten cents the amount received would be greatly appreciated by the officers in charge, and would go a long way toward the uplifting of the poor orphan boys, and the erection of new buildings that will shelter them, and provide for their wants.

This is not restricted to St. Joseph's Union alone, neither is it necesary that one should be a Catholic to help a good cause along; all persons having a kind heart who wish to privde homes for the homeless, regardless of color, creed or nationalty have the privilege of sending contributions which will be thankfully received and acknowledged.

This plan of raising funds for the erection of new buildings has the cordial approval of Cardinal Farley and all bishops and priests of the order.

STEADY GAINS MADE ALONG GALICIAN FRONT

By Francis Lavelle Murray

Petrograde, Feb. 24.—In one month's operations in the Carpathian mountains the Russian armies have taken more than 48,000 prisoners and it is claimed at the war office today that the Czar's troops are slowly but steadily pressing on to complete victory along the entire Galician front.

The prisoners include both German and Austrian troops. The attacks of the Teutonic allies have been seriously weakened by their losses in artillery as well as men. The Russians now in possession of seventeen guns and 118 machine guns.

The Russian successes in the Carpathians are declared by Petrograd military experts to "Border on the miraculous," because of the severe weather conditions under which they were won. They assert that the gains in the southern theater of operations and the stopping of the German offensive in northern Poland presage complete victory over the Austro-German ramies which are now believed to be making their supreme efforts.

Tremendous losses have been inflicted on the Germans by the Russian artillery at Owsowiec.

The latest official report from the Russian staff covers the operations up to Monday. It follows:

"Stubborn fighting continued Sunday on the right banks of the Bobr and Narew rivers. At Owsowiec the advancing German forces were repelled by fire from the fortress. North of Lomza fighting is proceeding in the direction of Radzilow, Sezuczyn and Kolno. Despite the enemy's attacks made in considerable strength the Russians are holding the positions regained at Jedwabno. Terrific night attacks by the Germans proved fruitless, though they had the assistance of armored automobiles along the Szczuczyn-Kolno roads.

"The German offensive in the Przasysz region continues. The enemy attacked the town of Przasnysz, but was repelled every time.

"Towards Plonsk some villages are continually changing hands.

"On the south bank of the Vistula, to the south of Moghere the Russians exploded mines beneath the German positions. The cavities made by the explosions were subsequently occupied by the Russians, who captured three Maxims, some mine throwers and bombs and also took a number of prisoners. The total German losses amounted to about 500 men.

"In the Carpathians the Austrians shelled the cloisted south of Mezo-Laborcz with their twelve inch Howitzers. There have been persistent attacks upon our troops in the region of Mikow, Smolnik and Dirowa, but these have been repulsed with heavy losses.

"In the region of Kiowza Austrian troops have replaced the Germans.

"Fierce fighting has occurred south of Dolina and at Stanislau, where the enemy is in great force.

"From January 21 to February 20 in the Carpathians the Russians captured 691 officers, 47,640 men, seventeen guns, 118 Maxims and two aeroplanes."

NORROY FALLS AGAIN INTO HANDS OF FRENCH

By Franklin P. Merrick

Paris, Feb. 24.—Official details of the recapture by French troops of the village of Norroy were issued here today to disprove the claim made at Berlin that it was voluntarily evacuated by the Germans. Norroy is on a high loft of strategic importance north of Pont-a-Mousson.

The French version of the conflict there shows that it continued for five days and that the Germans were finally drive out on February 18. It was captured by soldiers of the 277th French regiment, who attacked with gfireat bravery. At the same time they drove the Germans from Signal Xon.

As a result of the retaking of Norroy the French fortified line in that region is again maintained unbroken.

The French victory was won by two companies, though the German forces consisted of two battalions.

RAMSDEN CASE AT ROCHESTER

Prisoner Pleads Insanity Caused By Wife's Alleged Infidelity. Forty Witnesses For the Defense

Rochester, Feb. 24.—Picturing John F. J. Ramsden, jr., as a man driven insane by threatened loss of his wife's affections and breaking up of his home through intrusion of a second man in the person of Myron S. Melvin, John A. Millener opened the defendant's case at 3 o'clock this afternoon at the trial of Ramsden, charged with the murder of his wife, Florence Case Ramsden.

Using as his basic plea "unwritten law," Mr. Millener summarized his case dramatically. "We will amply prove," he said, "that beset by all these horrid thoughts, the man who wept over the moss-grown grave of his wife later on, became deranged under the awful strain and when reason snapped, he resorted to murder in his insane moments."

Melvin was painted as one who had no thought of the domestic felicity of the Ramsdens and deliberately set about to wean away from the husband, a weak frivolous women, one who was susceptible to kindnesses and attentions. Millener told of expensive clothing she wore, of presents made her by Melvin, of dinners in grill rooms, frequent auto trips and late home-comings.

Hotel Man on Stand

The first witness for the denfense was George W. Adams, proprietor of the Palmer House, Herkimer. He testified that Melvin and Mrs. Ramsden came together while at the hotel on August 8, 1914. George Flannigan, bell boy in the hotel, corroborated Mr. Adams, and added testimany about Ramsden's later visit to the hotel after evidence against the couple.

Frank A. Lewis, a chauffeur at the Palmer House, expressed the opinion that Ramsden, when he came to the hotel to find facts for his divorce suit, acted in an irrational manner. He said Ramsden talked rapidly, repeated questions, put his hands into empty pockets to find articles and did other unseemly things.

The last witness was Glenn C. Malone, a farmer, of Cicero Center, who was in Melvin's office, Onondaga County Savings Bank Building, September 21, when Ramsden was there talking with Mrs. Ramsden in an outer office. He said he heard Ramsden say to his wife: "Will you leave here? Will you come back to me? Don't let Melvin break up our home."

Mrs. Ramsden's reply, according to Malone, was: "Keep still, don't let the people here know all your business."

11 Witnesses for Prosecution.

The trial of Ramsden moved rapidly the prosecution opening and closing its case on the first day with eleven witnesse sworn and examined, and the defense recording the testimony of four witnesses.

Ramsden was a keen listener and quick to detect any material testimony for or against him. He often consulted his attorneys, offering suggestions and explanations. He sat on the edge of his swivel chair, his chin resting in his hand. Behind him sat his parents, his sister and brothers.

So far none of the relatives of Mrs. Ramsden have appeared in court, but it is understood they will appear later in the week. At least forty witnesses for the defense are in court.

Before the witnesses were called Justice Sutherland called the counsel and Ramsden to the bench and had written into the records a special plea of insanity in order to avoid technical error in the trial procedure.

Drs. Edward French and Irving G. Harris, coroner's physicians, testified to the nature and number of wounds upon the body of Mrs. Ramsden and the actual cause of death. They were questioned closely regarding the cloth ing worn by the woman and also about a diamond ring which it was claimed she wore. Neither witness saw a ring.

South Shields, Eng., Feb. 25.—The crew of the British collier Deptford, which was sunk in the North sea off Scarborough last night, was brought here today. The Deptford is believed to have been torpedoed by a German submarine, although the crew did not see any hostile craft. The Deptford was a vessel of 1208 tons, hailing from London.

CURLEY TO GET JOHNSON

But Indications Point to Black Man's Refusal to Leave Havana

By Lewis T. Matson

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 25.—In a final attempt to induce Jack Johnson to come to Mexico and fulfill his engagement to fight Jess Willard at Juarez, Jack Curley, the promoter of the contest, left for Havana today.

Curley believes that he can allay the champion's fears of dire calamity if he comes to Mexico, and was confident before leaving that he would bring the "Big Black" back with him, and that the championship go would be pulled off not later than March 17.

But Curley is alone in this belief. The concensus among the fight fans is that Johnson will not come to Mexico now or at any other time. He is just simply afraid—not afraid of meeting Willard in the ring—but afraid that the moment he steps on Mexican soil his liberty will be placed in jeopardy.

The latest reports from Havana are that Johnson willnot leave Cuba. He wired the promoters here that he will meet Willard but the fight must be pulled off in Havana.

And the general opinion is that Curley will have a hard job to convince the champion that he can leave Cuba with perfect safety.

Willard, after a day of idleness, again resumed light training today. He does not care where the fight takes place if he can meet the champion as he is confident of winning.

U. S. NEUTRALITY BECOMES STRAINED

Officialdom Continues to Be Anxious About Tone of Belligerants' Expected Reply

Washington, Feb. 25.—The solution of the war zone problem rests with Great Britain. The next move in the situation depends on that government.

This was the opinion of administration officials and diplomats in touch with the international questions arising out of the war. The confidential proposals of the United States to end the war zone have been submitted to England and Germany and the Washington authorities today wrapped their cloaks of silence around them more closely than ever to await the replies.

Intimations have come from Berlin that the Kaiser's advisers are inclined to accept the American suggestions, it is understood. No hint has been obtained as to the position of Great Britain and official Washington, therefore, waited with much anxiety the outcome of the present negotiations.

All circles in Washington officialdom are fully alive to the seriousness of the situation and realize that the path of the United States in the matter of neutrality is rough and uncertain. High officials are giving all their attention to the European situation. No effort is being made to conceal the belief in high quarters that should any American lives be lost as the result of the activities either of German or Great Britain, this government may be forced to change its present neutral attitude.

Meanwhile, the sinking of the Evelyn and the Carib has caused the war risk insurance bureau to take up the question of suspending further insurance on ships sailing to North European ports. This has been urged as a means of discouraging shipping from taking risks in the war zone. There also was heard a suggestion in some headquarters that [illegible] put an embargo on foodstuffs should her zone proposal be rejected, but this was not confirmed in any way.

RUSSIAN REGIMENTS CUT GERMAN'S LINES

By Francis Lavelle Murray

Petrograd, Feb. 25.—Official news of the breaking of the German lines in the Augustowo forest by two regiments of the Twenty-ninth division of the Russian army and the capture of three lines of trenches by the Russians on Height No. 901 in the Carpathians was given out today by the war office. The battle along the right bank of the Narew river between the armies of Field Marshal Von Hindenburg and Grand Duke Nicholas is extending. Furious attacks are being delivered continuously by the Germans along a front extending from a point near Jebvabno on the Bobr river to a point near Bobzanov on the Vistula.

The official report follows: "Actions occurred on Tuesday north of Grodno, near Jastrzobne. In the Augustowo forest two regiments of the Twenty-ninth division, which had been surrounded by the Germans during the retreat from East Prussia, broke through the enemy's lines. Enemy patrols are trying to cross to the right bank of the Niemen. The battle on the right bank of the River Narew is extending. The Germans are delivering vigorous attacks along a front from the Bobr river in the district of Jebvabno as far as the Vistula in the region of Bobzanov. In the Przasnysz region the fighting is becomin gextraordinary severe.

"In the Carpathians desperate fighting has occurred east of Lupkow, in the region of Munkacz. We have had a series of successes near Zavadka. At daybreak on the 22d (Monday) we captured three lines of trenches on Height No. 901, which is almost a sheer precipice. The Germans defending the trenches were either killed or capture.

German attacks south of Koziomoka were repulsed. South of Dukla Pass, after a stubborn fight, we carried a height on the right bank of the Rozanka. On the Doline-Galicz road we arrested an offensive movement which had been commenced by important forces of the enemy."

GERMANS WIN AGAIN IN EASTERN PRUSSIA

Berlin, by wireless, Feb. 25.—The capture of 10,000 Russians, 30 cannons, machine guns and a great quantity of war material at Przasnysz, as well as the city itself, is announced by the German war office today. The capture of 5,000 Russians in battles north of the Vistula river is also reported. The statement says the fighting continues along the Niemen, the Bobr and Narew rivers. The storming of Przasnysz with the capture of 10,000 Russians is regarded as one of the most important victories the Germans have won in East Prussia. The town is 58 miles north of Warsaw in Poland. The report attaches little importance in the western theater of war, saying that despite the desperate attacks there the battle front there is unchanged.

THE EVELYN IN A HURRICANE

Herewith is shown a remarkable picture of the American steamship Evelyn, which was sunk by a mine in the North Sea while on her way to Bremen with a cargo of cotton for Germany. The picture shows the vessel in a hurricane on one of her trips in the Atlantic. The Evelyn, which is the first American vessel to meet with disaster as the result of the sea warfare of the European nations, was a vessel of 1,963 tonnage gross, and had been for many years engaged in the coastwise trade between Philadelphia and Galveston. The trip to Bremen was her maiden voyage to that point. Captain Smith, who is also pictured above, was commander of the vessel. He and a crew of twenty-seven were reported saved.

GERMAN SUBMARINES CLOSING UPON GREAT BRITAIN'S SHORES

U. S. Department Trying to Compromise War-Zone Bread-War Situation

By Herbert Temple

London, Feb. 25.—Germany's submarine war on Great Britain has entered a new phase. It is reported that Germany is sending a flotilla of trawlers into the North sea to plant mines upon the English coast.

Among the lates victims of the "bread war" are the steamers Rio Parana and Harpalion and the collier Deptford. A Belgian steamship is reported in distress off the Spanish coast while two steamers and the Spanish freighter Specia are overdue and may have been destroyed by mines or torpedoes. The Rio Parana was sunk off Eastbourne pier by a submarine. Her crew of thirty men were landed at New Haven. She was of 2000 tons burden and was laden with coal.

The British steamship Harpalion, bound from London to Newport News, Va., was sunk off Beachy Head and there is little doubt that she was torpedoed by a German submarine. Three Chinese members of her crew were killed. The vessel was struck amidships with terrific force and immediately disappeared.

One life was lost when the collier Deptford was torpedoed in the North sea off Scarborough.

No trace has yet been found of the armed merchant cruiser Clan Macnaughton, with 280 seamen on board, which has been missing for more than three weeks. She carried naval reservists.

A telegram from Madrid says that a large British steamer is sending out calls for assistance. She is 25 miles off Vares Point and no assistance is available.

The crews of many of the ships that have been torpedoed report seeing no hostile craft. Extra precautions are being taken to guard the ports following the torpedoing of a vessel close to her pier at Folkestone.

There were no outward indications today that the efforts of a certain neutral power (believed to be the United States) to effect an agreement between Germany and the allies by which the submarine warfare would end. The American State Department is attempting to persuade England to allow the shipment of food into Germany under certain conditions in return for which Germany would rescind the "war zone" proclamation. However, a big section of the press does not take kindly to the idea. The Standard, Daily Express and London Graphic declare their belief emphatically that the British government should not entertain any proposals which would allow the shipment of food into Germany under any conditions.

KAISER GIVES VON BUELOW THE ORDER OF MERIT

By FREDERICK WERNER

Berlin, Feb. 25.—After the terrific battles in the Masurian lakes district, the Kaiser sent to General Von Buelow the following telegram:

"After forced marches covering more than nine days, over snow-covered, frozen roads, your brave troops, shoulder to shoulder with their comrades operating in the north, succeeded by continual fighting, in breaking the tenacious resistance of the enemy, chasing him from German soil, surrounding him, crushingly defeating him.

"Therewith, under your approved guidance, we gained a success at arms which could not have been expected to be more brilliant.

"I express to your excellency and the troops under your command my imperial thanks and gratitude and confer upon you the Order of Merit."

Fighting to Declare Ramsden as Insane

Rochester, Feb. 25.—Endeavoring to bear out the defense's insanity contention, counsel for J. J. Ramsden, Syracuse wife murderer were filed before Supreme Court Justice Sutherland today. The State called to the stand former jailor Schmine, another jail attendant to show that the defendant following his arrest had exhibited unmistable signs of mental depression while confined in the jail. Schmine testified that Ramsden for a considerable time after the murder wept in his cell and repeatedly called for his wife.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

GOSSIP

"MISS BROWN," says Miss Dizzie to Miss Mary Jones, "is naught but a package of loose fitting bones." "Miss Jones," says Miss Dizzie, "is terribly fat; she's naught but a gossiping, silly old cat." They gossip (Miss Dizzie, Miss Jones and Miss Brown) and choice information goes floating 'round town. They analyze people and, first thing you know, the embers of jealousy kindle and grow. Some soul starts a rumor and in a short time it spreads like a tumor and eateth like lime. Miss Jones keeps on talking and then wonders why the people all give her the beich eye. Miss Brown goes out calling on Thursday each week and then returns home bawling 'cause neighbors won't speak. Miss Dizzie's offended cause some one has said, "There's nothing but troublesome thoughts in her head." Talk swells like a bubble and flows like a stream; it causes the trouble of pickles and cream. The talkative neighbor is sure a disgrace, as much out of place as a fly on your face. They won't let off talking, yet can't understand why people don't give them the fellowship hand. If people would stifle their wigwagging talk the neighborly spirit would win in a walk. If people would keep all they knew to themselves these choice bits of gossip would die on the shelves. But gossip's a habit that just sticks around; it flies like a rabbit escaping a hound. It's just like an endless and double linked chain—it travels the route and it comes back again. If scandalous gossip comes floating to you forget all about it and hide it from view.

Opinions

Borrowing

Borrowing is a habit delightfully easy to acquire; in fact, most confirmed borrowers hardly seem to need to acquire it. The child of ten borrows a knife, or a sled, or a hockey stick, takes it home, forgets to return it, and forgets to apologize, just as gayly as the octogenarian takes home an umbrella.

All sorts of life in common are great breeders of borrowing—especially the life at boarding schools and colleges. To take a friend's handkerchief, or hat, or coat, or books, or carefully stored dainties—can there be a greater proof of frienship? It seems so intimate!

And the borrowing never stops. Later on it seems more intimate to ask the same friend to indorse a note for $1,000. What a rude shock to intimacy it is if your friend ventures to refuse!

The borrower always has a good excuse. He has left his money at home, or he is sure to have the money to pay tomorrow; or she has plenty of clothes of her own, but nothing that suits the occasion so well as that fascinating little scarf of yours. Excuses are the only thing that nobody needs to borrow.

It is a dangerous, treacherous habit. It is a pestilent enemy to friendship. There always comes a time when the lender dreads the sight of the borrower; there always comes a time when the borrower thinks the lender cold, or unresponsive.

It is true that all borrowers believe that it should be a borrowing world. They all declare that they are as ready to lend as they are to borrow, and usually they are right—if they have anything to lend. Borrowing and improvidence are twin sisters, but they are so nearly related to that charming goddess, generosity, that they are likely to borrow more of her grace than they deserve. In reality, as Charles Lamb remarked long ago, the world is divided into borrowers and lenders, and the lenders are obliged to have enough for themselves and for the others also. But it takes self-denial, and forethought, and prudence to accomplish that. And then to be called mean, as is the usual fate of the lender, is somewhat hard.

For the permanent satisfaction of life it is better to belong to the lending class, and the way to do it to begin young. The next time you are tempted to borrow a nickel for a telephone message or a car fare, go without. You will get more than five cents' worth of character out of the effort.—Youth's Companion.

Can't Starve Each Other.

It is difficult to believe that England can actually starve Germany. Perhaps it can put the country on short rations by a blockade, depriving it of certain articles of food like wheat. But as for starving the country, that is another question. The country is said to have potatoes a-plenty. Fish is selling at normal prices. The country always has a surplus crop of rye, which is exported. It has some meat, a high protective tariff having been in force for years in order to increase the number of cattle for just such an emergency as the present one. The Germans are first-rate agriculturalists and in matters of scientific farming are in the front rank. England can change the bill of fare of Germany, cause some inconvenience and perhaps some suffering, but that is all. It can't starve the country as the North starved the South. To bring Germany to the condition of the South in this respect in 1864, England has a most difficult and long road to travel.

This is not to say that Britain's proposed blockade is not worth while. Changing German's diet may well be a factor toward bringing her to defeat. But it cannot be regarded as a large factor.

Germany's effort to sink English merchantmen, and even neutral merchant ships if they get in the way, is even more futile as a measure for bringing untimate victory to the Germans. Germman submarines can't bring starvation to the British Isles. The best that the Kaiser's boats can do is to dash out in the zone and sink a merchantman now and then. The vast majority of ships sailing in and out of the harbors of the Isles will go unharmed. Neutrals especially will be left alone.

The warfare of each of these countries against the private citizens of the other is not going to settle the issue. Ultimate victory must be decided upon the battlefields on the Continent.—Observer, Utica.

A CLEAN-UP CAMPAIGN

Would it be too early or yet taboo to talk of a clean-up campaign? Surely Fulton could stand having her face scoured, say in May? Aside from the enjoyment to establishing order and beauty in our midst there would be the value coming from every one working together for the home city. Some people never take an interest in home till they begin cleaning it.

Richmond, Va., had a remarkable clean-up campaign last spring, which was so thorough that never in the memory of any of its citizens had the city been so free from dirt and rubbish. The success of the campaign was due to efficient co-operation between the city authorities, the citizens' organizations, the newspapers and the school children. No extra expense was incurred by the city government, and the cost to the citizens for stationery, printing and postage was about $40.

Before the beginning of the campaign the condition of the streets, alleys, vacant lots and back yards was about as bad as it could be found in any city of its size in the country. Paper, rags, ashes, garbage and other refuse were scattered about everywhere, and in the poorer sections of the city the condition of the yards and alleys seemed hopeless.

The campaign was started by a resolution of the Administrative Board and the issue of a proclamation by the Mayor, setting aside May 5th to 17th as a clean-up period and calling upon the citizens to co-operate with the city authorities in making Richmond clean.

How the Work Was Divided.

A few days after the issue of the Mayor's proclamation, a conference was called by the latter at his office at which were present the mayor, the chief of police, the chief health officer, the chief sanitary inspector, the superintendent of street cleaning, the superintendent of schools and the secretary of the society for the betterment of housing and living conditions. At this conference, which lasted several hours, it was agreed that the chief health officer should issue 50,000 circulars and that the chief of police should have them distributed to every dwelling and business house in Richmond; that the superintendent of street cleaning should divide the city into four sections, each section to be visited on a different day during the first week, and again during the second week for garbage and rubbish, Friday and Saturday of each week being devoted to cleaning the streets and alleys; and that he should concentrate all his forces and all the men and teams which he could secure from other city departments in each section for the clean-up there; that the superintendent of public schools should issue instruction to all teachers of the public schools to substitute lectures on cleanliness for certain other studies during the clean-up campaign and that he should give a school holiday in each section of the city on the day designated by the superintendent of street cleaning; and that the society for the betterment of housing and living conditions should arrange for public meetings, prepare press notices and do such other things as might be necessary to arouse public interest in the campaign.

This program was carried out in every detail as agreed upon. The society for the betterment of housing and living conditions, in co-operation with the central council of social workers, arranged mass meetings for both white and colored people at which addresses were made by the mayor and the chief health officer, and by prominent representatives of the religious, business, labor and fraternal organizations of the city. Addresses were also made and resolutions adopted at meetings of church, labor and other organizations.

The superintendent of public schools distributed cards to all the public school children in Richmond on which they could certify, if they desired, that they had assisted in cleaning up their premises and that they would endeavor to keep Richmond clean. A set of pamphlets on cleanliness and sanitation was supplied to each teacher of the Richmond public schools by the state health department.

In the meantime a vigorous newspaper campaign was carried on, daily articles having been prepared and pictures taken for publication in all the daily papers.

When the time came for the clean-up, there was not a household in Richmond that had not been urged through the children, through circulars, and through the newspapers to participate in the campaign, and nearly everybody responded to the call.

During the two-weeks period, the superintendent of street cleaning and his assistants were on the streets and in the alleys from early until late, directing the work and seeing that it was properly done, and citizens went about urging occupants, and especially children, to clean up their premises.

Help from the Children

The activity of the children was the most conspicuous feature of the campaign and contributed more than anything else toward its success. Having been previously coached by the teachers, having been given a holiday, and having been supplied with certificates to sign, they naturally felt it their duty to do their part of the work. Besides, they were told that if the giving of a holiday should prove effective, it might become an annual custom. Of 11,418 certificates distributed by the superintendent of schools, 10,182, or 88 per cent., were signed by the pupils. The Boy Scouts also participated by not only cleaning their own premises, but by attacking vacant lots and, in the outlying sections, also the streets and alleys.

Visits made by the writer to the back yards and alleys in practically every section of the city immediately after the clean-up period, disclosed scarcely a yard that had not been cleaned up; mountains of ashes, garbage and other filth had been removed, and everyone appeared to be enthusiastic about the result.—American City.

Canada s Taxes

Canada needs more money. Canada is like practically all the countries in the world, for they all need more money. This is due, first to the unsettlement which preceded for months the war in Europe, and then to the shakedown of the war itself.

When countries need more money they tax their peoples. In the case of Canada the tax is being placed on banknote circulation, insurance premiums, telegraph messages, checks, bills of exchange, patent medicines, wines and other articles.

The tariff is likewise a method of taxation. Some folks argue that it is a beneficial institution which puts pep in a country's prosperity; but if that were true, it would be the only known tax which does a people good to pay and makes them richer after they have paid it than before. At any rate Canada needing the money, has lifted the general and intermediate tariff rates 7½ per cent. ad valorem. Whether the people pay the money to the government on patent medicines or in higher prices which it must pay for imported goods, the payment in each case is a tax.—Prese, Utica.

THE WORLD CHANGES AS WE CHANGE

A few days ago, a man who insists on taking a squint at things through the wrong end of the telescope and looking at life through a fog, complained that we are living in a very bad age of the world, and that it costs a great deal more to live now than it did a generation or so ago.

The price we pay for a thing, as a rule, is a pretty fair index to its actual value. This principle, however, does not apply to the escapades of the "cigarettist," the man who cultivates the "poker face," and a certain contingent that "hits up" the after-theatre cafes, seeking the attention of "bell-boys" and "powdered flunkies."

The fact of the matter is—the world has been fitted out as a respectable place to live in for only a comparatively little while. If we desire to abolish the comforts and pleasures of life, we can live just as cheaply now as did our forefathers in the "good old days" gone and forgotten.

We live more now than we did a generation or so ago. We have more happiness, more freedom, more money—better food, better health, finer clothes, better salaries, finer homes, prettier flowers and gardens, more parks, better buildings, less sickness, more fresh air and out-of-door sports, more conveniences, finer music, wider and more extended travel and better understanding and contact with each other and with the rest of the world.

The fact of the matter is, we are a wonderful people living in a wonderful age, and when we come right down to the last analysis, this is a mighty fine world after all. It is the only one we have ever seen, and certainly is as good as we deserve.

During the last fifty years, we have made the world over anew. The fact that it was not very good world in which to live until a few generations ago, was man's fault. The world changes only as man changes. The agencies of energy which we have harnessed and applied have been here since the beginning of time, awaiting the magic touch of intellect.

Not so many years ago, Congress refused an appropriation to establish a telegraph line, on the ground that it was the proposal of a "deluded and insane man." One Congressman said that "money may as well be appropriated for building a railroad to the moon." This man did not live to send home a night letter-gram, but his children have, and the other day a sort of telephone arrangement was installed in one of our great cities, whereby it is possible to sit at home in a Morris chair and have the news of the world given us just as quickly as it becomes news.

Then, the point is—if there is something wrong, if you have cause to complain—there is work for you to do. Simply "get right" with the world—live, laugh, and be glad.

MOTHER, TYPICAL HOME QUEEN

Prof. Eastman Spoke Yesterday on "Why be a Specialist." Advancement in Home Making

Prof. Eastman yesterday afternoon initiated the members of the cooking class into the mysteries of Sunshine Cake, and too a funny looking black mixture which later turned out to be the most delicious of caramel icing.

As the professor worked he illustrated various points with funny, crinkly remarks and stories. Many of these were indeed of golden worth.

In making his story in regard to progress in homemaking interesting he told of his mother "when he first got acquainted with her." Queen of that household on the western frontier, the mother of six boys, she was the typical home woman.

Visions of the good things prepared in that home the professor easily recalled. He remembered the first "stove." It was a fireplace with a huge crane, and the ashes which were a prominent factor in the baking process. Then one day came a queer box like arrangement which was called a "stove." It was a source of wonder, and yet a pleasure. Next came the improved stove, one with a reservoir. The luxury of having hot water without first heating it in a kettle was indeed due to a wonderful invention.

Then there came a day when the professor and the other boys went home and lo, mother was using a gas range. Her years numbered 86 and it was her joy to have lived through the years of real advancement, and her extreme pleasure to cook dinner on a gas range at that time for her dear boys.

"Of course," said the professor, "we offered to assist her, but though she was a bit slow she refused and as her hands shook, when we were all finally seated at the table, and she was serving us no one commented except to ask her to hold out her hands. As she did so, and the dear, trembling wrinkled hands were held out, we all said 'mother's hands are the most beautiful in the whole world.' She had served us so nobly and beautifully throughout the many years."

The professor also stated that when the good mother was laid away people from a long distance came and wept—people who had known her not—because of her noble helpful life to all who needed her.

"Women today," said Professor Eastman, "do not do these things. It is not the style. Fashion demands that the doctor and nurse be summoned, and so helpfulness toward one's neighbor is fast becoming a lost art.

"Why be a specialist," was the real lecture of the afternoon and the main fact brought out was that the world is eagerly waiting for the man or woman who can do a certain work especially well. There is plenty of room at the top of the ladder always while mediocrity jostles at the lower rungs.

Next Saturday afternoon the high school girls will comprise the class. In the evening both men and women are invited to be present.

WOMEN'S BILL FAVORED

Suffrage Amendment Now Up to Delaware's Legislature over, Del., Feb. 24.—In the Senate today the committee on revised statutes by unanimous vote reported favorably a bill amending the constitution giving women the right to vote.

As a similar measure has been reported favorably in the House, the Legislature may pass the amendment. A two-thirds affirmative vote in each house will be necessary in this event. The amendment must also be concurred in by the General Assembly two years hence. Then it would be a law without popular ratification.

LOVE AND A PHOTOGRAPH

Story of the Wooing of a Sweet Country Maid.

Douglas Medway and his sister Clara were orphans. Douglas was ambitious both for himself and his sister. He wished to become a merchant in the city, and was desirous that Clara, who was a charming girl, should marry a city man. His plan was to sell the farm and set up a country store. This would take him to the city to buy goods, where he would make the acquaintance of business men through whom he would gradually work his way into a wider field.

Douglas carried out his plan. Before starting to the city his sister warned him to beware of city people and remember that he was not versed in city ways. To this he replied that he had letters to the firm of Burt & Richardson and would rely on them for advice.

Burt & Richardson were wholesale grocers. Douglas was received by Mr. Richardson, who said to him:

"You have goods to buy in so many different lines that you had better take one of our clerks to show you where you can buy cheapest."

Douglas gladly accepted the offer, and the clerk who was sent with him, Elbert Adams, put him right into the way of securing bargains, and by 4 o'clock all of the groceries had been purchased. Douglas had found Adams strictly a business man, and was much relieved on returning to the store to be introduced to a Mr. Merriman, who he understood had just dropped in and whose geniality captivated the young countryman at once.

"Merriman," said Mr. Richardson, "we are very busy just now and can't give Mr. Medway the attention he needs. Can't you devote yourself to him this evening?"

"I shall be most happy," said the genial Merriman.

The evening was a revelation to the young merchant. He saw the sights of the city in the most delightful fashion. He tried to pay his share of the expense, but Merriman would wink at the cashiers and remark to Douglas, "Wait till I go to your place; then it will be you who shall do the paying."

Douglas became confidential, showing his new friend a photograph of his sister. Merriman at once went into raptures over it, declaring the face to be the most beautiful he had ever seen. Then a secret desire crept into Douglas' breast. Merriman was just the match he would like for Clara.

The next morning Merriman spoke of the picture in such terms that Elbert Adams asked to see it. He gazed at it for some time, then handed it back without a word. Douglas would have been disappointed had he not been satisfied with Merriman's enthusiasm.

Douglas, having completed his purchases, hurried home to tell Clara that he had made the friend of his life, who had fallen in love with her picture and was dying to see her. He was to come up soon, when Douglas would return the favors he had received, but must necessarily do so in his own house. This would throw Merriman and Clara together. Clara made no opposition, but said she thought she would prefer a man devoted to his business.

Week after week passed, but nothing was heard of Mr. Merriman. Douglas was disappointed. When October came he wrote inviting Merriman to come up and make them a visit. The letter was answered by the firm, saying that Merriman was very busy. A few days later young Elbert Adams walked into the store in shooting costume and said he was on his way to his shooting club. Douglas invited him to supper, and from the moment he and Clara met they seemed desperately pleased with each other.

Adams did not get away to his shooting for several days, remained there but a short time and when he came back spent several days more in the company of Clara Medway. Douglas was troubled. He did not relish the idea of his sister taking a fancy to a mere clerk. He wished to keep her for the fascinating Merriman.

During the winter there was not a holiday that Adams did not appear and spend the whole of it with Clara. The more Douglas thought about the matter the more he was surprised. The man who had fallen in love with the picture had not taken the trouble to see the original. The man who had made no comments on the picture had fallen in love with the original.

One evening Douglas went home from the store and found Adams and Clara together. Indeed, they were very near together—they were in each other's arms. Adams on becoming aware of Douglas' presence turned and said to him:

"Do you remember showing me your sister's picture in the city on your visit there?"

"Yes, but you made no comment on it."

"Still water runs deep. I fell in love with it. I vowed that I would seek out its original and win her if possible. I have done both, and nothing remains but your consent."

"Clara can speak for herself—that is, if you are able"—

"I am now a member of the firm of Burt & Richardson."

"I confess," said Douglas, "that I always hoped that Mr. Merriman"—

"Merriman! Why, Merriman is our professional entertainer. The firm pays him a salary and all he spends on our customers. Besides, he's a married man."

"IS IT WELL WITH THEE?"

Son, Facing Death, Put Blame on Father.

Put it up square to yourself. Don't put it up to society, or your parents, or the church, or to Adam and Eve.

Put it to yourself and say:

"I'm the lobster; this is the fellow."

Be decent. "Is it will with thee?"

"Is it well with thy husband?"

Get Their Religion From Strangers, Not Parents.

There are boys and girls, young people, if they ever walk the streets of heaven instead of groaning in hell it will be because of the influence of some stranger, it will be because of what somebody, not related to them by ties of flesh and blood, has done for your children.

God pity a boy or girl who has to call a man like that father, and a woman like that mother.

God pity a boy or girl, when all the Christianity they hear is from the lips of strangers, not from their own parents.

"Is it well with the child?"

What should you do?

I would speak to them. I tell you you spend too much time in society, too much time in club life, too much time in your lodge, too much time in your auxiliaries. You have too little time with your children.

You spend too little time on your knees praying to God to keep the home right for Jesus Christ.

Speak to them. Live right before them. Set them an example that will inspire them.

Dr. Hall, of Troy, N. Y., told me this story. He said:

"Previous to coming here I was located in Dundee, Scotland, and there was a man there who had been a drunkard and who was as noted as John B. Gough or as John G. Woolley is in this country.

"One night I had him come and deliver a lecture, and during the discourse a man came down the aisle and handed the man a note. He asked the audience if they would excuse him and he read the note.

"'Hurry over. Your boy is down here in an inn drunk.'

"He didn't know his boy was within hundreds of miles of him. He hurried to the inn, into the grog shop, went down a rickety stairway into a dark underground groggery and there leaning over a greasy card table, listening to the ribaldry and jests of incarnate fiends of both sexes which congregated in that cesspool of iniquity and quagmire of filth; he saw his boy so drunk he couldn't open his eyes.

The man that sits by your side, the man whose name you bear; the man for whose comfort you work; the man to please whom you stand and toil; the man who is the father of your children; the man who by the sweat of his brow and the expenditure of his brain and muscle force buys the clothes that cover your body and the food that satisfies and appeases you; the man whose image is woven in the fibres of your heart; the man for whose footsteps you listen; the man you swore to love, honor and cherish; the man for whom you left a good deal better home than he has ever given you; you turned your back on more happiness than he has ever given you. IS IT WELL WITH THY HUSBAND?

I believe the reason why so many women go to communion alone and to church alone, is because they fail to realize that without Jesus Christ they are lost. They seem to be satisfied as long as those husbands provide for their comfort and sustenance and they don't seem to wake up to the fact that their man may die in his present state of rebellion against God.

Is it well with thy husband?

A friend of mine was preaching in an eastern city. He had gone out to work among the audience to induce them to give their hearts to Christ, and a woman in the front row in the gallery cried out:

"Pray for my husband. He is sitting by my side. I believe he is listening to his last sermon. God is giving him his last chance."

And she sat down weeping.

God Gives You Chance During These Meetings.

Some women said to my friend:

"Go up on the platform and rebuke her for what we consider was a foolish thing to do."

He said:

"If you want to take the platform and take the responsibility, do it. How do I know, but that God told her to do it?"

The next afternoon, just before the beginning of the evening service, these same women came to my friend weeping and said:

"Forgive us for our lack of interest and sympathy, and won't you pray God to forgive us, as we have prayed? We heard that at 5 o'clock this afternoon that man sent a bullet crashing through his brain."

I believe God told that wife to say that that husband was listening to his funeral sermon. That was heaven or hell for him.

And I believe this series of meetings is the bell of God tolling out the destiny of human souls.

I believe as I breathe, that if men and women are not saved in these days eternal damnation will be their portion.

I believe God has let a lot of you men and women in this town live just to give you this last grand chance to see if you measure up to your poolroom, mountebank, pliable, plastic, sort of celluloid, pantesote, jap-a-lac reputation, or whether you had manhood and womanhood enough to step out for Jesus Christ and do His commandments.

"Is it well with thy husband?"

"Has your master gone to heaven?" asked some men of an old negro who had for thirty-two years been the body servant of a Southern planter.

"No, sir; massa never went to heaven."

"Why, Mose?"

"I'se been with him all these years, massa's made lots of trips; he always talked to me about where he was going, how long he was going to stay, what he wanted to take with him. I'se been with him thirty-two years, and I never heard him talk about heaven. He never got ready to go to that place."

No Plans Made for Journey After Death.

There are women who have been living beside a man for twenty-five years and you never heard him talk about heaven. You never heard him mention the name of God except as he cursed God. You never heard him mention the name of Jesus Christ except as he swore and blasphemed around the house, and bear me, if that man died tonight, you, the neighbors and the community would not have to guess twice where he went.

If his obituary notice would appear in the newspaper tomorrow night and crepe flutter from the door knob, the community would not have to guess twice where he went.

No thought of God. No plans for that journey.

There are men, if they would die tonight, all that would remain to remind the people that you ever lived here would simply be your name engraved in stone over some building that you owned; your name appearing as a director in some bank. There would not be any religious influence left behind you. You would not have contributed one mite to help anybody serve Jesus Christ.

God pity a man that lives a good-for-nothing life like that. All that would remain to remind the people of this country that you ever lived would be your name on the books of the assessor and the record and in the auditor's office. That is all that would remain to remind the people that you ever lived.

You would drop out and they would not miss you by the time the sun had set.

"Is it well with thy husband?"

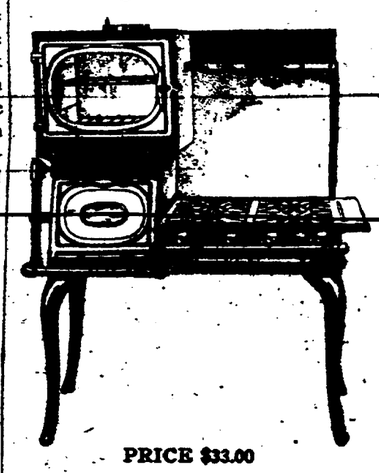
"Is it getting night?" asked an old Scotch lady 92 years old. "Is it getting night?"

"Yes, Janet," said her husband, two years her senior.

She thought it was the close of day; he knew it was the end of her life.

She said:

"Are all the boys in?"



"Yes, Janet, the boys are all in."

The last one had gone to heaven four years before.

GOOD MORNING AT O. A. SCHOOL

Pupils Happy at Their Regular School Tasks. Good Discipline Noted

If your chance to say "Good morning" at the open air school you will find fifteen boys and girls happily at work on arithmetic or geography lessons much the same as other boys and girls in regular school work.

This morning Miss Rankin, the teacher, was reviewing with the pupils errors that had been made in a recent arithmetic test. The difference between the least common denominator and a common denominator, similar fractions and not similar fractions came in for as careful an examination as is given the more sturdy boys and girls in the other schools.

To the close observer it is easily noted that Miss Rankin is especially capable in her work as a special teacher. Pink cheeked, in close fitting cap and warm coat she quietly moved among the boys and girls. Here and there a restless little body needed a word or two. Then when the restlessness became generally evident there were a number of exercises which gave the muscles a chance to work off their desire for activity.

The children in their warm bags are as snug as can be. When they wish to place on the teacher's desk a completed paper they make the trip in a series of hops, skips and jumps. The queer bundly little figures, with the tassle on the toboggan cap bobbing from the rear, makes a funny sight, but by the expression on their little faces as they again return to their seats one knows the children think it the most natural way in the whole world. And why not? To reach the desk with one's feet in a bag one must hop, and hop is the word.

Through the cloth panes of the four windows a delightful sence of the great out of doors sifts in. The big trees nod their heads near by in happy approval. Inside everything is beautifully clean. On the pretty walls are a few pictures among them Lincoln's and Washington's. And as a finishing touch to the schoolroom, a red, red apple—that token of some childish affection—reposed on "teacher's" desk.

Indeed, there's such a happy atmosphere in connection with the open air school that one wants to go again. Perhaps that is the reason there has been but two absences since the school opened.

"At noon the children all remain for lunch," said Miss Rankin, and then they rest upon the cots while I wash the dishes. And so Miss Rankin "mother's" her boys and girls as well as teaches tem similar and dissimlar fractions.

Fulton has cause to be proud of her new school. The committee in charge is to be congratulated upon so successful an undertaking.

At the annual meeting of the branch of State Charities Aid society the following officers were elected:

H. L. Paddock, president; W. J. Lovejoy, first vice president; A. L. Rice, second vice president; A. E. Gladman, secretary; L. W. Emerick, treasurer; committee to conduct open air school, A. E. Gladman, J. R. Fairgrieve, J. F. Connors, L. W. Emerick and W. J. Lovejoy.

M. W. A. CONTESTS

Captain William Middleton's membership team secured 10 candidates for election to M. W. A. membership, and Captain Hyde comes second with 6 men. The race promises to be a close one between now and April 1, the date of closing, as the standing at present is, Hyde 22; Middleton 20.

In the pool tournament, in two games, Hyde and Darling scored 50 each for the Barker team; while for the Ives team Lawn scored 24 and Seymour 38, making grand totals for the teams 336 and 339 respectively. Thus Captain Ives' team has secured at present eleven points.

A number of members remain who wish to play in the pool contest—they should be present at the next meeting and without fail.

ROYAL NEIGHBORS

Initiation will be performed upon a class of candidates tomorrow evening in the M. W. A. rooms.

Chancellor, Mrs. Mary Hawley, who has been ill for several weeks, last night suffered another relapse. As Mrs. Hawley will be unable to attend tomorrow night's meeting Mrs. William Middleton will act as chancellor.

HENRY W. CALDWELL

Dr. Henry W. Caldwell, 74, one of the oldest physicians in the eastern section of this county, died last evening in the village of Pulaski, where he had lived since 1872.

Dr. Caldwell was born in West Monroe. He was a son of James G. and Eliza Williams Caldwell and a grandson of Dr. Henry Williams, a surgeon in the Third Regiment, Vermont Volunteers, during the war of 1812.

It was in 1858 that Dr. Caldwell commenced the study of medicine at West Monroe with his cousin, the late Dr. H. W. Leonard. He went to Michigan in 1860 and in August of the following year raised a part of a company and enlisted in Company A, Eighth Regiment, Michigan Volunteer Infantry, as a corporal.

While in action at the battle of Wilmington Island, Ga., Dr. Caldwell was wounded, a minne ball passing through his lung, and he was left for dead on the battlefield. This was in April, 1862. He was then sent to the General Hospital at Hilton Head, S. C. A few months later he reported to his regiment for duty and was made hospital steward.

Dr. Caldwell continued as hospital steward until the winter of 1863. He was honorably discharged, owing to feeble health, and returned to West Monroe. Resuming the study of medicine, he was graduated from the university of Buffalo in 1866.

Dr. Caldwell arrived in Pulaski in 1872 and had since continued the practice of medicine up to within the past few weeks. He was a member of the Oswego County Medical Society, the Oneida County Medical Society, New York Medical Association and the American Medical Association. He was coroner of Oswego county from 1876 to 1885.

Besides being a member of the Masonic fraternity Dr. Caldwell was a member of Oswego Lodge of Elks and a past commander of J. B. Butler Post No. 111, G. A. R.

Surviving are two sons, James G. Caldwell of New York and Henry W. Caldwell of Rochester; one brother, Melvin Caldwell of Auburn, and a sister, Mrs. Anna Trumbull of Plattsburg.

FREDERICK J. SMITH

Frederick J. Smith, 68, died last night at Lee Memorial hospital. Mr. Smith had lived in Fulton all his life and for seven years was a member of the volunteer fire department.

Surviving are one sister, Miss Amanda Smith, and a brother, Albert Smith, both of this city.

MRS. MARY E. FULMER

Mrs. Mary E. Fulmer, mother of Mrs. C. L. Peck, died yesterday afternoon at her home in Moravia, N. Y., after a long, severe illness. She was eighty-four years old.

POLICE COURT

The case of James McNeil against Joe Bennetti occuring over a dog fight that took place last Sunday, and in which McNeil received painful injuries, was aired out in police court today before Judge Wilson.

The Judge gave both parties a sound lecture and gave Bennetti until Saturday to pay a $10 fine. A suspended sentence of 30 days in Oswego county jail was also given.

McNeil stated he did not wish the Italian punished too severely but wanted it understood that he (McNeil) could pass the Italian's place without being molested.

The Judge threatened Bennetti with a sentence of six months in jail if anything of a like nature occurred.

Frank Zaia acted as interpreter for the Italian.

A NON-SUPPORT CASE

The case of Mrs. Maude Austin against her husband, W. P. Austin, for non-support was in court this morning.

Mrs. Austin claims that her husband deserted her on November 17th without cause, and since that time has given but litttle toward her support.

The claimant is defended by attorney J. R. Somers, and the defendant by Attorney W. P. Hillick.

OSWEGO VETERINARIAN GETS HOME FROM FRANCE

[The Times]

Dr. W. J. Ratigan, son of Mrs. Julia Ratigan of No. 97 Seneca st., Oswego, who has been in the French veterinary service, which has a large hospital case at Etaples, surprised his mother and family by arriving home yesterday. He came from Newport News, where he landed from France on Saturday last. His mother states that he is not going to return, as she prefers to keep him in neutral territory during the present unpleasantness.

Dr. Ratigan first went to France in charge of a shipment of 1,750 horses, purchased in this country by France for military purposes. His shipment had good luck and he was able to turn the horses over to the French authorities in good condition. A number of other shipments which have been sent over have suffered heavy losses in shipment as the result of a mysterious disease, which have led to charges that the Germans took pains to poison the feed before the horses left port.

The Oswego boy is anxious to get back to France, where there is a fine opportunity for his profession, with thousands of sick and wounded horses being sent back to bases daily, but he will probably remain in this country, as the result of the wishes of his mother. It is reported that Dr. Ratigan would remain in this country in the employ of the French government as an inspector to pass upon the merits of horses offered for sale to the government, but he is not making his intentions definitely known at the present time.

MR. AND MRS. HUNTER MUST SHOW CAUSE

Claude B. Guile of Fulton, attorney representing creditors of John Hunter, bankrupt, has obtained an order from Referee Avery S. Wright directing John Hunter and his wife to show cause why certain property should not be turned over to be disposed of for the benefit of the creditors.

Mr. Guile alleges that Mr. and Mrs. Hunter have possession of certain property, which, he says, consists of cash, an automobile, certain real estate, including a valuable vacant lot in Fulton and he hopes, on March 6, when the order is made returnable, to be able to show that this property should be turned over to the creditors.

The hearing in the matter will be held before Referee in Bankruptcy Avery S. Wright, in his office in Oswego.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

George Bothner, Wrestler, Tells Secret of Youth.

George Bothner, who recently defeated Miyake, the Japanese expert, according to the experts has never had an equal as a defensive wrestler. In his contest with the Jap he proved that, despite all his forty-eight years, he is as agile as and a great deal stronger than many men twenty years his junior. Bothner is a native of New York city and began to learn wrestling when but thirteen years of age. When but a boy and weighing less than 125 pounds, while taking part in an amateur tournament, he won the championship in the 125 pound class and less than two hours later won the 158 pound title. During his seven years as an amateur Bothner never lost a contest.

"Any man can be strong and healthy if he will keep his pores open and will take plenty of exercise," says Bothner. "Men become old before their time because they eat too much and are lazy. No man should eat unless he feels hungry. Then he should eat in moderation. If the average man would exercise for fifteen minutes every day and would take a shower bath after his exertions he would not become a victim of gout or rheumatism. Heavy eating and no exercise insure these two dread diseases."

The Overworked Athlete.

The esteemed and earnest ball player has been referred to as an "overworked slave." Each schedule calls for 154 games. Of the 400 big leaguers enrolled last season only twenty-two worked in 150 games, nine in the National league and thirteen in the American. In the American league Sam Crawford, Donie Bush and Roger Peckenpaugh were the only players who worked in every game fought by their clubs. In the National league there wasn't an entry who failed to miss an afternoon's work.

Bush Surely Consistent.

Ownie Bush of the Tigers is a methodical and consistent person. He doesn't believe in doing a thing one way this time and another way the next time. To prove the marvelous consistency of Bush, note his records for 1913 and 1914: In 1913 Bush went to bat 593 times, made ninety-eight runs, made 149 hits and delivered nineteen two baggers. His average was .251. In 1914 Bush went to bat 598 times, scored ninety-seven runs, rapped 150 hits and smote eighteen two baggers. His average was .252.

Navin Will Let Main Go.

Miles Main, the pitcher, who dropped from Detroit to the Federals, is bound to the Tigers by a perfectly legal contract, without any ten day clause. The Detroit club, however, would be perfectly willing to drop the matter and let Main stay jumped, but it is understood the other American league magnates desire President Navin to insist that Main consider his obligations.

Negro Bouts For Wisconsin.

Negro boxers will be permitted to engage in contests with each other before boxing clubs in Wisconsin, but no bouts between white and negro contestants will be allowed, according to a ruling of the Wisconsin boxing commission, after having consulted with the attorney general. This ruling rescinds a former order, which forbade bouts between negroes in Wisconsin.

Naps to Be Indians In Future.

The Cleveland American league baseball team will hereafter be known as the "Indians," it was decided at a meeting of the club officials and baseball writers. The name "Naps" became obsolete when Napoleon Lajoie went to the Athletics. It was also decided at the meeting to agree on "Spiders" as a name for the Cleveland American association team.

WINTER SCHOOL SPORT

Basket-Ball Does Not Attain Deserved Popularity Generally

By Frank G. Menke

New York, Feb. 25.—Will someone please step forward and tell us why basketball isn't more popular with the rank and file of sport lovers?

It is a mystery to us—and to many thousands of others—why there is such little public interest in a game that provides as many thrills as football, calls for more skill and practically as much endurance as prize fighting and which is almost as fast and furious as hockey.

Weaklings cannot play basketball. It is a game that calls for all there is in the best conditioned athlete. It is a game where nimbleness of foot, alertness of brain, quickness of the eye and thoroughbred gameness are essential. It is a game for the red-blooded lovers of athletic contests, yet they give it the go-by. Why is it?

Basketball is a pretty game to watch, especially when the game is between two evenly matched teams. And, at times, it becomes a tough game. But withal, it is clean.

Basketball is a great winter favorite in small college towns. The attendance at the games is always good. But if two college teams staged a game in some foreign city of a metropolitan nature it wouldn't draw even at 50 cents a head.

In New York city and every other town where boxing bouts are allowed, the "fans" will pay from $2 to $10 to watch a pair of low brow pugs slam—or attempt to slam—each other for 30 minutes but those same fellows wouldn't pay 50 cents to see a crowd of college boys perform in a game that gives as many thrills in five minutes as prize fighting does in 60.

Of course, in all the cities where there are Y. M. C. A.'s and similar institutions, there are basketball games between picked teams of those institutions. But the interest in the games rarely extends beyond the membership of the organization. To draw crowds even to those games the promoters usually have to promise a dance after the game as an additional lure.

Probably the reason that basketball is not more popular is because so little publicity is given to the stars of the game. Basketball, as a game has been given a lot of publicity in years gone by, but little attention has been paid to the individual stars of the game.

Baseball is popular because such men as Ty Cobb, Eddie Collins, Tris Speaker, Larry Lajoie and Joe Jacobson have been flaunted before the public eye so much that it developed a desire to see those men perform. The individual prowess of Charles Brickley, Eddie Mahan, Tacks Hardwick, Harry Le Gove, Johnny Maulbetsch, heralded in the papers acted as the lure for football folks.

But who, outside of the little college towns, ever heard of a basketball star—of a man or men who rank in skill in their game as highly as do the Cobbs in baseball and the Brickleys in football, or the Packer, McFarland's in the ring game?

Scoreboard Boy Nearly Put One Over on the Scout

By Frank G. Menke

New York, Feb. 24.—Dick Kinsella, famous head hunter for the New York Giants, dropped off at Dallas, Texas, a few summers ago and at once was taken into custody by Joe Gardiner, manager of the Dallas club.

"Hooray, hooray," remarked Joe, "you're just the gent I want to see. I've got another Ty Cobb under cover here."

"Yeah," answered Dick, skeptical like.

"This guy, lemme tell you, Dick," answered Joe, "is some baby, some baby."

"Quite so; quite so," said the man hunter, his tone extremely bored. The Gardiner story was the same story that had poured into his ears at every city and tank town between Main and California.

"Get me right, Dick, get me right," pleaded Gardiner. "This boy is some bird as an outfielder. Come on out and give him a look."

Kinsella watched that outfielder that afternoon and as he watched the outfielder made three of the most wonderful catches that Kinsella ever saw in all his baseball career.

"What's his name?" asked Kinsella, in a tone which he hoped would disguise his admiration for the player.

"Duncan," answered Gardiner. "Ain't he a bird?"

"Fair—just Fair," answered Kinsella. "Guess I'll stop over an extra day and see what he does tomorrow."

The next day Duncan performed in even a more brilliant manner. In the early part of the game he made two great running backward catches and when he came in on a Texas league drive and got it at his shoetops, Kinsella was won over. Jimmy McAleer, in his palmiest days, never made a catch that beat that one.

"What's the price on this man Duncan?" asked Kinsella.

"Well, he's a good man and he ought to bring a pretty good bunch of mazuma," parried Gardiner.

"Well name the price—may be we can do business," said Kinsella. "I want that boy."

"Well, I should think about that—" began Gardiner, when up rushed one of the score boys.

"He Joe, did you see that catch? Wasn't it a pippin? Say, Joe, he's some baby, ain't he? Gee, if he could only throw—if he could only throw! Pretty tough luck for him, Joe, ain't it, that he can't heave the ball farther than second base?"

Oh, yes, Kinsella heard that score boy's remark, and like the Arab, he folded up his tent and beat it without bidding any fond adieus.

History does not tell what happened to that score card boy after he was left to the tender mercies of Gardiner.

WOLGAST-CROSS BOUT OFF FOR TOMORROW

New York, Feb. 25.—Ad. Wolgast, former lightweight champion, is the hard luck kid of the prize ring. Once again he has been forced to call off a bout because of an injury to his arm. His right forearm was fractured after a stiff workout with his sparring partner. Wolgast was to have met Leach Cross in a ten-round bout tomorrow night and he expected to defeat the East Side dentist and pave the way for a bout with rFeddie Welsh, the champion. The former champion left the city late last night for the West. Johnny Dundee, the Italian scrapper, has been substituted for Wolgast.

WRITE CONFIDENT OF BEATING ENGLISHMEN

Milwaukee, Wis., Feb. 25.—Charlie White has hopes of being the lightweight champion after his bout with Freddie Welsh tonight. The Chicago fighter predicted today that he would stop the champion before the end of the ten-round affair and thus bring the championship back to America. The Englishman, however, says he is not worrying about the out come, and taht he will reverse the popular verdict that White received when the two boys clashed here a few months ago. White is a slight favorite in the betting.

NEWARK GETS FED CLUB, SAYS POWERS

New Yorkr, Feb. 25.—Patrick T. Powers announced today that he has placed the one-time Kansas City Federal league club in Newark, N. J. Powers said that not until Monday was the decision made between locating the team in the Bronx or Newark. The playing field of the Newark Federals will be the largest in the country. It will embrace part of the old oval at Harrison, N. J., a suburb of Newark, and also 140 building lots adjoining the oval.

C. B. Comstock, vice president of the Pittsburg Federals, on the man who designed the Brooklyn Feds concrete stadium, will have charge of the drawing of the plans for the Newark stands. Stands of a horseshoe shape will be erected in Newark. These will be ready for occupancy before the playing season opens and will accommodate 20,000 persons. They will be so built that the seating capacity can be increased at any time.

The entire plot of the playing field will be 550 by 620 feet. There will be parking space inside the grounds of automobiles.

The field is well located and is only 15 minutes' ride from downtown territory.

"IS IT WELL WITH THEE?"

She smiled and said:

"Husband, I'll soon be in, won't I?"

"Yes, Janet," said he as the tears rolled down his weatherbeaten face, as he thought he was soon to lose the partner of his life.

"You will soon be in."

They thought she had gone, but she came back from the skies. She slipped her arms about his neck and said:

"You will soon come in won't you? You won't wait long, will you?"

And he said—

"Yes, Janet, by the grace of God through Jesus Christ, it won't be long.

What of Your Child? Is It Well With Him?

There are mothers in this town that could not be true of.

The cross of Jesus Christ divides them.

"Is it well with thy husband?"

"Is it well with thy child?"

I have often tried to imagine Noah and his wife seated in the ark, contented, and the storm of God brewing to burst on the world, and one would turn to the other and say:

"Where are the boys?"

"Oh, they are out; they will be in late tonight. Leave the night lock so they can get in; they didn't take their key with them."

I can't imagine a father and mother tucking themselves in bed and letting their children gad the streets.

"Is it well with the child?"

Hear me a minute. You are interested in their education. You hire teachers, you tax the community, you build public schools and get the best money can buy.

You are concerned for their health. You will send for the doctor when they are ill. You work to give them three meals a day. You will buy them warm clothes for winter and cool clothes for summer. You are concerned for their health; but, great God, what about their souls?

I tell you, there are men in this town, there are fathers who are leading their boys as straight to hell as that two and two make four.

"Is it well with the child?"

If I was not a Christian do you know what I would do? I would walk down the aisle tonight, give my heart to God, and if I had a child I would go home, and if it was asleep I would get it out of bed, wash its face to waken it and I would say to it:

"You never hear your father pray. I want you to hear him pray."

I would get him on his knees and I would let that child that bears my name hear my voice in prayer.

They have heard you cuss, damn, blaspheme, mock and rail at the preacher and ridicule what I have been trying to do to keep you out of hell; I would let them hear me pray

And I tell you, a mother's arms and a mother's heart are a safe anchorage and there are not devils enough in hell to drag the children out of that harbor if they will only get in there.

"Is it well with the child?"

Listen! In your home there are boys and girls destined to rule in church and state.

Public school teacher, don't simply think of the little paltry salary, you draw from the school board at the end of the month.

You have the grandest, most noble, far-reaching work ever given to human beings, the shaping and molding of character. In your classes next week will be some boy or girl destined to rule in church or in state.

Upon which side of their life the influences are thrown will determine what they will be.

You Wait Too Long—It is Too Late.

Hear me! Some Oliver Cromwell that will dissolve parliament; some David Brainard that will change the Indian war-whoop into a Sabbath school; some Bethehoven who will touch the world's heart strings and make them sing; some Miss Dix who will soothe the brain of the crazed; some Clara Barton that will bind up the battle wound; some Frances E. Willard who will arouse the people to the ravages of the liquor traffic.

Yes, some one, I say, destined to rule in church and in state.

Some John Knox, who will make queens turn pale on their throne; some Martin Luther who will start a reformation.

Yes, but you wait too long. You wait until he curses you to your face before you teach him:

"Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain."

You wait until he staggers into your presence before you teach him:

"Look not on the wine when it is red."

You wait until he steals and is off for the penitentiary before you teach him:

"Thou shalt not steal."

You wait until he has robbed some girl of her virtue before you teach him:

"Thou shalt not commit adultery."

You wait too long.

It is too late to repair a ship after she has left the drydock. It is too late to take swimming lessons after the vessel begins to sink. It is too late to send for the insurance agent after the flames have burst through. It is too late to telephone for the life insurance agent after the doctors have shaken their heads and they have telephoned for the undertaker.

You wait too long. You are too late with your prayers, with your tears, with your sermons, with your songs, with your tabernacle, You are too late.

You are too late. You wait too long.

You wait until the devil wraps his tongs about them and drags them off shrieking to the pit, then you rush and try to save them. You are too late.

"Is it well with the child?"

Lived in His Memory Scenes of Boyhood.

I want to say to you that one of the brightest pictures that hangs upon the walls of my memory is the recollections of the days when as a little boy out in the log cabin on the frontier of Iowa, I knelt by mother's side.

I went back to the old farm some years ago to bury my brother. The first burying ground in that section of the State was on the old farm, and I went back to bury my brother.

The scenes had changed about the place. Faces I had known and loved had long since turned to dust.

Fingers that used to turn the pages of the Bible were obliterated and the old trees beneath which we boys used to play and swing had been felled by the woodsman's ax.

I stood and thought. The man became a child again and the long, weary nights of sin and of hardship became as though they never had been.

Once more with my gun on my shoulder and my favorite dog trailing at my heels, I walked through the pathless wood and sat on the old familiar logs and stumps, and as I sat and listened to the wild, weird harmonies of nature, a vision of the past opened.

The squirrel from the limb of the tree barked defiantly and I threw myself into an interrogation point, and when the gun cracked the squirrel fell at my feet.

I grabbed him and ran home to throw him down and receive compliments for my skill as a marksman.

And I saw the tapestry of the evening fall. I heard the lowing herds and saw them wind slowly o'er the lea and I listened to the tinkling bells that lulled the distant fold.

Once more I heard the shouts of childish glee. Once more I climbed the haystack for the hen's eggs. Once more we crossed the threshold and sat at our frugal meal. Once more mother drew the trundle bed from under the large one, and we boys, kneeling down, shut our eyes and clasping our little hands we said:

"Now, I lay me down to sleep, I pray thee, Lord, my soul to keep; if I should die before I wake, I pray thee, Lord, my soul to take. And this I ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

Stretched Mother's Love Till It Almost Broke.

I cried out then, as I feel like crying now:

Backward, turn backward, O time in thy flight.
Make me a child again, just for to-night.
Mother come back from that echoless shore.
Take me again to your heart as of yore.

In the old cradle I'm longing to sleep,
Rock me to sleep, mother, rock me to sleep.

I want to go back to the orchard,
The orchard that used to be mine.
The apples are reddening and filling
The air with their wine.

I want to run on through the pasture
And let down the dusty old bars,
I want to find you there still waiting,
Your eyes like the twin stars.

Oh, nights you are weary and dreary,
And days there is something you lack
To the farm in the valley
I want to go back.

I say I will never forget. That is one of the brightest pictures that hangs on memory's wall.

I tell it to you with shame; I stretched the elastic bands of my mother's love until I thought they would break. I went so far into the dark and the wrong until I ceased to hear her praying or her pleadings.

I forgot her face, and I went so far that it seemed to me that one more step and the elastic bands of her love would break and I would be lost.

But thank God, friends, I never took that step. Little by little I yielded to the tender memories and recollections of my mother, little by little I was drawn away from the yawning abyss, and twenty-nine years ago, one dark and stormy night, I groped my woy out of the darkness into the arms of Jesus Christ, and I fell on my knees and said:

"God be merciful to me a sinner."

Thus I am here preaching to you to help you to Jesus Christ.

IS IT WELL? IS IT WELL?

The Game of Pig.

There must be three or more players for this game, each with a broom handle or a stick about that size and length. Dig a hole about six inches in diameter and if there are four players dig three other ones about five feet from the first and about seven feet apart. One player must be the pig driver—the pig is a tin can—who tries to knock the pig into the central hole with his stick, while the others try to knock the pig away. The driver tries to put his stick into the hole of another player while the other is knocking the pig away. If he does this the owner of the hole must give it up and be the driver himself. Or, if he knocks the can into the central hole, all the players have to change holes, giving him a chance for one. This is a very interesting game if there are five or six players.—Memphis Commercial Appeal.

Exhibit of Fishes.

The New York Aquarium society recently held an exhibit at the American Museum of Natural History and showed little fishes of all shapes and colors, the largest scarcely five inches in length. Fishes from the water troughs of India, the fish ponds of China and Japan, the tepid swamps of South America, tributaries of the Kongo and the Nile were exhibited as well as the goldfish and small wild fish from temperate zones. Among the more interesting are the butterfly fish and the mouth breeder, which carries its eggs in its mouth, both from Africa; the armored catfish from tropical America and the fighting fish.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

A Geography Party.

A geography party will prove especially interesting to school children and is easily planned. Procure a large map of the United States and paste it upon rather heavy cardboard. When this has thoroughly dried cut out each state and mark on the back with numbers, being careful not to number them according to their positions.

Before the arrival of the guests hide the states about the room in which the company is to be entertained.

When the guests arrive provide each with a small map and a pencil. They then follow whatever route they choose, the game being to find as many of the states as possible, and upon their own map mark the number which they believe to correspond. If Ohio is marked "10," as they find it or think they find it, they mark "10" upon the state in their small map which they think must be Ohio and then continue the search, marking each state which they find in the same way.

The task is not an easy one, as several of the states closely resemble each other in outline, and the one correctly placing the largest number of numerals is entitled to the prize.

It is of course unnecessary to say that on the small map the states are outlined, but not named. The maps are easily made by the use of transfer paper, or they can be drawn upon any thin paper by holding a small map against a windowpane and drawing from this upon any thin paper the outlines of the states.

Think For Yourself.

Thinking for yourself is not necessarily differing to any startling extent from your companions. Two pupils in school may work out a problem by entirely different methods, but if they work correctly they reach the same result. That is as it should be, but if the two students sit side by side and the one copies down the other's figures mechanically that is what too often happens. Make a habit of thinking. Don't accept conclusions ready made. Don't satisfy your mind with predigested food. This should not make you singular among your fellows, for if your method of reasoning is correct it will bring you, in the vast majority of cases, to the same conclusions held by the world at large. The difference will be in you. Thinking for yourself instead of accepting the results of others' thoughts makes the same difference to you that it does to the student who works his problem independently instead of copying it from his classmate's paper. Be ambitious to be something more than a convenient receptacle for other people's ideas.

THE EUGENIC LAW

In Wisconsin It Lessens Marriages 4,000 In Year

Madison, Wis., Feb. 25.—The Wisconsin Eugenic Marriage Law, the first of its kind in the world, has now been in effect a little over a year and the results can be estimated. The state board of health has just reported that one effect is a lessening of the number of marriages contracted. It appears that about 4,000 couples less took the big jump in 1914 than in 1913.

In 1914, 17,245 regular ceremonials were reported and eighty-seven law marriages were recorded. In the previous year there had been 21,052 marriages.

The board of health does not believe the Eugenic Law is entirely responsible for the decline. It says:

"On account of the great prevalence of certain diseases in the State, it is only reasonable to expect that there would be some decline in the number of marriages reported if the Eugenic Law is properly enforced, on account of the inability on the part of the prospective bridegroom who is afflicted with either of these diseases to obtain a medical certificate. Undoubtedly some of the parties who were unable to pass the required examination or who suspected that they would not pass went out of the State to be married, and in other cases common law marriages was resorted to.

"It would, of course, be unjust to charge that all the bridegrooms who went out of the state to be married or who evaded the law by contracting common law marriages were so afflicted. In some instances the parties felt that the Eugenic Law was a serious infringement of their personal liberties and were married outside the State to avoid its provisions. In others common law marriage was reported to by perfectly healthy people purely because of the novelty of the ceremony and the knowledge that a marriage of this kind was fully binding to both parties.

"Statistics compiled by many other states and several foreign countries, show that, extending over a period of time, there is a marked decline in our marriage rate. This factor must be considered in making proper deductions from the figures presented. The industrial depression which has been upon us for more than a year is also responsible in a large measure. Statistics show that a financial depression seriously retards marriage in the same way that it produces a decline in the birth rate.

"Thoughtful persons who know of the ravages of certain diseases will agree that the actual number of marriages occurring in the State in a given period of time is not nearly as important to posterity as the general healthfulness of the contracting parties.

"The educational value of the Eugenic Marriage Law should not be lost sight of. A more fruitful campaign of education could not have been waged throughout this State than through the passage and enforcement of the law."

The report throws some light on the attitude of men and women toward matrimony. It would seem that for women once was enough; at least only 679 widows married again; while 938 widowers took another chance. However, the situation was reversed in the case of divorcees. Of the grass widows 320 married again, while only 286 men took a chance.

In 12,969, of the total number of marriages, both parties were native born, with both parents native; in 583 the groom was native and the bride foreign-born; in 1,479 cases the groom was foreign-born and the bride was native; in 2,121 marriages both parties were foreign-born. In 93 cases the nativity of one or both parties was unknown or not stated.

Old Enough.

"I understand Miss Whatyoumaycall is going to have a birthday party this evening," the fat plumber observed.

"Yep," answered the thin carpenter. "I've been invited."

"Did she keep her last birthday?"

"Yes; and I'll tell you in confidence I don't believe she ever intends to let go of it."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

"Say, pop, may I have another piece of cake?"

"Yes, Bobby, if you won't tell your mother."

"Pop, may I have another piece of cake?"

"No."

"Then I'll tell mamma."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

PICKING A PICKPOCKET.

Rules That Guide Chicago Detectives In Spotting Their Man.

How to tell a pickpocket when you see one—the feat is apparently not difficult, for all applicants who take the civil service examination to become Chicago detectives are required to have mastered it.

"What are the physical characteristics of pickpockets?" the would be thief catchers are asked.

And this is the answer they are expected to give:

"Pickpockets ordinarily travel in mobs and are of two distinct types—one small or medium stature, the other tall and muscular. As a general rule, the age runs from eighteen to thirty-five. Their hands are soft, show no signs of work, and the fingers of all except the 'stall' and particularly the fingers of the 'wire' are long and slender. Their eyes are shifting and furtive. Their complexion is generally sallow and without distinct color, this being due either to prison pallor in types or to the use of cocaine or other drugs. The cocaine users show drawn features and prominent cheek bones and usually have distinct rings around the eyes.

"The temperament of pickpockets is high strung because of the dangers of the profession or from the use of drugs. At the same time they are polite almost to the point of obsequiousness. They seldom carry weapons and rarely resort to force. On duty they dress to suit the occasion, generally well, but not conspicuously. They avoid wearing anything that might lead to identification."—Baltimore American.

OUR FIRST ELECTION.

Methods In the Days When Washington Was Chosen President.

At the first national election at which General Washington was chosen president only eleven of the thirteen states voted. North Carolina and Rhode Island not yet having entered the Union, and in only three—Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia—were popular elections held. In the other eight states the legislatures chose the electors. New York did not choose electors because of a feud between the anti-Federalist house and the Federalist senate.

One exciting incident was caused by the fear on the part of Alexander Hamilton that John Adams, who was on the ticket for vice president with Washington, was plotting to tie the vote, and thus by throwing the election into the national house of representatives defeat the Father of His Country for president. So real was this fear in Hamilton that he dispatched messengers on horses to Virginia, Connecticut and New Jersey to stampede the legislatures of the latter two states to Washington.

So long did it take to gather news that Washington was actually inaugurated president before some of the remote counties in Virginia had sent in their returns. In this first election there was only one ticket and there was no campaigning. There were only about 8,000,000 inhabitants in the country at that time, and the whole cost of getting up the machinery of this presidental election is estimated at less than $100,000.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Measures Here and Abroad.

A yard and a pound are "for all practical and most scientific purposes" (as the editor of Nature remarks) the same in the United States and in Great Britain. The United States gallon is only five-sixths of the imperial gallon and the United States bushel approximately thirty-two thirty-thirds of the imperial bushel. Our standard meter is the international prototype meter; that of Great Britain is shorter than ours by six-tenths of a micron, or .2364 billionths of an inch.

Far From Tipperary

A Story of

Love and War

VI.

It is not my purpose to narrate in detail the operations of my command. Most of them were of minor importance, yet in their aggregate not ineffective. They required hard riding, rapid thinking, quick translation of thought into action. Sometimes in the brush with men dismounted and troopers and mounts lying low in hiding bodies of the enemy's troops passed so near that the neighing of a charger would have betrayed us and delivered us into their hands.

There we lay and waited for an opportunity to deliver an attack. It might be the cutting off of a couple of supply wagons that had been obliged to stop for repairs and now came lumbering along far in the rear of the main train, and inadequately guarded an exploit we repeated several times, thus replenishing our commissary at the foe's expense and securing fodder for our horses. These details may sound prosaic, but they are important factors in war. An army fights on its stomach. The enemy's supply trains helped to keep my command—man and beast—in fit condition.

Nor did we stop with his wagons. We destroyed two guns and a caisson that had been obliged to drop out of an artillery train for repairs. Being a highly mobile force we were able to choose points of operation far from our camp and in entirely different parts of the forest from it, strike quickly and withdraw. We were a raiding party, nearly always under cover, but able because of Silvain's knowledge of the terrain over which we operated to move with almost incredible swiftness. Narrow paths did not delay us, because the Belgian knew where they converged. We could split up our party and proceed with greater secrecy separately and in smaller numbers, yet rendezvous in the right place at the right time, throw our sudden attack into the open, scamper back into the woods and fade away, as if absorbed by the forest itself.

By reason of our fit condition we were as efficient as twice our number. My men were in fine fettle and ready for any call I might make upon them. I am convinced the only thing they dreaded was that in our raids we might scare up some British officer of higher rank than myself and therefore entitled to supersede me in command. I believe if they had seen one they would have looked the other way and ridden on, so determined were they not to serve under any one but me.

My most exciting experience was due to an inspiration of Henriette's. For it was she who told me, on one of my visits, of the broad, deep stream that skirted the southern edge of the Forest of Vervé and, about a mile after it entered the plain, was spanned by a stone bridge, which was the main crossing for the enemy's line of communication with the troops on his extreme right flank. To destroy it would be an achievement of vital importance.

"I have not told you about it before," said Henriette, "because the enemy has maintained a heavy guard there—much too heavy for you to attack. But I knew nothing would stop you if once I told you about it. To-day, however, the guard has been much reduced. It looks as if the enemy were rushing every available man to the front. I wonder why?"

I had asked myself that question, even before she had put it. All the while that the allied armies had been falling back before that terrific "drive" by an enemy in overwhelming force not a man of us but had felt that, if a rout could be averted, the time would come when, with the Army of Paris to aid the French and possible reinforcements from across the Channel for us, we ourselves would take a turn at laying on the whip! Had the opportunity come at last? Was the enemy in danger of having his own strategy tried on himself? Had his attempt to envelope the British army definitely failed? Somewhere to the south was he now exposed to the peril of an enveloping movement by us?

The guard at the bridge did not concern me much. I realised at once that my objective must be the bridge itself—the enemy's crossing—and so explained the situation to Henriette.

"Some dynamite, a piece of pipe and a clock will do the business."

"Just before the war broke out," said Henriette, "they were making a clearing in the forest and using dynamite to blow up the tree stumps. The work had to remain unfinished. Silvain will know where to find the explosive that was left over. There should be pipe in the repair house. A punt is kept on the river not far from where you reach the stream from camp."

The sky was overcast. It looked as if that very night might prove propitious for the attempt. I reminded Henriette that I needed a clock.

"Ah!" she exclaimed gayly, "shall we confer the honor of assisting in blowing up the bridge upon our timepiece of the period of Louis XV., or will the American alarm clock in the kitchen suffice for the purpose?"

"The Allies," I answered in the same spirit, "do not destroy precious relics. We will requisition our mechanical outfit from the kitchen."

We knew how serious was the mission on which I was going, but we sought to ignore it. So at leave-taking she simply said, "Au revoir, till to-morrow."

"Yes, till to-morrow. I have a previous engagement for to-night—on the river."

For a brief moment she lost her fine, brave poise. "War is fraught with blood and tears!" she cried; "the blood of men, the tears of women."

"But it's a long way to Tipperary," I said lightly, "and that's the way I feel about death."

VII.

Silvain was a good guide to the byways of the forest; but he was not a genius, or he would have told me about the river and the bridge, and that the latter was within striking distance of our camp.

"A river? A bridge?—Oh, yes; of course I show them."

His capacity of guide was impeccable, but one must not expect more of him, especially initiative.

"I show them." He promptly did, now that he had been questioned about them. Our raids invariably had taken us to points south of our camp, for the enemy who crossed our terrain came from Belgium, which lay in that direction. Now, however, Silvain led me southeast and by a wood road that became less marked as we proceeded, until when we reached the foot of a low hill it had almost vanished into the merest trail. The hill I found thickly wooded on our side. But toward the plain it fell away in bare reaches.

Cautiously approaching the outer fringe of trees and bushes, I peered in the direction indicated by Silvain. We were about on a line with where the stream, flowing from east to west, entered the forest. A mile above this point was the bridge—two arches resting on a pier in midstream and extending from there to either bank.

Through my field glasses I noted that the broad foundation on which the pier rested formed a shelf or ledge somewhat above the surface of the water. On this the bomb could be placed by any one who succeeded in floating unobserved down to the bridge and under it. There were troops on each side of the river, but the guard was not as strong as I would have expected to find had not Henriette told me of the withdrawal toward the front of part of the force. It was alert and watchful, however; and even while I was making these observations I was obliged to duck well behind a bush and signal to Silvain to remain in absolute concealment. For an officer walked out to the middle of the bridge and with his field glasses carefully swept the surrounding country, including the hill on which we were.

Besides its value as a point of observation, this hill was of great strategic importance to me. From it I could attack any ammunition or supply train intended for the extreme right of the enemy's line, and either ward off a counter-attack, or, as his trains had been coming forward under strong escort, withdraw my force into the woods, if assaulted in overwhelming numbers.

Here, then, on the morrow, I proposed to post my small but able artillery contingent—"Busy Bertha," the English field gun, and the "Ginger Pop," my Belgian rapid firers; also my infantry; men and guns to remain in concealment until the time came for action; while the cavalry was to operate from the woods below, as developments required. Meanwhile, I had not failed to observe a pontoon train with all material for a pontoon bridge parked near the river and intended, no doubt, to be thrown across the stream for use in addition to the stone structure.

At this moment I was obliged to duck again, for I saw the officer with the field glass once more approach the bridge. But this time, instead of examining the environs in all directions, he looked only toward the south. And now I heard a far away reverberation, a roll as of very distant thunder. Guns!—for the first time since I had fought my last rear guard action and, in order to avoid capture, had taken to the woods. No doubt the officer at the bridge had heard the sound just before I did, because I was so completely engrossed in formulating my strategy. Now, however, I was watching and listening.

Suddenly from a low ridge, about ten miles away, I saw a series of great white bubbles float skyward, then quickly fade away; to be succeeded, after the interval of time required for sound to travel so far, by the dull, heavy reverberation of large field guns. So often had I watched those white bubbles rise above the enemy's guns in action that there was no mistaking their origin. And the presence of the enemy only ten miles to the south? It could have but one meaning. He was retiring before the Allies, being driven back in turn and, if anything, more rapidly than he had been able to drive us. Under these circumstances the destruction of the bridge, if the adventure proved successful, no longer would threaten what was merely a line of communications; it would block a line of retreat!

When I returned to camp I detailed a squad under command of a sergeant of engineers who was with the infantry cautiously to clear a path for the guns up the rear of the hill, so that they could be run up into position in short order when the time came. Meanwhile an artillerist who was an expert in explosives had prepared the bomb, attached the works of a clock to it and stowed the apparatus in a cigar box, so that it only remained necessary to start the clock and set it at the right time for the explosion.

And now, to place it where it could do the most terrible damage!

(To be Continued Saturday)

A Blunt Excuse.

There is a story of an English clergyman who had taken temporary duty for a friend and who had the ill luck to injure his false teeth during the week. The plate was sent to the dentist for repairs, a faithful assurance being given that it should be returned by Sunday's post, but the dentist or the post proved faithless.

With the assistance of the clerk the clergyman managed to stumble through the prayers, but felt it would be useless to attempt to preach. He therefore instructed the clerk to make some excuse for him and dismiss the congregation. But his feelings may be better imagined than described when, in the seclusion of the vestry, he overheard the clerk in impressive tones thus deliver the excuse:

"Parson is very sorry, but it is his misfortune to be obliged to wear a set of artful teeth. They busted last Wednesday, and he ain't got them back from London today, as he was promised. I've helped him all I could through the service, but I can't do more for him. 'Tisn't any use for him going up in the pulpit, for you wouldn't understand a word he said, so he thinks you all may as well go home."

Wagging the Ears.

You will rarely find that a man who can wag his ears suffers from deafness. The reason for this is very simple. Wagging one's ears exercises them just as much as walking exercises the muscles of the legs. A great deal of deafness is caused by the muscles of the ears becoming stiff and refusing to respond quickly to the sound waves. Quite a large proportion of children can move their ears, just as they can move the skin on their forehead up and down, but as they grow up they lose their power through want of practice. It is a mistake to let a child lose this power, for it may mean the difference between good and bad hearing in after years. Dr. M. Fernet, the famous Paris doctor, has even gone so far as to suggest that people should be trained to wag their ears, just as they are trained to exercise any other muscles of the body.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Defining a Gentleman.

The true gentleman is the man whose conduct proceeds from good will and an acute sense of propriety and whose self control is equal to all emergencies; who does not make the poor man conscious of his poverty, the obscure man of his obscurity or any man of his inferiority or deformity; who is himself humbled if necessity compels him to humble another; who does not flatter wealth, cringe before power or boast of his own possessions or achievements; who speaks with frankness, but always with sincerity and sympathy, and whose deed follows his word; who thinks of the rights and feelings of others rather than of his own; who appears well in any company and who is at home what he seems to be abroad—a man with whom honor is sacred and virtue safe.—Dr. Wayland.

Notes Not Elaborate.

The bishop of St. Albans wrote that on a certain occasion he heard Bishop Wilberforce describe with such singular eloquence and power the effect on the soul of the clearing away of intellectual doubts that he begged to be shown the manuscript from which his friend had been preaching, as he wished to copy certain portions of the sermon.

Wilberforce handed him the document, turned to the page which contained the passage spoken of by the bishop and showed him a sheet of paper inscribed with the single word—fog.

It Would Help.

A facetious bishop went to preach a charity sermon a short time ago in a church. The rector said:

"I am grieved that you should have to come on such a windy day."

The bishop replied: "Tut, tut, my friend. Didn't I come to raise the wind?"—Wisconsin State Journal.

Greatest Railroad Terminal.

Chicago is a greater railroad center than New York, or any other place on earth. As a railroad terminal the Windy City bears the palm over all the world and will probably continue to do so for a long time to come.—New York American.

The widow's cap is as old as the days of Julius Caesar. An edict of Tiberius commanded all widows to wear the cap under penalty of a heavy fine and imprisonment.

Beth in the names of places mentioned in the Bible is the Hebrew word for "house." Thus, Beth-lehem is the house of bread; Bethshida, house of mercy.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, Feb. 25.—Secretary of State Francis M. Hugo is evidently disgruntled at the action of the State civil service commission in refusing to grant his request that three cashiers in his automobile bureau be transferred from the competitive to the exempt class. Two separate requests were made by the secretary of state but both were denied.

To those who claim to be in touch with the innermost details of State politics, there was a reason for the refusal of the civil service commission. These well informed ones hint that it was because Mr. Hugo insisted upon running for the office of secretary of state against the desires of the Republican organization which preferred that Edward D. Cunningham of Ulster county should be the candidate for that office.

If this be true the feeling between Secretary Hugo and the Republican organization, if such a feeling existed, is not likely to be healed for some little time. There is nothing other than rumor and inference, however, to substantiate the ill feeling referred to. It is known that the present secretary of state had to make a busy campaign in order to win and it is also believed that he is not a subservient Republican.

Nothing has been heard of late concerning the bill introduced a number of weeks ago by Senator Christman which aimed to place the automobile bureau of the department of the secretary of state under the jurisdiction of the State department of highways. Secretary Hugo was demonstratively opposed to this bill and has evidently used effective methods to prevent its passage. This shows that he is not entirely without power and is regarded as a potent political factor by [illegible] especially is this true when taken into consideration with the declaration made some weeks ago by Senator Christman that he believed that his bill was a good one and that its passage and enactment would result in a considerable saving to the State. Economical measures have been popular with the present administration.

If the bill which has been introduced placing the administration of the State labor department with the secretary of state becomes a law, Secretary Hugo will have additional powers and considerable opportunity to secure additional patronage.

To counteract the reports which have been going the rounds that Secretary Hugo is in wrong with the Republican organization, it is pointed out by certain of the Legislative leaders that the turn down which Hugo received at the hands of the civil service commission was in the general order of things and that in spite of the fact that the three positions he desired exempted from examination had been classified within a few days of the expiring of the term of office of Governor Glynn, the attitude of the civil service commissioners is to be against making any more places exempt.

It is also declared that Secretary Hugo stands in well with the Republican majority in the legislature and with the leaders of the party who are not holding political places. The statements regarding the good standing of the secretary of state come from sources which should be absolutely authentic; all of which goes to show that much must be heard before the real truth surrounding a political situation can be learned.

Secrertary Hugo has nothing to say concerning his supposed strained relations with Republican leaders. Perhaps he does not think the rumors worth commenting upon.

SOME DIFFERENCE IN THE TEMPERATURE

A Year Ago Today the Mercury Was Below Zero

According to the Oswego Times, the daily rerport of the Weather Bureau in the Lake City, shows a vast difference in temperature between February 24, 1914, and February 24, 1915. The official local observer also reports that the ground is now free from snow, a condition which has not existed since the eighth of last December. So far this winter the snowfall has been a trifle below normal, the total fall, to date being 84.1 inches, while the average for the past twenty years has been 86.1 inches. There are still several days of winter left, nearly a month in fact, in which the extra two inches are sure to arrive. RELEASED PRISONERS RETURN TO THEIR COLORS

By Franklin P. Merrick

Paris, Feb. 25.—German troops released by the German victory over the Russians in East Prussia are pouring back into Belgium to strengthen the German line in the western theatre of war. It is reported from Amsterdam that many troop trains passed through Belgium toward Liege and Brussels during the night for West Flanders.

The French have begun a new series of attacks against the Germans in the Champagne district. The scene of hard fighting in that region is moving westward from the vicinity of Perthes, Les Mesnil and Beausejour toward the Suippes river. It is evident that the French are trying to dislodge the Germans from some of their positions eastt of Rheims to prevent further bombardments of the city from the heights to the east. Artillery engagements are reported from the West Flanders and the Meuse valley. In the Vosges the Germans have opened a cannonade against Sulzerenx, in upper Alsace, which was recently taken by the French.

FRENCH FORBID PUBLISHING PHOTOGRAPHS IN NEWSPAPERS

Paris, Feb. 25.—Further progress by the French in the Champagne region and the repulse o fall German counter attacks were reported in the official statement issued this afternoon. A blockhouse and points of observation occupied by the Germans were stormed by French artillery near Lombartzyde. The statement says the German attack in the Argonne was broken up. An official note was also issued warning newspapers again publishing photos which might be made use of by the Germans. It points out that a Paris paper recently printed a picture of a priest saying mass among the troops. The Germans concluded that the French were in force in that village and shelled it killing hundreds.

RABBIS PROTEST THE BIBLE BILL

Joint Committee Going To Albany Will Represent 500,000 New York Jews

New York, Feb. 25.—"I regard the Bible too highly to allow it to be tampered with and spoiled in the inexperienced hands of public school officials."

This was said yesterday by Dr. Stephen S. Wise, of the Free Synagogue, at a special meeting in Temple Emanu-El of the executive committee of the Eastern Council of Reform Rabbis, which met to protest against the bill regarding daily reading of ten bible verses in all the public schools of the state.

The council elected a committee which will co-operate with the protest committee of the Board of Jewish Ministers. The two associations represent more than half a million Jews in this city. The joint committee will formulate their objections and will be represented when the Greiner-Tallett measure comes before the Legislature on March 2.

Dr. M. H. Harris, president of the Eastern Council, said the unanimous opinion of the rabbis in the city was absolutely against the bill. They hold that to make Bible reading mandatory in the public schools would be a blow at the constitutional principle of separating church affairs from those of the state.

"The moment this law would be put into practice sectarian difficulties would arise," said Dr. Harris. "In the first place, the Bible does not mean the same thing to the different citizens of this country. To the Christian it means Old and New Testaments; to the Jew only the Old Testament.

"In the second place, the Bible is not to be read in the original Hebrew but in translations. Certain passages in the Prophets and Psalms have been variously translated to suit the particular doctrines of particular churches.

"There are certain practical difficulties in reading the Bible in schools without comment. The Bible literature is difficult to understand without interpretation. This interpretation could not be given by the school teachers. We value the Bible too highly to have it presented by those not fully equipped for that purpose. The law as now worded would do justice to neither children nor Bible."

Besides Dr. Stephen S. Wise and Rabbi Harris, the other members of the executive committee of the Eastern Council of Reform Rabbis are Dr. Joseph Silverman, of Temple Emanu-El; Dr. Rudolph Grossman, Dr. Clifton Levy and Rabbis Moses Kraff and Lyons, the latter two of Brooklyn.

FRANK'S TRIAL BEGAN TODAY

Lawyer's Battle In Court to Save Life of Mary Pheagan's Murderer

Washington Feb. 25.—Final arguments in the battle to save the life of Leo M. FFrank, of Atlanta, Ga., convicted of the murder of Mary Phagan, were begun in the United States Supreme Court today.

Whether Frank could escape the sentence of death pronounced upon him by the Superior Court of Fulton county, Ga., because he was not present when the jury which found him guilty returned its verdict, was the specific legal question at issue. All the other constitutional and techniaal questions of procedure in the case were grouped around it.

The arguments were addressed to an appeal from the decision of the federal court of Georgia denying Frank's petition for a writ of habeas corpus.

The Supreme Court was asked by Frank's lawyers to grant the writ and reverse the lower court's decision. They argued that the absence of Frank from court when the verdict was returned nullified the death sentence and removed the prisoner from the jurisdiction of the court. They did not set up the claim that Frank could not be retried on the indictment for murder.

Loyis Marshall, of New York, an expert on constitutional questions, opened the case for Frank. He based his argument on these points:

That Frank's absence from the court room when the death verdict was brought in without his consent, and also the absence of his counsel, constituted a denial of the due process guarantee of the federal constitution and nullified the judgment of the court.

That threatened mob violence in the city of Atlanta while the trial was in progress interfered with the due course of justice.

That Frank's failure to raise jurisdictional questions at the time the verdict was returned did not prevent him from demanding his rights under the federal constitution.

That a habeas corpus proceeding was the proper course to determine the legality of his present detention in a Georgia jail.

For the State of Georgia, which opposed Frank's appeal, the lawyers were Attorney General Warren Grice and Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey. Their argument was not expected to be concluded until tomorrow.

An Advertising County

Santa Clara, Cal., is a county which has a board of supervisors, though the system of government is somewhat different from that found in this State. Santa Clara also has some agricultural lands, and it thinks that it has some climate. But the peculiar thing about Santa Clara and its board of supervisors is that they are national advertisers. They are advertising the attractiveness of the county. This is mentioned, because the other day a high State official recommended that a few thousand dollars meant for advertising the agricultural possibilities of this State be lopped off. The unavoidable inference is that if Santa Clara, which hasn't so very much to deliver, can afford to advertise, the Empire State, which has a great deal to produce, can afford to advertise. And when so many western people are thinking of the East as a good place in which to live and earn a living, it is rather important that this State point out how their notions are founded on fact.—News, Buffalo.

BIG BROTHERS SAVING BAD BOYS

Jewish Movement Having Great Influence on City's Juvenile Delinquents

New York.—More than three thousand bad boys of this city have been turned into respectable young citizens by the Jewish Big Brotherhood movement, according to Alexander H. Keminsky, general secretary of the organization. The Big Brothers, of whom there are 246, met recently for their fifth annual convention at Temple Emanu-El, Forty-third street and Fifth Avenue.

Those who are behind the Jewish Big Brotherhood movement are Mortimer L. Schiff, Felix M. Warburg, Cyrus L. Sulzberger and Justice Samuel Greenbaum. The organization was created in 1910 for the purpose of influencing boys just when they are about to go wrong. It has spread throughout this city and Brooklyn from an humble beginning on the East Side.

Children are referred to the organization by juvenile courts, public school officials, parents and others immediately interested in their reform. "We try to connect each of these children with a young man of character in the immediate neighborhood," said Mr. Kaminsky. "This young man acts the part of a big brother toward the boy, and by his interest and example we hope to have the delinquent unconsciously try to come up to a high standard of behavior. We have been successful in three thousand cases.

The big brother calls on the boy in his home, on the theory that one can't enter into real sympathy with the youngster until he knows the life he lives and the air he breathes. Another suggestion is to attempt to get the little brother who is not at school or at work back in school.

"Invite him to call at your office or home," Mr. Kaminsky instructed the Big Brothers. "Make him feel he is welcome. He must understand something of your life if you wish him to look on you as a brother. If he loves music or likes mechanical work, encourage his interest and find a chance for him to develop it. In summer try to place him in some settlement camp Do not give financial aid. Do not patronize. Above all, remember that you are a Big Brother, that you were once a boy and be patient. Your boy is not yet a man; it's your task to make him one."

APPROVE $14,000 INCREASE IN HIGHWAY APPROPRIATION

Taxpayers at Special Election in Oswego Vote in Favor by Large Count

Oswego, Feb. 25.—An increase of $14.000 in the highway fund of the Department of Public Works was authorized by the taxpayers at a special election yesterday. A total of 428 votes was cast of which 277 were for the proposition and 151 against. There were no void ballots.

The results of the election indicate little interest was manifested. The number of women that voted was exceedingly small as compared with other special elections.

The highway fund for many years has been $21,000 and the increase authorized today brings it up $35,000. Commissioner of Public Works C. W. Linsley in asking for the increase pointed out many street were in need of improvement and to properly carry on the work additional funds was necessarry.

BILLS ON PREVENTION OF DISEASE ARE DISCUSSED

Bills dealing with tuberculosis are now being considered in 32 state legislatures, accordng ito an announcement made today by The National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis.

In six States, Alabama, Arizona, California, Iowa, Tennessee and Washington, bills are being considered which call for the reporting and registration of all living cases of tuberculosis. Alabama, Connecticut, Iowa, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia are working for laws which will require that consumptives who refuse to observe sanitary regulations and are a menace to others may be removed and detained in hospitals. In Alabama, Arizona, California, Illinois, Maine and Missouri, legislation permitting the establishment of county or local hospitals for tuberculosis are being discussed, and in California, Illinois, Iowa, Maine, Missouri and New Hampshire state subsidies of $3 to $5 per week per patient are being asked for such institutions. In Indiana and Alabama bills providing for full-time county and city health officers are being considered.

As an aid in furthering these and similar bills, the National Association has issued a pamphlet entitled "Tuberculosis Legislation," which contains a digest of existing laws in this field with comments an comparisons of some of the most important ones.

FEDERAL LEAGUE MEET IN BUFFALO

President Gilmore Promises Good Things for the Seceeders of Baseball

Buffalo, Feb. 26.—Almost every one holding an official position connected with the Federal league and its eight clubs answered the roll call today when the Federals went into session in a meeting that is the most importane ever held by the junior baseball organization.

President James A. Gilmore will pre side at the pow-wow which will last until tomorrow evening.

In additional to all the league officials the club presidents, secretaries and business managers, there were also present at the Hotel Iroquois today seven of the eight managers and all the umpires.

"We are going over the baseball situation, as it concerns our league from beginning to ending," said President Gilmore, just before the officials went into session. "Every rule in our book will be discussed and it is likely that some new rules will be drafted and some of the old ones dropped.

"One of the main purposes of this meeting is to bring about a complete understanding between all the managers, presidents and other officials. I want harmony and the get-together spirit to be the keynote of our organization, and I believe that this meeting, at which all of us will get acquainted, will be of the very best benefit.

"Explicit instructions will be given to the managers to make the men play baseball this summer—and play it to the limit of their ability. Last year because of the uncertainty as to our future in some quarters, there was a disposition on the players to do a bit of loafing.

"There will be no loafing in the Federal league in 1915. Any attempt on the part of the player to give only part of his efforts will be dealt with severely. The men we have hired were hired for the purpose of playing baseball—of producing for the benefit of the fans the very best baseball exhibitions that are possible. Any man who shirks his duty in this respect must take the consequences.

"The Federal rules last year as regards the power of umpires, were not clearly defined. At the meeting here these rules will be amended so there will be no questioning the fact that a Federal league umpire is the real boss of the diamond." The meeting today also served as a means of welcoming Pat Powers into the magnates' fold. Powers is now the owner of the Federal league club in Newark, N. J.

KANSIS CITY GRANTED TEMPORARY INJUNCTION

It had been planned to transfer the Kansas City franchise to at Powers and Harry Sinclaire, who intended to operate it in Newarkr, N.J.

President Gilmore hinted before leaving that the league managers will overcome the present difficulty by transferring the Indianpolis club to the Newark promoters instead of the Kawfeds.

Hearing on the application to make the injunction permanent was set by Judge Baldwin for March 5.

By John C. Foster

Announcement was made today that no person can leave England for Holland without first securing a permit at the Home office. To get such a permit all applicants must give satisfactory proof of their purpose and furnish references.

Reported Arrival In Irish Sea of Submarines Basis of Admiralty's Latest Alarm

By Herbert Temple

London, Feb. 26.—Successful operations of German submarines in British waters have resulted in the issuance of secret orders for all trans-Atlantic liners to remain in port until further notice, according to reliable information secured here today. This news caused a sensation in maritime circles when it became known.

Officials refused to comment on the order and the admiralty maintained its customary reticence, but reports are in circulation that the British naval authorities have secured information that a fleet of submarines has succeeded in reaching the Irish sea and is lying in wait for the big liners.

Pending revocation of the order no Americans can leave for the United States from English ports. Those wishing to return to America can do so only by going to France and if they do this they risk their lives in the English channel.

ALLIED NAVIES MAKE HEADWAY AT GATEWAY TO TURKISH CAPITAL

By Herbert Temple

London, Feb. 26.—"On to Constantinople," is the slogan of the British naval experts today, as a result of the official announcement made by the admiralty late last night that the outer forts of the Dardanelles had been reduced by the Anglo-French fleet. They admit, however, that the allied fleet still fears a most formidable task.

The forts put out of action are two on the northern or European side of the Dardanelles and one on the Asiatic side. The rest of the Dardanelles is lined on both sides for a distance of about forty miles by other forts and defensive works. Mine fields have been laid by the Turks all along the Dardanelles and in the Sea of Marmora.

It probably will take several months for the French and British warships to force the entire passage of the Dardanelles, but naval experts in London declare that the opening success of the warships presages the capture of Constantinople.

All the London papers devote columns to the Dardanelles situation and give high praise to the work of the Frrench as well as the British warships. Rejoicing is general.

The outer Dardanelles forts fell under the concentrated fire of eight battleships, five of the British and three French, all under the command of Vive Admiral Carden. His flagship is the battleship Inflexible and the other battleships of Britain are the Agamemnon, Cornwallis, Vengeance and Triumph. The French battleships are the Gaulois, Suffern and Bauvet.

The battleships are accompanied by a strong force of cruisers, torpedoboats, and destroyers, as well as a number of submarines which will be used for the removal of great chain cables that the Turks have stretched across theh entrance to the Dardanelles.

VON HINDENBURG KEEPS MEN MOVING TO FRONT

By Francis Lavelle Murray

Petrograd, Feb. 26.—By another rapid shift of his troops, Field Marshal Von Hindenburg has massed a German army believed to number at least 350,000 men on the front between the Bobr and Vistula rivers and is making desperate attacks in an attempt to cut through the Russians there before the newly assumed offensive of Grand Duke Nicholas' troops west of Warsaw compels the retreat of the weakened German army there.

It was admitted here today that the Germans had made some gains at Przasnysz, but their mass attacks upon the Russian positions cost them dearly. East of Przasnysz the Germans attempted to cross the river Orzyo at Krasnosielec, but they were mowed down by the Russian artillery on the east bank. The German objective in this region is Ostroleka, a fortfess on the Narew river.

Northeast of Ostroleka the Germans are maintaining their attempts to approach Ossowiec and bring their heavy artillery to bear upon that fortress. This has resulted in desperate hand to hand fighting in Szczuczyn, Plochowo, Wasosz and Bialoszewo. These towns have been practically destroyed.

The battles in the Carpathians continue without any decisive result. The number of prisoners taken by the Russians has been increased to more than 60,000.

AUSTRIAN MINE SENDS FRENCH CRUISER DOWN

Paris, Feb. 26.—Official announcement was made here today that the French destroyer Dague, a vessel of 720 tons, was sunk by an Austrian min in the Montenegrin port of Antizar Wednesday night. Thirty-eight men went down with the Dague. The following statement was issued at the Marine office today:

"The French torpedo boat Dague while convoying provisions for Montenegrins struck a mine in the port of Antizari at 9.30 o'clock Wednesday night and sank, thirty-eight of hher crew disappeared with her. The accident did not prevent the successful termination of the provisional expedition.

"The marine minister reports that the French cruiser Desaix made a demonstration at Akaba on Tuesday, supported by the guns of the ships, disbursed and pursued a small Turkish force occupying the village."

ELECTROCUTED 3 MURDERERS

Ossining, N.Y., Feb. 26.—In a triple execution in Sing Sing prison three slayers of women were put to death in the electric chair today. The three men who paid the penalty for murder were Robert Kane, Oscar Vogt and Vinzeno Campanelli. Only 27 minutes and 10 seconds were consumed in putting the men to death. They marched ito the chamber with heads erect and without faltering.

Kane was the first to go because of his weakness physically. He was strapped into the death chair at 5.56.20 and pronounced dead seven minutes later. Three contacts were used, the first of one minute's duration and the second and third of ten seconds each.

Vogt followed four minutes later and died after three contacts of one minute, fifteen and ten seconds respectively. Campanelli was last, also receiving the contacts of a minute, ten and five seconds each.

In each case a current of 1800 volts with an amperage of 7½ to 9 was used.

Vogt, of sturdier and more powerful build than the others, died hardest, while Campanelli, selected to go last because of his remarkable stoicism, died them ost quickly.

Warden Thomas Mott Osborne was not present when the men were put to death, because of his aversion to capital punishment. The executions were in charge of Assistant Warden Johnson.

It is said before the three men met death they signed an appeal which will be made public in the fight to be made at Albany to do away with capital pnuishment.

Vogt, 40 years old, formerly a soldier in the Swiss army, murdered Miss Agnes Guth, a milliner, in New York, in 1913.

Campanelli, 38 years old, murdered his wife in New York in August, 1913, because on his return from Atlanta prison where he served a term for counterfeiting he found her living with another man. Only two weeks ago his little daughter tearfully begged District Attorney Perkins of New York to save her father's life.

Kane, 30 years old, killed Mrs. Anna Kleine at her home in Williamsburg. The shooting grew out of a love affair.

FUN RAYS

By Ray L. Hoffman

HOME.

I've got an idea in my dome that there's no place like home, sweet home; be it a shanty old, a gilded palace or a shack—you're always glad to shinny back, I venture to make bold. Though, like the prodigal, you may decide to wander far away and live a life of glee, you'll be glad to turn your craft, reverse your prow and sail right back (this tip, pal, take from me). Where can you find such snow white spreads, such soft and downy feather beds—where else, friend as at home? You'll never get such grub to eat, such turnips, corn and well cooked meat, no matter where you roam. You do about just as you please; you lay around in happy ease, and pay a meagre board. If you're a little shy on dough, it's not a case of "pay, or go"—to this you will accord. When you consider how they sting you for a half done chicken wing, a cutlet or a steak; when you begin to realise that you're not eating home-made pies, the kind "ma used to make," then you'll begin to love your home; you'll never want to stray or roam—you'll want to stick like glue. There's nothing that you can compare with good grub and that homey air—I'm handing it to you. And then the freedom you enjoy; the little things that bringeth joy; that easy rocking chair. It's soup to nuts you can't produce a place that equals home—no use! What can with home compare?

Opinions

Erasmus

Erasmus wrote the "Praise of Follies." If he had only lived several hundred years later he could have included in this satirical work praise for the 300,000 illiterate men and women who ordinarily come to the United States severy year, and thus immitate the people who think that their coming is a fine thing for the country. But Erasmus believed very much in enlightenment. He was optimistic in its triumph.

Erasmus was a humanist. In his day they called him the German Socrates. They felt that he was the personal embodiment of the humanistic ideals. These ideals were the forerunner of modern scientific treatment. Humanism strove for reasonableness and worked for the enlightenment of humanity. To him reason was "a queen, a divine councilor."

Erasmus had some advanced ideas. He had an enthusiasm for peace and in this book on the education of a prince, he proposed an international tribunal for the settlement of disputes. He thought luxuries should be taxed, but the Penroses of his day thought that such a tax was an imposition and no doubt, thought it a tax of thrift, just as some folks regard our taxes on incomes. This giant of the humanistic movement in Northern Europe also urged the necessity of higher education for women. There were some people who thought such a notion was crazy. Erasmus, however, stuck to it.

Although Erasmus believed in the triumph of the intellect, he thought the whole world quite a farce. That hows how sympathetic the 20th century may be with the 16th. He thought that the few enlightened would get the best of the solid masses, and that question is still open to dispute.—Observer, Utica.

The Piutes

The trouble with the Piutes in Utah, which has precipitated the first armed hostility between white men and Indians in this country in over 20 years, was caused by the indictment for murder found against Hatch, a son of Chief Old Polk. The arrest of the murderer was resisted, and the chief and his son with about 175 followers in the camp at Bluff armed themselves. A posse of deputy United States marshals was despatched to round them up. A fight took place, in which a white man was killed and another wounded, while five Indians were killed and more wounded. Reinforcements for the posse were then ordered to the scene and soon it is probable that the uprising will be put down.

According to the experts who, at great expense to Uncle Sam, study our North American Indians, the Piutes are not bad Indians. They are found to be peaceable, moral and industrious. While apparently not so bright in intellect as the prairie tribes, they appear to possess more solidity of character. By their willingness and efficiency as workers they have made themselves necessary to the white farmers, and have been enabled to supply themselves with good clothing and many of the comforts of life; while on the other hand they have steadily resisted the vices of civilization, so that they are spoken of by one agent as presenting the singular anomaly of "improvement by contact with the whites." Also, according to the Bureau of Ethnology Handbook, "they are annually increasing in numbers, and are strong, healthy, active people." There are about 600 of these Piutes in Utah perrhaps 7,000 in all the arid Southwest. They are a branch of the Shoshones.

It is a grave pity that a majority of the able-bodied Piutes in Utah should be defying inevitable fate, in arms against the United States. If the blundering of any Government officials is responsible for this situation, the Washington administration should uncover all the facts. Justice, sympathetic justice, is what we owe to the North American Indians as wards of the Nation.—Herald-Dispatch.

REAL ALTRUISM

Why do the eyes of the east so often turn toward the west? New and bristling with life and a tendency to push ahead, we are constantly given a sample of the altruism of our western neighbor. The following is an illustration of the big brotherhood existent between big bodies, the main bodies of a community:

At a recent meeting of the Denver Chamber of Commerce a signal feature was the discussion of possibilities of co-operation between the churches and the Chamber of Commerce. It may be remarked that the precaution was taken of announcing in the invitations that no request for money would be made at the meeting. Both men and women attended, and the broad spirit of the occasion was shown by the fact that all religious denominations—Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish—were represented. Among the speakers were several clergymen, who asked for greater unselfishness in the citizen's relation to the community. The church, it was said, should assist by fostering this spirit, while the Chamber rof Commerce would give practical aid in placing the down-and-out man upon his feet. The following words of the prophet—who spoke to the point, even though not recorded as belonging to a chamber of commerce—were aptly quoted: "Seek ye the welfare of the city in which you dwell, and pray in its behalf, for in its welfare shall you fare well." The part of the church, according to one of the speakers, is to furnish impulse and inspiration. The Chamber of Commerce should eagerly co-operate, and the net result will be a city rich in moral and material resources.

One speaker, referring to co-operation as the keynote of the age, suggested practical methods of mutual aid between the church and the commercial organization. He proposed that the church and the Chamber of Commerce co-operate in assisting newcomers to establish themselves in satisfactory business relations, that the two organizations work together in making the foundations of all business increasingly just and equitable, and in bringing about conditions that will give every man a fair chance. It was suggested that the commercial organization might learn from the church a broader spirit of friendliness and fair play, while the church acknowledged itself eligible to receive instruction in practical business methods.

This discussion was held at the suggestion of members of the clergy, whose good sense in attaching themselves to a live commercial organization offers a suggestion for the churches of some other cities.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardose Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, Feb. 26.—Believing that many of the highway bridges of the State are unsafe because they have been constantly subjected to usage which calls for a far greater strain upon them than was intended when they were constructed, Assemblyman C. O. Pratt of Washington county has taken upon himself to see to it that new bridges are substituted.

Assemblyman Pratt stands firmly behind a resolution he has just introduced and regards the document as the first step toward the culmination of his attempt to safeguard the travelling public who patronize auto trucks and in fact all who have occasion to go over highway bridges located outside of cities. The resolution in question calls for an appropriation of $6,000 for the purpose of defraying the expenses of a legislative joint committee of eight which is to investigate the conditions of these structures.

"My resolution is a most important one," said Assemblyman Pratt. "Many of the bridges which are now being used are not capable of long sustaining the enormous weights which pass over them. Some of the bridges were put up as far back as 1905 and their capacity was estimated at that time as being able to sustain four or five tons. Since that time auto trucks and busses carrying many tons have come into use greatly to the detriment of the safety of the public who use these bridges."

What strengthens the contention of Assemblyman Pratt that the highway bridges which have been built ten years ago, and even those constructed of later dates, are unsafe, is the fact that more than one have crashed down to destruction as the result of being taxed too heavily. In his annual report for 1914, the State commissioner of highways recommended that an act of the legislature be passed forbidding the hauling of more than fourteen tons over any of the highway bridges of the State which were located outside of cities. His request was significant in that many of the bridges over which heavily laden vans, auto trucks, steam rollers used for good road works and farm machinery now pass were not constructed to bear any such weight.

Assemblyman Pratt cites as an incident of the menace to life the average highway bridge erected ten years ago presents, the fact that members of his own family narrowly escaped injury and perhaps death while rirding on an auto bus which was loaded to its capacity and which all but crashed through a bridge of small resisting power.

"There was a bridge which went down near Schuylerville between Washington and Schuyler counties," says Assemblyman Pratt. "I know there are other records available which show that there are many highway bridges which should be immediately rebuilt. The bridges within the limits of cities are always stronger as heavy traffic has been anticipated in every instance. This is not true of the outlying bridges some of which were at one time toll bridges and have been standing for many years.

Speaker T. C. Sweet of the assembly stands with Assemblyman Pratt as regards the necessity of legislation to erect or reinforce the highway bridges of the State which are incapable of sustaining the fourteen ton test to which some may be subjected in accordance with the contention of the State highway department that "not more than fourteen tons" should be carried over them.

The reorganized highway department has not objected to the presentation of the Pratt resolution and has offered to assist the contemplated legislative committee with any data it may require.

OSWEGO TEAM WINS BASKET BALL SERIES

The Oswego basketball team won the championship series at Duluth, Minn., last Saturday night, defeating Fond Du Lac by a score of 24 to 7, in the third and final game. This result ought to make Oswego proud of the team that has borne the name of the Starch City throughout the West and made it possible for championship honors to come here. Manager Joe Basloe tells all about the wonderful victory in a characteristic letter to the sporting editor of the Oswego Times.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY DEPARTMENT

A Department Conducted to Meet the Demands of the Alert Home-Makers who Number Among our Readers.

EASTMAN GRAMS

Always use water or sweet milk where cream of tartar is used.

Good judgment and brains must be mixed with every cake well made.

Never stir milk into the creamed butter and eggs without the flour.

Never use wine and brandies in baking and cooking.

Remember, always use two portions of cream of tartar to one of soda.

Always use the proper tools in your kitchen.

Always use the best material for cooking.

With the price of wheat and flour soaring daily, the thrifty housewife is turning to other foods not so high in price and yet possessing the same nutritive qualities. Foremost among these is cornmeal.

Polenta

Polenta is an Italian dish, which may be varied in many ways. Sometimes cheese is added during the cooking, or it may be served with sauces.

One cup cornmeal, one teaspoonful of salt and three and one-half cupfuls of water. Put all ingredients into a double boiler and cook for four hours.

The following sauces are served with polenta:

Tomato Sauce

Two tablespoonfuls of butter, two tablespoonfuls of flour, one cup thick strained tomato juice, salt and pepper.

Melt the butter, cook the flour thoroughly in it, add the fomato juice and seasonings and cook until smooth, stirring constantly.

Savory Sauce

Take two ounces of salt pork, bacon or sausage. Cut into small pieces. Heat until crisp. In the fat which fries out of the meat cook a small amount of finely chopped onion and a red or green pepper. Add one cupful of thick tomato juice and cook until it thickens. Season with salt, capers or finely chopped pickle and pour over the polenta.

Roast Pork with Batter Pudding

Roast a loin of pork in the usual manner and serve with the following batter pudding: One-fourth cupful of cornmeal, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one cupful of milk and three eggs.

Place the milk, cornmeal and salt in the top of a double boiler and cook about ten minutes. After the mixture has cooled add the eggs, well beaten. Grease gem tins thoroughly and add the pudding. Bake in a moderate oven and baste with drippings from the roast pork.

Cornmeal Fish Balls

Two cupfuls of cold polenta, one cupful of shredded codfish one egg and one and one-half tablespoonfuls of butter.

Wash and soak the codfish to remove excess of salt. Combine the ingredients and drop by spoonfuls into hot fat. Drain on brown paper and serve.

Chicken and Cornmeal Croquettes

One cupful of cold polenta, a few drops of onion juice, salt and pepper, one cupful of chopped chicken and one egg.

Combine the ingredients. Make into pyramid shapes and fry in hot fat. Drain and serve. In making croquettes with cornmeal it is not necessary to roll them in egg and bred crumbs, as the meal will form a delicious golden brown crust when cooked in deep fat.

Meat from half a broiled chicken, one clove of garlic or half an onion, one-quarter teaspoonful of cayenne, one cupful of cornmeal, one teaspoonful of salt and two small red peppers.

Chop the chicken; season with the cayenne pepper, garlic or onion, finely chopped, and salt. Form the meat into little rolls about two inches long. Pour boiling water over the meal and stir. Use water enough to make a thick paste. Take a tablespoonful of the paste, pat it out flat and wrap a roll of chicken in it. Bake in a hot oven until a delicate brown and serve piping hot.

Beaten Cornbread

Three-quarters of a cupful of white cornmeal, one teaspoonful of sugar, one tablespoonful of lard three-quarters of a cupful of wheat flour and one-half teaspoonful of salt.

Mix and sift the dry ingredients and rub the lard thoroughly into the mixture by means of a fork. Add a little water, enough to moisten the mixture. Spread on a board and beat thoroughly with the rolling pin, folding it over frequently to introrduce air. Roll out about one-half inch thick, cut into small pieces and bake in a moderate oven.

Corn Muffins with Dates

One cupful of white corn meal, one teaspoonful of salt, one and one-quarter cupfuls of milk, four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half cupful of dates cut into small pieces, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one cupful of wheat flour, one egg.

Cook together the first five ingredients for ten minutes in a double boiler. When cool add the eggs, the dates and the flour sifted with the baking powder. Beat thoroughly and bake in muffin pans in a quick oven.

Ask for new prices on auto tires, also Ford supplies, including new style radiators, demountable rim wheels, slip covers, hand horns, speedometers, non-skid tires, chains. We will have a larger stock of oils, cements, patchers, tire guagers, etc., than ever. Van Wagenen, Inc.

AFTER DEATH—JUDGMENT

BILLY SUNDAY SERMON

Philadelphia.—Billy Sunday's sermon yesterday afternoon and evening was on the topic, "After death, judgment." He said:

Text: Hebrew ix. 27.—"And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this, the judgment.

I have chosen a text which every man here this afternoon will believe at least in part. Some may say, "I can't believe in Jesus Christ. I can't believe in the Bible. I can't believe in eternal life." Yet there is not one among you who will not agree with at least the first part of my text.

It is appointed to all men once to die. You believe that, don't you? You all agree that "it is appointed to all men once to die." You'll all accept that.

But my text adds, "And after death, the judgment."

If you admit the first proposition of the text, how can you have the audacity to repect the last part? By every rule of reason or logic, when you admit one part you must admit all.

Some men have been startled when the judgment has been mentioned. I know there are thousands of men in Philadelphia, hundreds of them here now, who, if they'd die today, would be lost. Not because they don't know, but because they put off accepting Christ.

If I could only make you realize what a risk you're taking, what a change there'd be! No man would put if off if he'd only realize. Some of you men here have been set to thinking in these past weeks. You have heard many sermons, but you are still outside the pale of God's mercy.

If I should say to you that a quarter after 2 o'clock tomorrow you would be in your coffin, you wouldn't sleep tonight. You'd be getting ready to meet the God you have forgotten, spurned and repudiated.

You would send for the preacher and you would try to prepare yourself to face God in judgment.

If I could tell you that this is the last week of your life, and that on next Sunday you would be a corpse, you would not think about business, you wouldn't worry whether bonds or stocks went up or down, you wouldn't care about politics, but you would think about your soul and you'd get ready to meet the God you have damned and defied.

You can't prove that this isn't your last day on earth.

Up in Canada there is a railroad which hangs red lights on one side of the track when all is safe, and on the other side when there is danger. For some of you the light is still on the side of danger. I hope I can say something that will show you the peril in which you stand.

Up to Every Man to Settle Question.

What a change there would be in your next life if you only accepted all of this text!

We have the words of Jesus that all those who believe in Him shall come into everlasting life with Him and that for them there shall be no judgment. We have this assurance of Paul that there is no judgment for those who are followers of Christ.

Whether you're a Christian or not a Christian, you'll all be there.

But I'm not worried about this judgment for myself. The Christian will not be there to be judged, but to receive the reward for his righteousness. The sinner will be judged.

Never in my life has my heart gone out to men as it has gone out to them in Philadelphia. Never more than now have I prayed for them. I have prayed that thousands of people shall come down these aisles and give me the honor of taking them by the hand in the name of Jesus Christ.

I am not concerned for myself, but for you. I have worked here as if my own salvation depended upon it. I couldn't have worked harder if it had. I am tired, so tired I sometimes feel that I'll fall into bed and not get up.

I have special reasons for choosing this text today. It's a personal question. It raises a question for you. You must settle it for yourself, and you must settle the question of accepting Jesus Christ for yourself.

If it were left to me to settle it, every man here would instantly take his stand on the side of God. But I can not settle it for you. Even God Almighty can't save a soul against the individual's will.

Two Women Who Would Die for Him.

I suppose that some of you men have people in the world who love you well enough to die for you.

I have—two, anyway. I know that Mrs. Sunday and my mother would.

But, no matter how dearly those near to you may love you, they cannot help you in the judgment. You must stand alone. You may have plenty of congenial associates in the club or the lodge of the church, but in judgment they can do nothing for you. You must stand alone.

When a man advises you to refuse to be a Christian, look the miserable cur in the face and say, "If I do, will you stand in my place in judgment?"

You may have read the story. Down in New York was a woman who said to her drunken son, "Let's go down to the police court and have the judge send you over to the island for a few weeks. Maybe you'll straighten up then and I can have some respect for you again."

Down they went to the police court and appeared before the judge. He asked who would make the charge and the mother sprang forward with the words on her lips. Then she stopped short, turned to her son and throwing her arms about his neck and cried out: "I can't, I can't. He's my son—I love him, and I can't." Then she fell at his feet dead.

As dearly as she had loved her drunken bloated loafing son she could not stand in the judgment.

Most men out of Jesus Christ are not honest. I don't mean that they lie and cheat and steal, but I do mean they're not honest about spiritual things.

They praise themselves for the belief to which they adhere when way down in their hearts they know they are not doing right.

If I were ill physically I'd see the best doctor I could find. If I had no desire to be a Christian, if I had no inclination to be right with the Almighty, I'd get right down on my knees and ask God to help me. There's no man I'd work harder to save than an honest skeptic, but I have no respect for the man who won't believe just because he doesn't.

I pray God that the words of my text will ring in your ears long after you've forgotten my face and long after the Tabernacle has been torn down; when I have gone to other States to preach the word of God. I pray that you'll hear them above the clash of hammers in your shops, above the din of exploding powder in the mines.

I pray that when you walk the streets the echo of your steps will cry, "The judgment! the judgment! the judgment!"

Religion isn't a matter of feeling or of emotion. It isn't doing just whatever you want to do. Suppose you worked for a firm, were given some orders to perform, then said: "I don't want to do it," You'd get your walking papers quick enough.

What God Will Say to the Hypocrites

You say there are hypocrites in the church. There are hypocrites in the church. There are hypocrites in the lodge, there are hypocrites everywhere But because some men are hypocrites is no reason why you should not do right.

There'll be no hypocrites in heaven. And if you want to get to heaven you'd better get into church with a few of them now.

On the day of judgment God will say to the hypocrite "Get over on the left there—your elevator will be going down in a few minutes.

I have every respect for an honest doubter. Some men are so constituted that they are naturally skeptical. Such a man can see the reasonableness of righteousness.

But I have no respect for the man who isn't honest about it.

When I was assistant secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in Chicago I had H. L. Hastings, who edited an anti-infidel paper, send me 3,500 copies of it. Bob Ingersoll was delivering three lectures in McVicker's Theatre, and I had these copies distributed to the people on the sidewalk as they went in or out.

The first night Ingersoll had a big audience. The next night it was smaller, and on the third night it had dwindled almost to nothing.

Every day at noon, while Ingersoll was lecturing, Hastings would go to old Farwell hall and answer Ingersoll's statements of the night before. One night Ingersoll painted one of those wonderful word pictures for which he was justly famous. He was a master of the use of words. Men and women would applaud and cheer and wave their hats and handkerchiefs and the waves of sound would rise and fall like great waves of the sea.

"MOVE ON" IS THE POST OFFICE MOTTO

Uncle Sam's Department in Our City Gives the Thought That the Spirit of the Time is to Move on

The safe and other equipment was transferred from the old, to the new Postoffice, yesterday by the Henry Transfer company.

The new federal building located at the corner of S. 1st and Broadway will be opened officially on Monday.

The new structure is a handsome building and a credit to the city of Fulton.

Contractor F. R. Pratt, who has had in charge the erection of the new building claims it to be one of the most complete, up-to-date post offices in the State of New York.

The entire interior is of modern design, handsomely decorated, and finished in oak and steel.

No doubt when the doors are opened to the public Monday morning at 8:00 o'clock a great many will gather to see how it seems to have an up-to-the-minute post office in our own city.

McCLOSKEY'S FESTIVAL CHORUS MEET SUNDAY

D. Byron McCloskey of Oswego is preparing to organize an auxiliary chorus that will participate in the great Syracuse musical festival May 10. The chorus will take part in the following numbers: Kermesse scene from Faust, Gounod; finals from act 1, Lohengrin, Wagner; Hymn to the Sun from Iris, Mascagni.

There is no financial obligation for the members of the chorus and a general invitation is extended to all singers who desire to participate that no ambitious singer may be deprived of the great benefits to be derived from this opportunity. Applications should be made at once at the rehearsals will start on Sunday afternoon at four o'clock and a full attendance is desired at that time.

Last spring Mr. McCloskey's company comprised about 60 voices, the possessors of which were greatly benefited as a result of the work.

New Freight Schedule

Many important changes and improvements in operating methods in the freight department of the Empire United Railways and associated lines, which have been under consideration for a long time, will become effective early next month. Among these is the operation of a fast electric freight service between Syracuse and Rochester and Oswego in trains of multiple cars.

For two weeks the company has been trying out intensive freight train operartions on the Syracuse-Oswego division with marked success, and this method of transporting merchandise will be followed on all lines of the system after Marrch 7th, when a new time table will be effective.

SHIPBUILDING BOOMS

Not For 20 Years Have American Yards Been As Full of Work As at Present.

New York, Feb. 26.—American shipyards are building more ships today than at any time in the last twenty years. Men contemplating the building of ocean freight craft are hesitating a bit on account of the pending federal ship bill, but, despite this drawback, there have been orders placed for fifty large vessels since December 1 last. As many as sixty vessels are in contemplation for construction in the near future.

The Standard Oil Companies head the list with orders for several tank steamships, three or four of them probably larger than any tank steamship ever constructed before.

These are being built at Newport News, where is also going up a ship for Crowell and Thurlow of Boston, another for the New York and Port Rico Steamship Company and still another for the Luckenbach Steamship Company.

The Texas Company is having a large oil boat built at Quincy, Mass. There is much activity also at Sparrows Point, Md., and Philadelphia and Wilmington, Del.

In the latter city Harlan & Hollingsworth are building a tank steamship for the Anglo-Saxon Petroleum Company of London, England. This order from Great Britain is an encouraging sign to friends of the American marine industry. It is presumed the vessel will be operated under the American flag in coastwise trade.

GERMAN FAILURES AT VERDUN WERE COSTLY

By Franklin P. Merrick

Paris, Feb. 26.—French troops have successfully checked all attempts of the Germans to invest Verdun. The Kaiser's troops were repulsed time and time again when they sought to drive a wedge through the valley separating the heights of Verdun frrom the slopes of the Meuse. Exploding mines, followed by intense artillery fire, drove the Germans from their trenches near the village of Eparges, and resulted in the French capturing that town.

Repeated German counter attacks and attempts to recover the positions they had lost were all repulsed.

This information was contained in a review of recent operations issued by the war office today. The statement says:

"The investment of Verdun has been continuously one of the objectives of the German general staff and toward this end, the most important means have been employed. They have attempted fruitlessly to drive a wedge through the valley that separates the heghts of Verdun from thhe slopes o fthe Meuse proper.

"The village of Eparges is extended to the eastward by a number of outlying houses which arer crossed by the first line trenches of the Germans. At the head of the valley the enemy organized a very strong position, which position consisted of a great redoubt, bastioned at each extremity west and east and additionally safeguarded by two lines of trenches.

"The village of Eparges is now in our hands. Saint Remy was seized by the Germans by a surprise attack. An advance on our part in this region menaced the position of the Germans in the forest and the mauntains and indirectly, also, their occupaiton of St. Mihiel.

"On February 17, in the morning, we exploded a number of mines fronting the German fortified position and smashed the glacis of the outer works. This afforded a first protection to our troops for an assault. But the assault was reserved until our artillery could open a way for the further approach of our forces. We directed a particularly intense artillery fire against the German works and obtained remarkable results. All the accessory defenses were destroyed. The rapidity and precison of our fire, at the same time, produced an impression of terror upon the enemy. An officer of the Eighth Bavarian regiment who was made prisonerr declared that he had been unable to prevent a panic among his men. Most of them, he said, took to flight. Nearly all those who did not fly were killed and when the French appeared with the bayonet and their artillery of smaller calibre, the remainder were madep risonerrs without difficulty.

"In the general assault of our troops, the first immediate objective was the western Bastion of the Germans works. Our men at first occupied the shelter provided by the explosion of the mines and then successively the first and second line of German trenches which were part of the defensive. The whole western bastion was captured by us by direct assault. This assault was in the nature of a surprise to the Germans and when we saw the effect produced upon the enemy we continued the assault immediately and were also successful in capturing a part of the a redoubt. Our gain represented some 500 yards of trenches besides the works in our hands and our losses were small.

"On the night of February 17-18, the enemy began a bombardment of the positions he had lost. On the 19th, in the morning, he attempted, but without success, to counter attack. In the afternoon, the bombardment was renewed, with redoubled intensity. The enemy concentrated the fire of several pieces of 210 and 150 MM on the point they had lost but the damage done was easily repaired.

SUPREME COURT MONDAY

The Calendar for March term of Supreme Court to be held in Oswego Monday, Justice Emerson presiding, holds 28 cases from Fulton out of a total of 77. Three of the actions arise out of alleged damages caused by flooding of cellars and basements during 1914 and later in the Waldhorn block.

Samuel Waldhorn, Andrew W. Stoneburgh and James Decker will ask for damages on account of street water reaching their basements from the street.

The Stoneburgh case has been on the calendar since Nov. 1911, and put over from time to time.

This action arises from the overflow of surface water upon Stoneburgh's property which is in the southern section of the city. Attorney Claude E. Guile represents Mr. Stoneburgh, while Hancock, Shriggs and Hancock, of Syracuse, represent Messrs. Waldhorn and Decker.

PRESIDENT'S ADVISERS REMAIN RETICENT

Washington, Feb. 26. — President Wilson and his cabinet today discussed theh action to be taken by this Government should the allies reject the proposals submitted by the Administration for mediation of the war zone problem. It was reported that possible steps in retaliation were taken up, but none of the official advisers of the President would give a hint as to what transpired at the meeting. They took the attitude that Great Britain had not yet indicated to this Government how she would receive the proposals and it would be imossible to discuss the situation in advance of such decision.

Village Wants Narrow Street

Williamstown has defeated a proposition to raise by taxation $3,000 for widening the highway through the village. There was a majority against the question of 14.

The State is to build a highway through the village as part of the State system and as the width is but sixteen feet the people of the village believed this would be far too narrow and advocated the bond issue for the proposed widening.

BUTTERFLIES ARE REPORTED

On the heels of the reports of young and lively grasshoppers in both Oswego town and Pulaski, comes another harbinger of spring, properly authenticated also. This time it is a large black butterfly, now the personal property of Charles Sivers of Fruit Valley. Mr. Sivers went out to his barn about 6 six o'clock this morning and noticed that his dog was acting peculiarly and seemed to be engaging in an earnest pursuit of something which was eventually cornered on an electric light wire leading into the barn. After a desperate struggle Mr. Sivers captured the intruder, which proved to be a particularly healthy and lively butterly. He now holds the insect in bondage to prove his statement. Moral—it's the early butterfly that gets caught.—Oswego Times.

FRENCH CRUISER ENTERS STRAIT GUARDED BY HEAVY KRUPP CANNON

Fleet Gets Within One Hundred Fifty Miles of Turkish Capital, Removing Many Floating Mines

News has reached Paris that the Anglo-French fleets have penetrated the Dardanelles to a point opposite the ruins of Dardneus, 14 miles from the entrance. The ports made a feeble effort to drive the ships but failed.

Three trains are being held under steam in Constantinople to convey the Sultan and officials into Asia Minor.

By Herbert Temple

London, Feb. 27.—Serious damage has been inflicted upon the inner Turkish forts guarding the Dardanelles by the international fleet of French and British warships, according to advices received today from Athens and Tenedos.

Thirty big men-of-war are hurling a tornado of shells against the Turkish works and so terrific is the cannonade that the thunder of the guns can be heard at the Island of Tenedos, 30 miles away.

In his official reports to the British admiralty Vice Admiral Sackville H. Carden reports that the allied fleet has made steady progress in its attacks upon the forts and that the work of reducing them is proceeding in a satisfactory manner.

The fact that a French cruiser has been able to enter the strait and sweep up some of the mines shows that the forts guarding the western entrance have been rendered practically helpless. The chief foorts wre Kum Kale, Helles Burnu, Yen Shehr and Sedd-el-Bahr. They were equipped with heavy Krupp guns but many of their cannon were outranged by the armaments on the fleet.

Two of the lighthouses north of Kum Kale were struck by shells and set on fire.

Even if it is true that the forts on both the European and Asiatic sides of the Dardanelles entrance were silenced and the fleet is able to enter the waterway, it is still a distance of 45 miles from the Sea of Marmora and it is still 100 miles from the Sea of Marmora to Constantinople. The entire waterway is lined with forts and thick with floating and submerged mines. Before the ships can approache Constantinople it would be necessary to sweep the strait free of mines.

Both sides of the Dardanelles are defended by new fortications which were built at the direction of German engineers. There is a continued line of these works at the narrowest point of the waterway—where the Dardanelles is only a mile wide.

The International fleet is equipped with aeroplanes which have done valuable work in recoinnoitering and range finding. The Turks have few, if any, high angle guns with which to attack the sky craft.

A number of German marines are fighting with the Turks. They are expert gunners and have been in charge of the big Krupps in the coast forts.

It is impossible to give an estimate of the Turkish losses, but they must have been heavy, owing to the accuracy of the fleet's fire. Some of the ships were struck by Turkish shells, but so far as known not a ship has been lost.

Berlin, by wireless, Feb. 27.—Renewal of the German drive against Verdin is announced in this afternoon's official report. It also tells of the capture of 11,000 more Russians in Poland. The Russians are apparently attempting a new offensive in Poland as their forces have suddenly appeared there. They have opened an attack along the Skorza river.

A Sensational Article from the pen of Edward Joslin appears in this issue of The Evening Times.

Mr. Joslin takes one of the big city churches for his subject and incidentally calls upon one of this city's pastors for a reply. Every reader in Fulton wants to read the article. Be sure and get a copy at the various newsstands, or at The Fulton Evening Times office.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, Feb. 27.—Another amendment to the Agricultural law has been prepared and is likely to be presanted to the law-makers in the very near future. The bill is backed by farmers and certain organizations affiliated with the State Grange and consequently is likely to be considered in a manner more than passing by the leaders.

There are several bills awaiting final disposition which affect the State department of agriculture. The most important thus far presented reorganized the State fair commission which has been closely identified with the agricultural department. The new bill changes the department of agriculture into a board of agriculture to consist of nine members all of whom shall be identified with agricultural conditions and who shall be appointed by the governor. Three of the proposed members of the board are to serve for one year, three for two and three for three years. The proposed board is to be non-partisan, not more than five members are to belong to the same political party.

The presiding officer of the board is to be a president who shall be elected by the members from among their number. There is also to be a secretary.

The peculiar part of the bill which has been already tentatively drafted, is the fact that it specifies that the nine members of the Agricultural Board shall serve without compensation, or if a salary is to go with the offices they are to be nominal, the minimum amount to be $250 and the maximum $500.

New Agricultural Bill

Practically the same jurisdiction is to be given the contemplated members of the Board of Agriculture as is now exercised by the commissioner of agriculture.

It is not known at this time who has been selected to introduce the new bill as those who are behind it are anxious to ake it certain that the measure will pass before any additional information is given out. As a matter of fact, responsibility for it was not even admitted officially by those behind it.

There is more than a ripple of turmoil in State agricultural circles at the present time which may be the reason why so little other than the text of the contemplated bill can be obtained. The resignation of Calvin J. Huson as State commissioner of highways is expected any day and there are a number of candidates for the place. Raymond A. Pearson, State commissioner of agriculture under Charles E. Hughes, former Assemblyman C. Fred Boshart and others are mentioned as having been substantially endorsed.

It is said that the investigation recently made by State Comptroller Eugene A. Travis into the State department of agriculture, has convinced farmers generally that their interests have not been more than pasers and that now that this fact has been exploited, or partially exploited, it is time to see to it that this condition shall no longer continue.

Whether there is real truth or no sively taken care of under the present system of administering the Agricultural law. It is also said that politics has played too great a part in the department to advance the cause of farm foundation for the rumor that the farmers have been aroused and are intent upon amending the agricultural law, the fact exists, however, that agricultural matters have occupied more legislative attention this session than in many years.

SOOTHING DYING MOMENTS OF A GERMAN SOLDIER.

"THE FIGHTING SPIRIT OF THE BRITISH"—AN INCIDENT ON THE BATTLEFIELD.
COPYRIGHT N. Y. HERALD FROM THE SPHERE.

Concerning this incident, drawn especially for this newspaper, the New York Herald and the London Sphere, a British soldier at the front in a letter says:—"I stopped for a few seconds by the side of a German who was dying. He was in great pain, and when I asked what I could do for him he said in a pathetic tone that went to my heart, 'Nothing unless you would be so good as to hold my hand until all is over.' I gave him my hand and stayed to the end. It seemed to comfort that poor chap a lot. He was able to speak good English, and we had quite a pleasant chat, considering the circumstances. He thought the war would last another year at least, but had no doubt that his own country would be beaten in the end. 'Our people didn't make enough allowance for the fighting spirit of the

PACIFIC COAST RACES START

Starting Three Abreast the Riders Indicated They Would Tear Holes in Records

San Francisco, Feb. 27.—The Grand Prix automobile race was run over the Panama-Pacific course today. Thirty starters, the largest number ever entered in the big event were in radiness when Starter Wagner began sending them away, three abreast and at fifteen second intervals, at 10.30 o'clock.

Earl Cooper, driving a Stutz; G. E. Ruckstahl in a Mercer and C. R. Newhouse, in a Delago, were in the first three racers to leave the starting line. With the crack of Starter Wagner's pistol they began their wild ride around the four mile course. Fifteen second later the starter's pistol cracked again and three other cars tore down the course at an 80 mile clip. In this second section were W. E. Taylor, driving an Alco; Caleb Bragg, driving a Californian, and Grover C. Bergdoll in an Erwin Special.

Then, in groups of three, followed in order, Jim Parsons, in a Parson's Special; Ivan R. THE COUNTRY STORE

WANT to know who'll win the war? Go to Cornseed's country store. It's the greatest view exchange east of the old Rocky range. Village fathers gather there, from Pop Green to Deacon Blair. And they talk with zest and ire as they sit beside the fire. There's a flash in ev'ry eye as the talk runs loud and high. Ev'ry topic's on the slate from the war to fishing bait. Satan, I believe, would choke from the dense tobacco smoke. Doc Spriggs says the democrats have no brains beneath their hats. That's the spark that starts the flame. Up jump six with shouts of "Shame!" Then they argue loud and long—try to sift the right from wrong. Owner Cornseed spills the salt—said it was Cy Plantem's fault. Judson Martin burns his ear when he tries to prove that beer is more nourishing than tea—'course, the others won't agree. Ben Spanks says the time's remote when the women folk will vote. Pop Green says they ought to now. Then that starts another row. Oh, they talk from morn till late! Life is just one long debate. Durn it! It would be just grand if these fellows ruled our land. Ev'rything would be O. K. from Cape Cod to San José. Ev'rything would be just fine from St. Paul to Brandywine. Wilson sure would get a tip if he'd pack his leather grip, steal away from Washington—go to Oatville on the run. Hunt up the old country store—listen to advice galore. Ev'ryone would do his share, from Pop Green to Deacon Blair. Country stores win in a walk when it comes to slinging talk.

Running Into Danger

Senator Argetsinger's election law contains so much that is good that it is regretted it also contains provisions which are regarded as strengthening organization and taking a step backward. As a matter of fact the present law is more favorable to organization than any law ever upon the statute books. It is also true that the masses do not like all the bother and trouble from petitions through the list. But there has been no serious complaint excepting from candidates. It isn't good politics to make easy the paths of candidates. It isn't good politics for the Republican party which went out of power in this state mainly because it opposed election and primary methods, which proved unpopular, to avail itself of the first opportunity upon return to power to upset what is termed progressive legislation. Already the theorists are shouting reaction and all the organization men cannot offset this charge, even though their cause has merit. There isn't anything to be made by running counter to the theorist. Let them become tired of the present law, that is its radical features, and the Argetsinger bill will be taken up by them as reform. In brief the Argetsinger bill accomplishes these things:

Restores the state conventions.

Provides for the designation of candidates by party committees, the state convention or petition.

Permits the use of party funds in primaries.

Substitutes for the Massachusetts ballot at the general election a hybrid party column ballot.

Puts forward primary day two weeks, making it the seventh Tuesday before the general election instead of the fifth.

Replaces the three superintendents of elections with one superintendent, and the three chief deputies by one chief deputy. In this provision $11,500 annually is saved.

Abolishes the limitation of 175 on the number of additional deputies to be appointed by the state superintendent of elections.

Provides for the registration by mail of traveling salesmen.

Provides for coterminous election and primary districts.

Eliminates the place of stay indefinition for residents.

Transfers from the secretary of state the duties of election printing to the state superintendent of elections.

Creates a school of instruction for inspectors and poll clerks, students to receive $1 for each session they attend.

Abolishes boards of elections except in New York city. Creates office of commissioner of elections in each county having cities of the first, second and third class. In other counties the duties of commission, where one is not appointed, may be performed by the county clerk.—Standard, Watertown.

DEARTH OF SKILLED LABOR

The dearth of skilled labor is daily becoming more and more apparent to each business concern searching for the efficiency person. The butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker are all in the same plight. Again and again the same conviction is forced home that the school is the vital spot to attack.

Theodore Roosevelt at one time said, "If boys and girls are trained merely in literary accomplishments, to the total exclusion of industrial, manual and technical training, the tendency is to unfit them for industrial work and to make them reluctant to go into it, or unfitted to do well if they do go into it."

This fact is painfully evident to the average employer. The greater number of high school graduates and many college graduates calmly upon graduation tuck their diplomas, or certificates under their arm, and walk forth with the assurance that the world in any path of business is ready to receive them. The mere fact that "graduate" is tacked to their name. Many a Greek scholar couldn't sell a palm leaf fan in August nor mend a broken window in December, yet would frown quite aptly upon a mortal were he to inquire as to the ability of this learned individual.

Adaptation and singleness of purpose is left out of the average individual's plan in an education. Now the world will always need its Greek scholars, but it too needs the efficient tinsmith, plumber, farmer or hod-carrier. If the Greek scholar would make a better hod-carrier, and the hod-carrier a better Greek scholar then let their places be filled correctly. Let the Greek scholar not feel that he has lost caste in the eyes of the world by doing the work he is really fitted for. Rather let him dignify Labor by doing that work which he is fitted to do—and do it exceedingly well. Let his greatest joy be not in the dollar earned, but instead feel the satisfaction that comes only from a task well done.

This is the opportunity of the vocational school. Every child given a real chance to find himself. Given the benefit of such early training, the odds at writing "Failure" over the door-post of middle age will be greater.

The manual training department in our school is the first step in this line in this community. Will it not be possible for Fulton to have a Technical High some day—not too far distant? Every good thing for this city, and any other city, cannot be hurried on, too quickly.

Good things, 'tis said, come slowly, but pushing hustles every load.

MITIGATE THE SUNDAY CHILL

The Association of Theatre Managers doubtless agreed with Mr. Bruere when he told them this was a "cold city" for strangers and seekers after harmless amusement on Sundays. It has been a cold city for them, too, when they sought to provide something in the way of theatrical entertainment other than "Sunday concerts." Yet Sunday is the great free day of the working folk—the day of days on which they want and need harmless recreation and amusement.

It would be a mighty good thing if, as the City Chamberlain suggested, there could be co-operation to alter this state of affairs. Several large cities of the country permit Sunday theatrical performances. It has not been noted that this contributes especially to moral degradation of the populace or of strangers within the gates. The same thing is true of Sunday baseball, which exists here only when played by amateur teams.

Obviously the day set apart for religious observance by a large proportion of the public should not become, by reason of amusements permitted, an offence to those engaged in religious services. To prevent that it is not necessary to maintain the existing rigidity regarding varieties of harmless pleasure the absence of which now sends many young people to worse places than theatres or baseball games in search of amusement.—Tribune, N. Y.

COLLEGE MEN AND POLITICS

President Hadley had in mind the student's profit rather than the country's good when he advised Yale men to shun politics until they had independent means. It goes without saying that for the man of initiative and energy politics is a poor field of endeavor. Commerce and the professions will better reward him. But if all college men capable of public service were to catch the dollar before entering politics, there would be a scarcity of good men in public life and those who came into the arena with independent means would have become unfitted to serve a republic which requires men of human nature, perhaps prone to weakness rather than those made arbitrary and impersonal in winning commercial success.

Politics is becoming a fine field for young college men. Public office is a good stepping stone. It isn't getting into politics which militates against the capable young man; it is staying in if he has exceptional ability. England draws public men from commerce, men who have won. But the American public wouldn't stand a day for the arbitrary rulings and the haughty treatment England gets from her administrators.—Standard, Watertown.

Food Supply vs. Wheat Speculation.

Timely and reassuring is the statemen submitted to President Wilson, by the Secretary of Agriculture, concerning the food supply of the United States. The figures issued by Secretary Houston show that the estimated wheat crop of the country in 1914, amounted to 891,000,000 bushels.

"The estimated surplus carried over from the 1913 crop was about 76,000,000 bushels. There was a total available supply of 900,000,000 bushels.

"The normal annual per capita consumption of wheat in the United States is about 5.5 bushels, 530,000,000 bushels should meet our normal domestic requirements for food; in addition 90,000,000 bushels are required annually for seeding; 610,000,000, therefore should supply the normal domestic demand. This would leave a surplus of 357,000,000 bushels. Of this surplus about 210,000,000 bushels were exported by January 30th. This left 147,000,000 bushels or 40,000,000 bushels more than our average annual export for the last five years, for export between February 1st and the appearance of the new crop, or for carrying over into the next crop year. This amount is sufficient to permit the export of nearly 1,000,000 bushels a day until July 1st, before which time the new crops will begin to be available. This is about the average recent exportation.

"As has been stated, the new American crop will begin to appear before July. The Argentine crop is now coming on the market.

"But suppose a shortage in wheat should develop in the next three months, what would be the situation? There is a great surplus in other food crops in the United States, a number of which can be used as substitutes. Wheat does not constitute more than twelve per cent. of the normal diet, about the same as poultry and eggs. Meat and dairy products constitute forty-eight per cent.; vegetables, eleven per cent.; fruits, nuts, sugar, fish, and other items the remaining nineteen per cent.

"It would seem the United States is not likely to be threatened with a shortage of food stuffs.'

bundance of food supply is as logical an argument as shortage against wheatpit gambling. With wheat plentiful there remains no pretext for creating artificial prices.—Times, Buffalo.

Lots of Talk; Little Action

England has been talking strong about what she is going to do to Germany in reprisal for the submarine blockade that country is maintaining against the British Isles. Thus far it has been all talk. While the Germans have been sinking merchantmen and the blowing up of neutral vessels by mines has caused a reign of terror to exist among shipping of all kinds, the English have done nothing but tell what they intend to do.

England is reputed to have the best navy in the world, at least one-third larger than that of Germany, yet it has been unable to check the activities of the German craft in the North Sea, and the submarines of the Kaiser are rooming about at will, getting in their deadly work.

So far the much vaunted British Navy has made the poorest kind of a showing, and if the English people begin to lose faith in its efficiency they can not be blamed. They certainly have a right to expect more from their naval fleet than has been accomplished during the seven months the war has been going on. —Palladium.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

Nevada is not, after all, to become again the home of easy divorce. The bill which passed the Assembly in spite of the protests of the new women voters failed to pass the Senate. It was expected to pass the Senate but the protests grew more and more vehement. Petitions poured in from all over the state. According to one of the persons who circulated the petition in Rome nearly all of the signers were women.

The story might have had a less happy ending if Nevada women had not possessed direct political influence.

The women of Wisconsin will not take "no" for an answer. In spite of the fact that woman suffrage was denied them by a substantial majority of the voters a few years ago they are still urging the Legislature to submit the question again.

Last winter a bill to make mothers equal guardians of their children failed to pass. The suffragists use this fact to quiet any legislator hardy enough to assert that "women do not need the vote to get protection from the Legislature."

Miss Annie Peck, the celebrated mountain climber, has joined the Congressional Union for Woman Suffrage. This is the organization that is working to secure the federal amendment. Miss Peck is so zealous a suffragist that she planted a suffrage flag on the peak of a Peruvian mountain 21,000 miles above sea level.

Dieticians assert that women do not need as much food as men. Now along comes Rosika Schwimmer, eminent Hungarian suffragist and pacifist, and declares that disfranchisement results in cutting down the ration of a cow belonging to a woman.

The case she cites is that of the school master in Switzerland who not only gets a larger salarry than a woman schoolteacher but fodder for his cow, which is one of the perquisites, is cut down, if the teacher happens to be a woman. Yet there are people who believe that the question of suffrage is superficial and not related to vital issues.

Chairman Frank Walsh of the Industrial Relations Commission is a keen suffragist and, as his work has taken him all over the western states where women vote, his advocacy is a veritable gibralter to the cause. He does not however expect the women to introduce the millenium. He is far too sone for that. He says

"I don't say that these women will make over conditions. Women are human beings just like men. Women will vote with their class and work for their interests just as men do." He predicts that the solidarity which women are learning in the suffrage movement and which he considers one of the biggest things in life will be turned into other channels when the vote is won, become, in fact, a great engine for progress.

Dr. Wiley, food expert, declares that women's organizations have always been on the right side of every public question, from which he inferrs that their votes would be cast in the same way.

EFFICIENCY PLANS FOR NEW YORK SCHOOLS

By Henrietta Rodman

I talked with Mr. Wirt yesterday, and I gained some respect for "big business." As I understand "b. b.," it is ordinarily the management of large affairs for the benefit of a few people, but Mr. Wirt is a big business man, who manages large affairs for the benefit of the whole community.

He has apparently all the practical efficiency of the manager of a great corporation, but his shareholders are the parents of the school children and not the owners of stock.

"There are twelve schools in The Bronx," said Mr. Wirt, "with 10,000 more children than there are seats. As a result, most of the children are on part time. If you build enough schools to house these children by the usual system they will cost nearly $3,000,000. But $1,000,000 spent in reorganizing these schools according to the Gary system will take care of these 10,000 children and 2,000 more, will give them each a full school day of six hours and an all around development. They will have plenty of outdoor play, and indoors they will not only spend more time on reading, writing and arithmetic than they do now, but they will also spend a part of their time in science laboratories, swimming pools and shops of all kinds.

"Our mistake was at first that we built our schools almost entirely of classrooms. Classrooms cost $200 a pupil. Do you realize that a child can have a fine time in forty square feet of playground? Except in the most congested parts of the city classrooms cost much more than playgrounds.

"Then we have had auditoriums and gymnasiums which were empty when the children were in their classrooms. Our idea is to have classrooms, auditoriums, gymnasiums, shops, studios, and playgrounds all fully occupied all of the time. In this way the children get a much richer education for less money."

Not all the advantages of Mr. Wirt's system—which, by the way, he never mentions as his—can be realized at ary schools can be made, and will be made, what we have always wanted for our children, but have not been wise enough to get. This is the greatest opportunity, I believe, that New York has ever had to get the best for the children.

FORWORD

BY
N. Y.

Are you waiting for providence to send you a fly? If you are, you'll get the—"happy go by." No lazy frogs in Fulton. You may sit on the bank, and bask in the sun; you may play at mud pies and think it is fun to be a green backed sultan. But time and eternity roll swiftly by. You'll slip down your rope and then you will cry—"Oh! give me some work to do." But the work will be done, and your life will be ended. You've fooled away chance, your ways you've not mended; and that life you cannot renew. The prophets of old were all busy men; they didn't spread out like an old setting hen, and cluckity-cluck at their tetters. They got into harness and went at their work. They preached loud their gospel—"Your duty don't shirk." And shed not a tear at their fetters. And now I am sure we'll put on the collar and draw with a will; we won't be a loller, and gap like a lazy frog. There is work here in Fulton for you and for me. If we open our eyes I'm sure we will see out over our own misty fog. We'll all stand by and boost our home town. There's plenty to do if we'll but look around. Let's clean house in earnest this spring. We'll take down the shutters and open the doors. We'll brush out the cobwebs and scrub off the floors and "Forward" our watchword we'll ring.

SHALL THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE BE DESTROYED?

EDWARD JOSLIN CALLS FOR A REPLY

Should every church society in the United States take the same action towards the Anti-Saloon League of America that the First M. E. church of this city, through its official board, has taken and should every individual member of all Christian churches follow the same course in withholding financial support as the undersigned has done, under the influence of my church and pastor, then surely the Anti-Saloon League would be destroyed, for without the aid and support of the Christian church it could not exist.

Since a certain resolution, passed by the official board of the First Methodist Church of Fulton, forbidding the Anti-Saloon League the use of its church, etc., is being circulated, presumably broadcast, throughout the land, printed in an anonymous publication, attacking the New York State Superintendent of the League and belittling temperance; since presumably the roster of the churchmembership of the entire State, if not the entire country, is being used to circulate the aforesaid resolution and its accompanying profanity, therefore the question; "Shall the Anti-Saloon League be destroyed?"

Save the Church

It is humilating to the undersigned who is a member of the atoresaid church and its official board, to see the fair name of the church, which Christ called "His bride," dragged through the mire of such slime as the anonymous publication proves to be. The fair name of my church is surely in bad company associated in print with such abuse and profanity. Though not knowing the names of the perpetrators of this infamy, the question has been asked, did the church give its sanction to the publication of this resolution? Now that this thing has become public to a country, wide degree will not some one make use of the columns of The Evening Times in defence of the action of the official board that the fair name of the church may be spared further humilation and inasmuch as severe criticism is being heaped upon the church by those who should love and respect her sacred tenets,will not Dr. Stockwell make use of the columns of The Times and answer the criticisms being heaped upon the church, as well as to advise the undersigned and others who are troubled in conscience and mind since we are withholding support from the said Anti-Saloon League.

Now, Dr. Stockwell, the issue seems to be as follows: If Wm. H. Anderson, New York State Superintendent of the League, is guilty of forgery, extravagance, misappropriation of funds, and the assassination of the character of Christian gentlemen, then the official board has not gone far enough in censuring the State Superintendent and forbidding the League the use of its church. The critics say the action of the board is cowardly; that if Anderson is guilty, he should be prosecuted and placed behind prison bars. Then too it is said, if Anderson is a crook our beloved Bishop Wilson and the board of directors of the League consisting of eminent doctors of divinity are figure heads and not worthy the positions they occupy in the councils of the league; also as heads of their several churches of the living Christ, over which they preside and serve.

Wants Truth

Now, Dr. Stockwell, for the information and guidance of those of your members who are suffering from troubled conscience, because we know not whether we are right or wrong in withdrawing support from what we once believed to be the greatest active temperance force in America; is it, or is it not true as has been said that the Anti-Saloon League is the church of Christ in action? Is it, or is it not true that our own Bishop Wilson is National President of the League, and Rev. Dr. Baker, former President of our Methodist Wesleyan College, general superintendent, together with our own Bishop Burt and the several eminent doctors of divinity, constituting the board of directors? Also, are not every one of the New York State district superintendents Christian ministers, men of character and renown? Are the names as published in the organ of the Anti-Saloon League as holding the offices ascribed to each true facts or are they false?

We want to know the true facts and if it is deception that Anderson is publishing, I will give considerable money towards an expose, and his prosecution, if guilty. But if Anderson is a notorious crook, how can it be that he can conceal his crookedness and still hold the position of superintendent, surrounded by the eminent bishops and doctors of divinity comprising the published directorate?

Now, Dr. Stockwell, I am publishing this article partially in your defense,to draw you into printo,that you may clear up the accusations against you, before you leave this pastorate. It grieves me to hear the insinuation that you dragged the church into dirty politics out of revenge, because of the Sweet incident. I did not hear the Sweet debate and know not whether Assemblyman Sweet was the candidate ofthe Christian church and the real temperance forces or not. It is not necessary to go over the Sweet charges and counter charges in print as the people probably know all that, but if the Anti-Saloon League is guilty of criminalty as insinuated, it is your duty to expose it publicly and stop the fraud and collection of funds from innocent people elsewhere. Also, your influence with our board of bishops should be such that you should be able to silence Anderson within twenty-four hours if he is guilty. If you possess the evidence, I, stand ready to assist in any legitimate prosecution not political. If you do possess the evidence, let us clear up this matter and stop the scandal which is injuring the church and the temperance cause.

As for yself, I am disgusted with the mud throwing and so-called fighting among the several temperance reform organizations. The publications of no less than three such reform organizations reach me through the mails weekly. Petty jealousies lest one shall collect more money than the other. It is commendable of the liquor dealers that they stand together and fight not among themselves. Lest any one should infer from this article that I charge the liquor dealers with the theft of our official board resolution, and its publication in that blasphemous, anonymous publication, I absolve the liquor dealers from having anything to do with the printing and circulating of that vile sheet. I give them credit for the possession of more brains and more honor than that of stooping to such a foul act. The cheap, unscrupulous politician is the greatest enemy of the Christian church and American institutions in this day and age.

The temperance men of Fulton were made a laughing stock of last winter. As will be remembered mass meetings were advertised, printed posters were scattered broadcast throughout the city and men did assemble, at least three times in one of the city churches. Resolutions were adopted without number, money was subscribed and two sets of delegates were sent to Albany to appear before the legislature in support of special temperance legislation and what did it amount to? The political leaders of the State's honorable body, probably had a good laugh behind the backs of the several accredited delegates. Tricked again and made a laughing stock of was all we got for our money and pains.

For my part I am ashamed of my pretensions as a temperance man and will no longer advertise myself as such. In conversation with a saloon keeper not long since, I stated to him that I was a temperance man. I owe that man an apology. There are eight churches in the city of Fulton and I am told thirty-two saloons. The churches hold what they call a revival four weeks during the year; the saloons carry on a revival every day and night during the year, except Sundays.

QUESTION: Which are making the most converts in Fulton, the eight churches or the thirty-two saloons?

Respectfully submitted,
EDWARD JOSLIN.

AN ITALIAN CHURCH

Communicants Expect to Hold First Mass Easter Sunday

At the largest gathering of Italians ever held in Oswego it was decided at a meeting at St. Louis' hall Thursday night to establish an Italiam parish in this city. Father Geremia of Syracuse made the principal address and said he would do all he could to help the people establish an Italian church in this city. A city with 2,250 Italian people should have a church in which to worship, Father Geremia said:

A committee with John Lapetino as chairman and composed of Angelo Peluso, Bartolo Famularo, Albert Damico, Joe Cosentino, Antonio Gilletto, Joe Paladino and Matthew Giovanni, was appointed to decide on a place in which services could be held. This committee is to meet at Angelo Peluso's store Monday evening, March 1, and report on what is being done. It is expected to hold the first service on Easter Sunday morning, conducted by Father Geremia, who is at present attached to St. Peter's churrch, Syracuse, where he has been for five years past.

The place best located for the purpose according to Chairman Lapetino is the hall over the Hennessey plumbing shop, formerly occupied by the Polish church, and if that place can be obtained it will be used for the present.—Times.

He rushed to the window and looking out saw a man,rather tall and poorly dressed, rushing away from the scene. Chief Potter restrained the dog and after a search of the house satisfied himself that nothing had been stolen. The man had not even gained an entrance.—Times.

SPRING WAVELETS

By A YACHTSMAN

Many people patiently wait during the long winter months for ground hog day and hope and pray that this little animal may not see its shadow; others sniff the atmosphere about this time to determine whether or not the skunk has aroused itself from its warm sleeping hole and ventured forth in search of food; some less superstitious consult the weather maps and take averages of previous years for their section of the country. But the only sure way to determine whether spring is here, or close by, is to stand one fine Sunday morning upon the lower bridge and look sharply down the raceway on the west side of the river and see if any of the boathouse doors are open, or the sound of scraping floats upward on the morning breeze.

Should these signs prevail Spring is either here or very very near, for as the barometer never fails to tell the coming of the storm, so does the pulse of each yachtsman quicken with the coming of Spring. His mind fills with pleasant anticipation as he wends his way down to the banks of the river to his boathouse and then begins with force and enthusiasm to overhaul his graceful launch for her spring plunge into the rushing waters of our spacious river.

This season will witness much activity among our yachtsmen. Last season the Fulton Yacht Club was successfully launched, its membership increased rapidly from a handful to almost 200. Every effort was made to procure a suitable clubhouse but it was determined to wait another season until the waterways were nearly completed before venturing on this step.

This summer we will find the locks at Fulton, Minetto and Oswego all completed, and in full operation, properly manned by men specially selected, ofter examination, for the responsible positions of lockmasters and assistants. The time for opening and closing all locks will be announced and the channel will be properly buoyed and marked. The 25 miles from Phoenix to Oswego will be navigable and those who are fortunate enough to own motor boats will have this beautiful stretch of water on which to spend their spare time in a healthful and restful sport.

The members of the yacht club have fully determined to have a clubhouse this year and each one is willing to contribute his mite, either in mechanical skill, or financial assistance, so that his hopes may be sure of realization.

Several new boats will, no doubt, be added to the fleet by about June 1st as the local boat builders have had many inquirirs for plans, prices, etc., from prospective buyers. Many of these inquiries were for the very latest models of speed craft, equipped with the best engines and all up-to-date appliances for comfort.

Commodore Parker of the Oswego Yacht Club has promised that just as soon as the locks are in operation the entire power fleet of his club will run from Oswego to Fulton, to visit the fleet of the Fulton Yacht Club and invite each member in true sailor fashion to partake of the hospitality of the new Oswego clubhouse on the lake, where the open door of welcome awaits each man.

Joe Barnum, the genial boniface of the Three River Point hotel, has already been in communication with Commodore Oliver with a view to arranging a visit to his pleasant resort, where a fish dinner and dance will be provided for all.

Congressman Mott has been trying to convince the government officials of the necessity of assigning a vessel to the port of Oswego for naval reserve practice and, should his efforts be successful, no doubt many members of the Fulton Yacht Club will join the movement for the marine education and naval training they may receive. This movement will be under the direction of one of the regular officers of the navy. Navigation, gunnery, signalling and the manual of arms will be taught during the summer cruise to be had on a government gunboat.

There are many other good things in store for the yachtsmen this summer, so it behooves each one to be prepared early this season so as to be able to take advantage of each one of the pleasures open to the lovers of this sport.

A TRUE YACHTSMAN.

"SANITO" COOKING UTENSILS

are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

"Never Touched Me," Said Edison.

The Mar. American Magazine contains an interesting editorial about Thomas A. Edison and a chronology of his life and achievements, prepared by William H. Meadowroft, who for thirty years has been one of Edison's chief associates. The article is accompanied by a remarkable photograph of Mr. Edison. This photograph was rescued from the thick of the fire which devastated the Edison plant in December. The frame wasc harred and the glass covering the photograph was cracked and blackened by the heat, but the picture itself remained unmarked. The great inventor, with characteristic humor, scribbled on the margin, "Never touched me." An extract from the editorial accompanying the chronology follows:

"On December 9th the huge manufacturing plant of Thomas A. Edison, situated on the Valley road, Orange, New Jersey, was visited by a devastating fire which devoured buildings, apparatus and supplies, whose value can, at the time of writing, only be loosely estimated.

"The inventor watched the fire with one thing uppermost in his mind. What do you suppose it was? What would you be thinking about under those circumstances, with the labor of years, and nearly all you own in the world, going up in ruin and loss?

"Thomas A. Edison was intently examining the fire-resisting qualities of reinforced concrete construction, so that hereafter such buildings may be truly fire proof.

"'There's a mighty expensive experiment,' he said, pointing to the blazing pile, 'But it's a good one. There will be a modilization around here tomorrow if that stuff cools off enough, and when those buildings go up again, they'll go up fire proof.'

"What an example! Especially in these times, when so many show the white feather and croak about hard times or bad luck or some kind of petty trouble or grievance! Here is the living incarnation of American spirit and courage. Not a thought of the past! Not a regret, except for the single life lost—one of his workmen who died doing his duty! Not a hint of complaint or discouragement, but every power of thought and will concentrated on what he was going to do next. 'I'm sixty-seven years old,' he said, 'but I'm none too old to take a fresh start tomorrow morning. Nobody is ever too old to take a fresh start.'

"Was there ever anything finer, more magnificent and truly American than this? Can the inspiration of such an example ever weaken? Can one ever forget it, or let it lose its power over us? We take this occasion to publish a chronology of Edison's life, showing the things he has achieved in the realm of physical sciences. We are grateful for them. But we are most of all grateful for the ideal standard pattern of American bravery and spirit that we see outlined in bold relief against the blazing background of the Valley Road.

GIRLS HEAR COOKING EXPERT

Didn't Realize Before That the Kitchen At Home Was Such a Truly Laboratory; Angel Food Demonstrated

A large class of girls from the high school heard Prof. Eastman this afternoon as he demonstrated the making of "Angel Food." Oh, yes, the professor said, there was something most significant in his choosing the angel's food in his lesson. He said he'd expect to be run out of town if he didn't give the girls a lesson that was just fitted—or perhaps merely appropriate—for the occasion.

First the girls were a little shy and wondered if they really were interested in cookery, and didn't it seem a little strange for a white robed man to be talking to them on the value of cream of tartar over that of baking powder, and suddenly in the midst of watching the professor sift the flour five, yes, five times, Dame Chemistry blossomed out in a new light.

Why of course there was a real little laboratory in mother's kitchen, but who would have guessed it? Surely, not even mother herself imagined such a thing. Then when the wonder and the seriousness of it all became apparent and the girls sat right on the edge of the chair so absorbed, the professor said such a very witty thing, and looked over his glasses in such a merry, kindly way that every one just laughed in the best kind of a way.

Finally the cake mixture was in the pans; the girls had oh-ed and oh-ed themselves into ecstacies over the beautiful golden mass, and had settled themselves to hear what the professor had to talk upon while the cakes were baking.

To tell all that was told the girls would be telling tales out of school. But one may be sure by the expression on the girl's faces that they had heard some wonderfully true and good things—and wasn't home really just the grandest place, and wouldn't the family get a taste of "Angel Food" at no late day, is what their shining eyes and eager faces told as in little groups, the lesson over, they passed from the room.

Oh, yes the girls thanked the Professor for remembering them and devoting an afternoon for their special pleasure and instruction, and the Professor beamed his acceptance, and as the girls moved on said sotto voice to his spatula and cake tins "Bless their hearts, every one of them."

This evening at 7:30 both men and women are invited to the lecture "The Relation of Food to Health and Efficiency" will be the topic.

This treat-to-be is in the nature of a man who is coming to Fulton at the suggestion of Mr. Buck for the especial purpose of getting acquainted with Fulton's boys. He is John R. THE BOWLERS' NOTES

The committee appointed by the Onyx bowling association is busily engaged securing talent for the benefit performance to be given at The Quirk theatre, Monday, March 8th.

The indications at present point to a successful entertainment. Many of Fulton's leading amateurs have volunteered their services to help the cause along.

The bowling team that will represent Fulton, if sent to Boston, will give Fulton recognition in the world of sport.

Teams which in the past have been sent to Atlantic City and Rochester have given a good account of themselves, and there is no reason why another team sent to Boston this year cannot do likewise.

"There are many ways," says an enthusiast, "that we can boost the city of Fulton, and among them is to send the bowlers to Boston. Get busy and do your share; the boys will do theirs."

Those who have volunteered their talent for the good of the cause are: Messrs. H. Wicks McCollum, Tallman Van Buren, LeRoy and Stevenson.

Thomas McCollum and George Hill proved a winning combination in the two-man bowling sweepstakes contests on the Onyx alleys last night. A total of 1136 pins was high for the evening. Sullivan and Paige, with a score of 1122, were second in the race, while Powell and Newton, with 1098, won third prize.

VAUDEVLLE AT THE QUIRK

Yesterday's offering was decided to be the best yet and containing feature acts entirely new in nature to this locality. Ye Olde Home Choire with the southern colonial mansion and flowery surroundings and the costumes of ye olden tyme, together with unusual voices rendering the songs of that time and those of today, proved an innovation. Harry Sterling is one of the best singles in vaudeville; Welch & Long put on a neat, versatile singing and dancing act; Ward and Radcliffe a rapid fire singing and talking farcical number, and Jacobs and his dogs an act entirely different from all other dog acts, one that the ladies and children go into extacies over, as the actors are all little darlings such as they would love to posses as pets. Tonight at 8.30 is the last opportunity to see this splendid bill.

The Bride and the Sun.

The old adage, "Happy is the bride that the sun shines on,' is one that is unknown in some lands. A Breton bride, for instance, takes it as a bad sign should the day of her wedding dawn bright and sunny. Rain on her marriage morn is held to signify that all her tears are shed and that she will therefore have a happy married life. The day before the wedding is called the "weeping day," for the bride and her friends weep as much as possible, with the idea of getting the mourning over, so that only what is joyful may remain. In other countries this result is attained by drenching the bride with water.

Had Practiced.

Cardinal Richelieu once listened to an earnest sermon by a shoemaker. The man was simple and unaffected and apparently not at all dismayed by the presence of the cardinal.

"How could you preach to me with so much confidence?" Richelieu asked him in evident surprise.

"Monsigneur," replied the shoemaker, "I learned my sermon by reciting it to a field of cabbage heads in the midst of which was one red one, and this practice enabled me to preach to you."

FEWER ARRESTS MADE FOR PUBLIC INTOXICATION

Figures Presented by Chief of Police Warrant Some Comparison.

That movies must be exerting an influence for good in this city is evidenced by the small number of arrests for public intoxication made during this closing month.

Chief of Police presented last night his monthly report to the Board of Fire and Police Commissioners, reporting that the total number of arrests for public intoxication was ten. Five arrests were made on other charges, making a grand total of fifteen. These arrests were made upon charges of assault—third degree, 2; second degree, 1; disorderly persons, 1; for violations of Sec. 43; chapter 720, Penal Code, 1.

Twelve convictions were secured, and two cases remain undisposed of. One case only was held for the Grand Jury.

Fines imposed in Judge Wilson's court amounted to $70.00, of which there was collected $20.

There were fines imposed in January to the amount of $7 that were not collected until this month. One patrol call was made in February, and one patrolman (Boland) was absent from duty for two days.

Small Fire Record

Chief Waugh of the fire department reported to the Board that during February three alarms only were received at headquarters by telephone. The first fire of the month was in the Foster block, Cayuga st., on Feb. 3. On the 12th of the month an overheated fireplace in the home of Mrs. Marie Sanford, in 4th st., caused a slight financial loss. On Feb. 20 a smudge fire occurred in a hallway in the old Foster theatre, caused by the burning of papers and excelsior.

Origin of "God Save the King."

The origin of the phrase "God save the king" is, says a London journal, shrouded in mystery. It occurs in Coverdale's translations of the Bible, 1535. Froude has also quoted it as a watchword of the navy as early as 1545 with the countersign "Long to reign over us." Another but little known version was published at the time of the restoration. It begins:

God save Charles the king,
Our royal Roy;
Grant him long years to reign
In peace and joy.

Queenly.

He—She's a thoroughly queenly woman. She—Yes, even her teeth have gold crowns.—Town Topics.

EAGLE PATROL WINS CONTEST

Other News of Boy Scouts of City; Mr. Carr Captivates an Audience

William Carr, who has been in Alaska, gave a talk on that country to the scouts of Patrol I last Tuesday at troop headquarters. Mr. Carr explained the method of scientific gold mining and told of the hunting and fishing, the various Indian tribes, the climate and various phases of the life there. He related a few of his own interesting experiences.

When he told of crossing a river on fish there was a general gasp and questions of "how?" It sounded more probable after he had explained that it was spawning season and the salmon were going upstream in great numbers to lay eggs, but even then the boys wore dazed expressions.

Scout Commissioner W. P. Morin was present and after a short talk on thrift he presented Scout Fitch with the first class badge. Scout Fitch has had a fine record and is now ready to earn merit badges.

The next meeting is set for March ninth. Harvey VanBuren, U. S. N., will give the boys a talk.

The Inter-Patrol Contest stands at present as follows: Eagles, 161; Hawk 149; Lion, 102. Hadwin Fitch at present is high man, having won 25 points by becoming a First Class Scout. The Eagle Patrol won the 10 counts for the semaphore contest.

BEFRIENDING LITTLE BIRDS

They Do Not Mind Winter Weather Alone, But They Suffer For Food

The birds about our windows and our doorsteps are considered dumb because we do not understand their language. Could we but comprehend the meaning of their chirping and twittering we should doubtless hear tales of suffering.

Birds suffer far more from lack of food in winter than from the cold which we imagine is their chief enemy. Nature has clothed their tiny bodies with warm garments of feathers,which protect them from the cold as well as from the wet, but nature has not endowed them with thrift. Unlike the bees, which toil during the summer to lay up a store of honey for the months when flowers no longer bloom, or the squirrels, which fill their homes in hollow trees with nuts, the birds flit about with little care or thought for the days of winter. And therefore they need our help and sympathy.

Food Supply Ceases in Winter

Food for the birds is easily obtained during the greater part of the year. Worms are easily had from the ground and insects from the air, and from open windows and doorways there are thrown many fragments which are valued by the birds. But with the approach of winter there come freezing of the ground and the total disappearance of insects, and windows and doors are kept tightly closed, so there comes an almost total cessation of the food supply at just the time when the cold of winter renders the need for abundant food even more insistent than ever.

In the country there are sources of food supply which are not often available for birds in the city. Barnyards and stables afford much of their sustenance,and even wind-swept corn fields are apt to offer some small amount of food, but these resources are denied to the birds which flit about the city's streets, building their nests and raising their young in nooks and in the crevices between buildings.

Befriending the birds costs barely nothing and involves only the slightest exertion. The scattering of a few bread crumbs or a little barley, rice, oatmeal or almost any kind of grain or cereal upon a window sill will attract the birds in throngs; and if they find that the dole is to be given each day they will appear at the proper time and wait until the window is opened and the food laid out for them.

At any meat market one may obtain a bit of suet, which the birds value as a rare delicacy. The animal fat supplies to their tiny bodies an added warmth, which is a protection against the cold. If the suet be tied or nailed in some place where it will be easy of access there will be a constant succession of birds in attendance at what to them is a holiday treat.

Suffer from Thirst

Birds suffer from thirst as well as from hunger during the winter, for during the cold weather most of their sources of water supply are frozen up. A small and very shallow pan filled with water sufficiently warm to remain unfrozen for an hour or two will quench the thirst of the throng of little feathered creatures who appear at the window sill to be fed.

Many friends of the birds, who might provide houses for them are apt to defer their benefactions until the coming of the mating season, in the early spring, but a bird house will be quickly tenanted at any time during the year. One need not wait for the passing of the winter to offer the shelter which the birds would so value. Often, where a real bird house cannot be had, the merest roof, beneath which the birds may take refuge from the driving storms, may easily be arranged.

A small wooden box may be fixed to an outside wall—perhaps just outside a window—to serve the dual capacity of a shelter and a feeding place. Such a box should be so placed that the open side is toward the south, for in that case it would usually be protected from the wind and the rain.

Such small kindnesses, which even the children can bestow upon the birds about our homes, will save many little lives. Birds have a purpose very fixed and definite in the economy of nature, and we have an obligation to them which can be paid in no way so acceptable to the birds as our remembering their need in winter.

WHITMAN WOULD HOLD TO PRESENT ELECTION LAW

Albany, Feb. 27.—It is very doubtful if Governor Whitman will sign his name to the Argetsinger bill which amends the general election law, both in the direction of direct primaries and the general election machinery. The Governor admitted today that he did not think that the directt primary law has a had a fair trial and that it should at least remain operatice another year. He will oppose, it is almost certain, any substitution to the present method of nomination.

REPUBLICANS TO AGAIN BLOCK PASSAGE OF BILL

Washington, Feb. 27.—Republican Senators when they learned today that an agreement had been reacehd on the Ship Purchase bill by the conferees today served notice that they would renew their filibustering. Senator Weeks said the measure would not be permitted to come to a vote this session. The confeerees refused to limit the life of the proposed act which their opponents of the bill had been fighting.

WHITMAN OPPOSSES CHANGE IN ALIEN LABOR LAW

Albany, Feb. 27—Governor Whitman let it be known today that he will not interfere with the Legislature in his dealingsw ith the proposition to amend the alien labor law, permitting aliens to be employed on State work, and that he favored a repeal of the statute which makes it impossible to secure such employment. It is possiblye that the Governor may send a special message bearing on this subject to the law makers.

FATHER AND SON MOVEMENT FOUNDED ON COMMON SENSE

Regarding the "Father and Son" movement which was recently launched, The Utica Press says: 'The 'Father and Son' movement is based on good common sense and is cetrain to be productive of positive benefit.

It emphasizes the importance of parental influence and association. It aim sto make the father the friend and companion of the son rather than the stern authority which is only feared.

COURT CONFIRMS BECKER JUDGMENT

Abany, Feb. 27.—District Attorney Perkins of New York today notified the Coutr of Appeals that on Monday he would have the Court confirm the judgment convicting Charles Becker of the murder of Herman Rosenthal. The grounds for this motion are that the appeal was not brought within six monts. In all probability the Court will deny the motion and fix a date for argument on appeal.

OPPOSED CHANGE OF STATE LABOR LAW

Abany, Feb. 27.—Gov. Whitman in discussing the bill seeking to place the state labor department under the jurisiction of the Secretary of State, today sai dthat he oubted that it would be wise to make this move. He pointedout that the labor department was once a department of the Secretary of State.

"THEN AND NOW" A GIRL'S ESSAY

Fulton As Found By a High School Girl Who Has Returned After a Long Absence

Miss Florence Moody, of the Fulton high school, is the writer of the following article which appeared originally in The Oracle for February

Twenty-five years ago my business compelled me to move from Fulton to San Francisco. I was obliged to leave my home on West First st. and my many Fulton friends and take up my residence among new surroundings. With the passing of years, these surroundings became familiar and new friends became old ones, but I shall never forget Fulton.

This year occurred my first opportunity to visit my former home. While I had naturally expected to find some changes, I was utterly unprepared for the Fulton which I actually found. I came in from Syracuse by trolley, a trip which would have been impossible when I left Fulton, for at that time no trolley was in existence here. It was nearing evening when I arrived, and as the car glided down First street in the gathering dusk, I was vaguely aware that things seemed strange; but in the excitement of greeting my friends at the station, surfoundings were forgotten. It was not until the next day that the magnitude of the change in Fulton was fully apparent to me.

The friend, whom I was visiting, eager to show me the growth and improvements of the city, suggested that we make a tour of inspection in his automobile. Afterwarrds it seemed to me that a series of exclamation points would make an excellent written record of my conversation during the ride.

The city had grown remarkably. New streets had been opened and settled and both old and new had been paved. Good roads had been constructed in every direction and electric lights and gas plants had been installed. Hundreds of buildings had been erected in the residential section. Great changes had been also made in the business parts. East 1st street I would not have recognized. There were several new blocks, new apartments and three new banks. In place of the old Universalist church stood a beautiful new theatre. Next to it was a picturesque little trolley station; farther up the street was a new library and beyond that a handsome new post office was in process of construction. As we heared the upper bridge, a jaunty little street car whizzed by us. I looked inquiringly at my friend. "Oh that's the car that runs to the D., L. & W. station," he said.

I was silent, picturing in memory the two skinny horses of former times as they strained and tugged in their effort to get the old rattling car over the shaky upper bridge.

But where was that bridge?

Gone! and in its place, spanning the old Oswego was a magnificent concrete structure with rows of lights, spacious driveways and paths for pedestrians. As we crossed, we stopped in the center that we might look down stream to observe the new barge canal now nearly completed, far away the dredge was busy and we tarried a few minutes to watch it in its fascinating work.

We passed on to the woolen mills Here I found that the two mills of my remembrance had grown to four and that in connection with these a dye house was under construction. My friend told me that about two thousand people were employed in these mills alone.

There were many other changes on the west side; two new school houses, a new freight station, the Aluminum works, the Fort Stanwix Canning factory, and many residences.

We returned to the east side by the lower bridge. This also was comparatively new, an iron structure having replaced the old wooden one of my day.

While crossing the bridge, I noticed, on a huge building, the sign "Smith Guns." In response to my inquiry, my friend explained that the plant was the celebrated Hunter Arms.

In the northern part of the city, we found several new paper mills, the Macaroni factory, the Knitting Mill and the new Erie st. school.

Leaving the business section, we went up 3d st. As we passed the remodelled Baptist church consisting of brick, concrete and cobblestones, I was instinctively reminded of my first day in Caesar class when I was taught that "All Gaul is divided into three parts."

In the next block, I noticed the great improvement in the Catholic church property. Houses had been moved and a parochial school was nearly completed.

Numerous changes had been made in the city park. There was a soldiers' monument. There were lights, tarred paths, benches and a water fountain. How different it all was from the straggly park twenty-five yars before!

Motoring up Fourth st. we stopped before a beautiful building which I discovered to be the well-equipped Lee Memorial Hospital. Farther up the street, I was shown the Nestle's Food and Peter's Chocolate Works.

Then we came around to the new standpipe where we had a wonderful birdseye view of the city.

"We have been nearly about the city," said my friend. "What is your verdict?"

"There has been great progress. It is all very interesting and beautiful, but it is all strange. It isn't really Fulton."

A queer little smile came over my friend's face. He said nothing but turned the car down a side street. In a few minutes we found ourselves in front of a brick building which I should have recognized had I come across it in Timbuctoo. It was in that edifice I had spent four years of my High school life.

"Let us go in," I said. "This is the first familiar place I have seen.

We entered the boys' hall, went up the dark and winding stairs to the chapel. Every step took me back into the past. On the threshold, we paused. There was the same old assembly hall, the low platform with its desk and row of chairs where the august faculty were wont to sit in days of yore. There was the same floor with its valleys and hummocks more pronounced than ever. Even the wall decoration and the cans for waste paper were the same, and in a distant corner I saw the banner of my class, dusty but still there. The school was having afternoon exercises and just as we entered the professor's voice rang out in the old familiar statement, "We will open our exercises by singing October."

I turned to my companion. "Yes," I said, "at last I have found Fulton."

"Oh," he said smiling. "Just come back at the end of another twenty-five years and perhaps you may find a new High School." F. M., '15.

GOOD INTENTIONS

Whole cities are paved with good intentions. Lots of little towns are surveyed with the determination to save something for future generations, like parks, lakes and drives.

Many a man means to provide a purse for a rainy day, to put away a little money in the savings bank for absolute necessity that is sure to knock sooner or later; but if no pressure is exercised, being human, he will skip weeks and sometimes months. Saving is a habit, and until you get the habit you skip. One way to get the habit is to start with a small sum in the savings bank, and never fail to add a little each week, even if you go hungry. Better to go hungry now, than when you are older grown.

If you don't get the full force of this meaning, skip a couple of good square meals, and get real hungry, and while the lining of your stomach flaps like an empty pocketbook, and you are weak, and in need of food, stop and think what it means to save.—Silent Partner.

Gouzales Begins Storming Monterey

Laredo, Tex., Feb. 27.—Twenty thousand Carransa troops under command of General Pable Gonzales opened a general attack on the city of Monterey at dawn today, according to advices received at Neuvo Laredo. One of the greatest battles of the revolution is said to be raging.

The Villa forces in Monterey number 14,000 men. They are well equipped with artillery which has been mounted on buildings in the outskirts of the city. Before opening his attack Gen. Gonzales demanded the surrender of Gen. Angeles Villa's troops, but the demand was rejected.

SHODDY PLANT BURNS

Albany, Feb. 27.—The shoddy plant of W. J. Barnet & Son, of Rensselar, was totally destroyed by fire early today entailing a loss of $300,000. The fire was attacked by the entire Rensselar department, but it spread quickly and was soon beyond control. The firemen were able to save the adjoining buildings. The fire causes about 100 men to be thrown out of employment.

SPRING PREDICTIONS

Player Writers Out With Their Powder as to Who's to be Who In 1915.

New York, Feb. 27th.—Boxing bouts are staged in the trenches and camps of the British soldiers between battles with their German foes in Belgium and northern France.

The English, during the past few yearrs have become very fond of the mitt game and when the call to arms forced the fight fans to forsake their home towns where boxing matches were staged, it was a severe blow to them. They went to the front because their country called—but they didn't forget their love for boxing.

Many of the recent letters from the front, written by the English soldiers tell of boxing bouts staged among the English regiments during lulls in the death grapple of the Germans and the allied armies. Elimination battles are staged first and then the championship battle follows.

Here is an extract from a lecture written by Private S. C. Tiddy of the second section of the First Cavalry Division; and which appeared a few weeks ago in the London Daily Chronicle:

"Last night a boxing contest was held (name of place deleted by censor and the words "somewhere in France substituted) by members of our column and some good contests were decided.

"The organizer of the meeting, Private Jones, A. S. C., is himself a boxerr of note in the north of England, having won 84 prizes. He claims the title of 9st, 6 lb. champion of the north.

"The principal event was a contest for the 9 st. 6 lb. championship of the column, which was won by private Portlock, after fighting his way through several hard rounds. Private Portlock has a nasty swing with his right, which when it "gets home" must be rather like stopping a "coal box," only, fortunately, there is no explosion.

"Pretty exhibitions of sparring were given by SSergeant Hodgkinson and Private Graham, both heavy-weights and first-class exponents of the "noble art," and Privates Williams and Tunningley. But perhaps the most interesting event was the meeting of Private Jones and M. von Deus, a refugee and 8st. 6lb. champion of Lille, France. After the fight the hat was passed round for the benefit of von Deus and 56 frances were subscribed.

"Lieutenant Kreitmayer, O. C., and the other officers honored the meeting with their company. Lieutenant Swan kindly held the watch. The referee was Corporal Holt, and the seconds Corporals White and Ebers. During the evening songs were sung by Mr. Wheelhouse, Private Attwood, Corporal Thomas, Private Davis, and a most successful program closed with the Marseillaise and God Save the King."

New York, Feb. 26.—Dick Rudolph, the author-pitcher, of them there Boston Braves, takes his pen in hand to inform the gaping multitude that:

"Of course, every one expects me to predict that the Braves will repeat as pennant winners in 1915 so I won't disappoint anybody. I'll say that the Braves will repeat, ond I'll go farther by saying that the Braves will cap another world's championship in October."

Gosh, we hope that Johnny Fener, boss of the National League, doesn't read the above. Fener is a humane sort of fellow and if he read what Dick had to say he'd award the pennant to the Braves right away and save the players on the seven other teams from spending the whole summer in fruitless endeavor. And then what would the National League fans do for diversion this summer?

Christ Mathewson, another of our famed author-pitcher, occasionally devotes his time to writing bits of advice for the magnates of organized baseball. Here is a sample from one of Christy's recent ventures in the literary field:

"Organized baseball must watch one thing in particular in connection with the Federal League's activity. All the ball players on the teams without good pennant chances will threaten to jump to the Federals in the hope that the league with which they are connected will consent to let them go to some stronger club, with pennant chances, in order to hold them in organized baseball. This would make the races in both circuits (American and National) lop sided."

S'all right, Chris, but why didn't you finish advising business when you started it? Why didn't you tell the magnates—and the readers of your column—what should be done in such a case? What would you do, Chris, if you were owner of the oncetime Naps and Joe Jackson, the outfielder, came up to you and said:

"I want to be traded to the Boston Red Sox or the Philadelphia Athletics. If you don't do it I'll jump to the Feds. What's your answer?"

What would you say to him, Chris?

There will be no fight in Mexico,
And you can bet this isn't a joke;
Johnson says to that land he won't go,
And I'm sure none would blame the big smoke.

Rube Marquard, the well known high jumper, has announced that he will not participate in the 1916 Olympic games.

Ty Cobb, who plays ball in the good old summer time also does a bit of time to authoring in the winter so as to keep the wolves from the front porch. Ty's favorite pastime is walloping the Feds. When he isn't doing that he tries to cheer up the folks in Detroit by telling them that the Tigers aren't so bad after all and that maybe they might amount to something in the 1915 pennant battle.

But Ty is somewhat alone in hoping for the best in Detroit. The Tigers don't look any stronger for 1915 than they did in 1914 and they never had a look in at the pennant after the first month's spurt.

Of course, one or two of the Tiger club pitchers may "come through" and lend a helping hand to Ty and Sam Crawford—"the wrecking crew"—but even if they do the Tigers won't look good enough for anything better than fourth place if the Red Sox, Athletics, and Senators live up to expectations.

Charley Ebbets is beginning to believe that the Federal league is centering its fight upon him. First they put a club in Brooklyn to compete with Charley's Dodgers and now they've put a club in Newark to buck his Internationals.

"It's a tough, cruel world," says Charles.

Fake interviews:

"Stories to the effect that I was hitfrom behind by Pat Newnam and several others are bunk. They hit me while I was looking at them."—John McGraw.

"Germany" Schaefer ought to succeed in his role as cheer leader for the Newark Federals. Schaefer could make an Egyptian mummy giggle—if the mummy was alive.

When told that Carranza would arrest him if he landed in Mexico Jack Johnson asked: "Who is this man Carranza—sport item.

"Who is this man Carranza?"
Asked Johnson with a shout;
"What men did that chap ever fight,
"And who did he knock out?
"I'll bet that I could whip him
"In an old time stand up fight
"If we were fighting for a purse
"And I was feeling right.
"Well, may be he's a bruiser
"And tough as he can be
"But it's mighty funny that
"He's never challenged me."

The convict team in Sing Sing prison has decided not to go South for its spring training.

Knockout Brown says he will continue to fight just as long as Dan McCann, his manager, needs the money. K. O. must expect to live to be 117.

Fake interviews:

"I am sorry I jumped to the Feds."—Jos Tinker.

The promoters of that Johnson-Willard affair will lose about $30,000 if the fight isn't staged in Juarez.

Harry Chapman, catcher of the St. Louis Feds is a candidate for being the eighth wonder of the world. He refused to predict that he would play the best game of his life in 1915.

"BOY PLUNGER" NOW BANKRUPT

Jesse Livermore Loses Fortune Made by Speculation.

OWES MORE THAN $100,000

Bought Mansion, Yacht and String of Automobiles After Stock Market Panic of 1907—Reported to Have Lost $3,000,000 When He Tried to Corner Cotton In 1908.

Jesse L. Livermore, the "boy plunger," who "ran a shoestring into a fortune" by Wall street manipulation, has filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy. He gives his liabilities as $102,474 and places no value on his assets, which are meager.

Mr. Livermore once described himself as a "bucket shop graduate." Born in Massachusetts in 1877, he went to work in a Boston broker's office at the age of sixteen, marking quotations on a bulletin board and receiving $6 a week.

With $30 saved out of his salary Livermore embarked on the stormy seas of speculation. He took his first plunge in one of the "bucket shops" in the Hub—and came out on top. Flushed with this success and with confidence in his luck, he abandoned his job and started trading for himself. Before he was twenty-one years old he had made a comfortable fortune.

In 1906 he went to New York, having tried Boston, Denver and Chicago and yearning for bigger game. When he started in New York his stake was $25,000. Before long this had been stretched into $250,000.

When the panic of 1907 came he had realized that overspeculation and overextension would be followed by disastrous liquidation and put out a short line of Union Pacific, Reading, Copper and Smelters. When the crash came he was able to cover every contract and start on a trip to Europe. He bought a mansion, a yacht and a string of automobiles, and Wall street spoke of him as a "wise young man."

Big Gambles in Cotton.

Then he became interested in cotton. On his return from Europe, after the situation here had cleared up, he found the cotton market oversold and everybody short. He sprang his big cotton coup and came out between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000 ahead. Wall street was now convinced that he was a "wise young man."

In 1908 he tried to corner cotton and was reported to have lost about $3,000,000. After that he was not heard from again until 1913, when suit was brought against him by the liquidating partners of the stock Exchange firm of Mitchell & Co. Then he dropped out of view until the petition was filed. Most of the claims, the petition states, are judgments due on promissory notes given for transactions in the open market in 1913 and 1914.

At the time of his failure, in 1913, Livermore announced that he had invested $400,000 in an annuity which brought him an income of $20,000 and could not be touched. No mention of this is made in the bankruptcy petition. He lives with his wife at Bretton Hall, Broadway and Eighty-sixth street, New York.

In the petition filed the principal claims are: Mitchell & Co., $27,463; Murray Mitchell, $16,000; Chapman & Seaman $7,207; H. E. Bachman & Co. $9,740; Wagner, Dickerson & Co., $6,982, and Duryea, Tappin & Co., $6,355.

The assets include 5,000 shares of West Tonopah Consolidated Mining company, fifteen shares preferred and seven common of Long Island Motor Parkway stock, one share of stock of the Dunwoodie country club, and a claim against C. A. Litiare for $6,426.

RED JACKET CURE FOR RATS.

Sew on the Coats, Then Give Rodents Free Run.

Pointers on how to get rid of the ubiquitous rat, from sewing a red jacket on him to dipping him in tar, are contained in a bulletin just issued by the Massachusetts state board of agriculture and compiled by Edward H. Forbush, state ornithologist. The following advice as to how to conduct an exterminating warfare is contained in the bulletin:

"Use cats, terriers, particularly the fox terrier, and ferrets; sew a red jacket on a captive rat or paint him; then release him; place a collar and a bell on a live rat and release him; dip him in tar and liberate him; also place tar in rat holes, runs and burrows; sprinkle chloride of lime around rat habitats or use carbolic acid."

The council will issue stock. It is planned to begin work on the project in the near future.

The architect will be a woman, and women will handle all of the business dealings in regard to the building.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Bob Shawkey of the Philadelphia Athletics.

Robert J. Shawkey, one of the pitchers on whom Connie Mack relies to keep the Athletics in the pennant race next year, had a fairly good record during the 1914 season. He finished third in rank among Connie's twirlers, taking part in thirty-eight games and having a percentage of 2.75 hits per game. Only Bressler and Bender had a higher percentage for the Mackites. Shawkey started the fourth game in the world's series contest, but was taken out at the end of the fifth inning after three runs had been scored off his delivery. Pennock finished the game without a run being made off him, but the game had already been lost. During the game Shawkey met with a mishap. He broke a bone in his left wrist (not his pitching arm), but did not know it at the time. Later he went on a hunting trip to Maine, but his wrist bothered him so much that he consulted a specialist, who discovered that one of the small bones was broken. So Mr. Shawkey is at present walking around with his arm in splints.

In the table given here the work at bat of two of the leading batsmen of every team in the American league is given against all the left hand hurlers in the league. It shows that the curves and shoots handed out by this class of pitchers are slightly more puzzling to the star batsmen of B. B. Johnson's circuit than the stuff offered by the right handers.

Ziegler Quits Auto Racing.

Discouraged by the jinx which has followed him persistently since his debut in the automobile racing game, William Ziegler, Jr., for years a backer of speed cars, has quit the sport and offered his machines for sale. Ziegler was hoodoed, it seems, almost before he started. First, Marquis, driving one of his cars in the 1914 Vanderbilt contest, hit the ditch when leading the field at eighty-seven miles an hour; next, Chassagne overturned in the 1914 Indianapolis 500 mile race, and finally Grant's car, when running better than ninety miles an hour in the last race at Corona, caught fire, and he was forced out of the contest.

Who Will Succeed McLean?

Who will succeed Robert McLean of Chicago as the international amateur ice skating champion? That is the question followers of the racing game are trying to answer. McLean brought his amateur career to an end the other day by fessing up to the fact that he had received $75 a week for performing on stage ice at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago. McLean's crown naturally passed down to the runner-up in the indoor and outdoor race meetings last season. McLean's chief rival last winter was the Toronto whirlwind, Lot Rbe. The championship title therefore goes to Canada.

Best Leather For Baseballs.

Even more dangerous to the life and well being of the national pastime than the Feds, organized baseball and the warring magnates is the European war. So declares Curtis Guild, former United States minister to Russia. He remarked if trade with the czar's kingdom is not continued there will be no more baseball. Here's why, according to Guild:

"The only leather which will not stretch under sudden impact comes from the hides of Siberian ponies."

TROUBLES OF THE EUROPEAN FARMER.

—Brenetrup in San Francisco Chronicle.

KING ALBERT IN A RAGE.

Dramatic Scene When He Ordered the Execution of a Traitor.

No monarch loves his country more fervently than King Albert of Belgium, and a striking story is told of the drastic manner in which he punished a traitor who betrayed the Belgian army at Namur. The narrative was told to a reporter of the Cardiff Western Mail by a wounded Belgian officer who witnessed the incident.

When King Albert heard that one of his trusted commanders had proved a traitor he immediately ordered a court martial, and the man was sentenced to death. At the execution there was a memorable scene. King Albert was present, and when the doomed man stood up to be shot his majesty went up to him, took from him his sword and snapped it across his knee. The monarch's face was white with passion and his lips trembled with rage. Suddenly he grasped the disgraced officer's coat and tore from it every decoration, every button, every vestige of braid. The officer handed his revolver to the king and asked him to shoot him. The monarch flung the revolver back into his face, stepped back a few feet, signaled to the firing party, the air was rent with a volley, and the man was no more. He had paid the penalty of his treachery.

The Jitneys.

The jitney, in the picturesque and untrammeled language of certain parts of our country, is a five cent piece. By the simple process of transference it has now come to mean in a growing number of western cities a motorbus that runs regularly over a given route in competition with trolley lines or not, as the case may be, and carries passengers for a five cent fare. The city of its origin is a bit uncertain—though probably the idea came from the European cities, where a similar system has revolutionized urban and suburban transportation—but presumably it was in progressive California, for most of the cities there appear to be well fitted out with flying squadrons of jitneys.—Boston Herald.

German Princes War Victims.

The new Almanach de Gotha makes the statement that up to now seven German princes have been killed in the war—namely, Princes Frederick and Ernest of Saxe-Meiningen, Max of Hesse, Rudolf and Ernest of Lippe, Wolsath of Waldeck Pyrmont and Henry XLVI. of Reuss. It is also known that two members of the imperial Russian family have died on the battlefield, but the Almanach mentions only one, Prince Oleg.

The Longest Courtship.

The longest courtship on record was that between Franz Rosner and Anna Renner of Oberpolitz, Bohemia. They had been courting for seventy-five years, but repeatedly deferred the bridal day. At last Franz became fatally ill and was recently married on his deathbed at the age of 100 and died two days later. The age of the widow is ninety-three.—Exchange.

Table Manners.

When I am eating bread and cake
I never smack my lips;
And milk I always try to take
In quiet little sips.

At breakfast, luncheon and at tea
I hold my fork just right,
For little folks should always be Exceedingly polite.

HOME DECORATION.

Lace Is Important In House Adornment, So 'Tis Said.

Lace assumes more and more an important place in the domain of home furnishings. It is so important that upholsterers have to employ lacemakers and are obliged to make lace purchases on a considerable scale.

Among other things, pianos and windows are draped with lace.

The renaissance combines with lace of quite modern origin. And combining with all and second to none in fashion or effect is the old fashioned crochet. The present taste for crochet denotes a remarkable revival in this kind of thing.

Another revival besides it and making common cause with house and especially dr[illegible] is the equally old fashioned netting. For long years past this species of hand work has been left almost exclusively to fishermen and their industrious wives.

It served for fishing nets, and that was about all. But now it is coming back as fast as it can to the place it occupied, let us say, a hundred years ago, in the repertoire of fancy work for women.

Then was the time when dainty slipper cased feet were put forward and used in the service of the kind of fancy work known as knitting. Now machinery does a great deal of the work which human fingers, aided by the foot, used to do.

But whether wrought by fingers or machinery, it remains a fact that old fashioned netting is a distinct revival and that its presence in drawing rooms throws an air of fashion around them. The effects of embroidery upon it are now more artistic than of yore, nature as well as pictures often serving as models.

Spider Web Embroidery.

The new spider web embroidery is charming. The webs are used for backgrounds of floral designs, bright colored dragon flies and the like and sometimes stand out alone with only the residing spider upon them. The embroidered webs are alarmingly and delightfully natural, being usually of pale gray. They may be made in any color that you prefer, however, and a beautiful effect can be obtained by such a design in different shades of delft blue, the lightest shade being used for the webs. Spider web embroidery is being used upon luncheon sets, bureau sets and occasionally upon sofa pillows.

FADS AND FANCIES.

Boudoir caps have large bows made of wide ribbon.

Organdie will be a great favorite in cotton materials.

Simplicity is the keynote of the new shirt waist styles.

Dainty muslin collars, berthas and ruffles, recalling the mid-Victorian days, are among novel neckwear for spring.

New crocheted scarfs are being done with irregular patterns which suggest the art nouveau designs that come from Vienna.

WHEN SORROW COMES.

Life no doubt is paved with enjoyments, but we must all expect times of anxiety, of suffering and of sorrow, and when these come it is an inestimable comfort to have some deep interest which will, at any rate to some extent, enable us to escape from ourselves and keep us from brooding.—Sir John Lubbock.

VIII.

Few great events are in themselves eventful or happen as the result of complicated planning. To achieve, one must be able to recognize the simplest means to an end and thoroughly prepare to use them, just as nature moves along the line of least resistance because it is thoroughly prepared to do so. In the same way, to me, as I look back upon this night, nothing seems remarkable save the simplicity of the proceeding.

Even before nightfall there began to descend from the overcast sky a drizzle that was as much mist as rain and became over the river a heavy, dripping fog. With night a darkness set in so thick that it seemed as if you could cut out chunks of it with a knife. No night could better have suited my enterprise.

Into the darkness we pushed off and with muffled oars began our trip down the river, keeping near the bank so as to row a straight course, for the fog was so thick over the channel that we might have rowed around in a circle without knowing it.

Once clear of the woods, we pulled out further from shore and proceeded with more caution. I could now hear the challenges of the sentries as they met on the bridge. But there also was a curious effect of echo, as if the fog or water threw back the voices. Several times I had Silvain stop rowing, for it was by the calls of the sentries that I gauged our diminishing distance from the bridge, and every time I noticed the effect I have mentioned. It might be natural, but it puzzled me.

Finally when Silvain rested on his oars and I listened for the sentries, their hail, when it came, made clear to me what was the cause of the supposed echo. Instead of only two challenges there were four. Two sentries paced the bridge, starting from either bank and meeting in the middle. This accounted for two of the four challenges. The two others came from below, from the river; one from beyond the bridge, the other from our side and between us and the structure. The fog that had aided us so far also had made the ever alert enemy much the more wary. Besides the watch on the bridge itself he had stationed sentinels in boats above and below it.

There was no time to lose. Advantage had to be taken of the fog both for the approach and the getaway. From the voice of the sentry I judged that the boat in our direction was anchored in midstream and that the bridge was not more than fifty feet ahead of us. I whispered to Silvain to pull into the shallow water. This had to be accomplished very slowly, because silently, and as it was we bumped into a log that was mired in the mud, so that if it hadn't been for a fender at the bow of the boat there might have been an audible thud.

I made fast the punt to the log, threw off my clothes and, having ascertained by a thrust of the oar that the water there was barely more than a foot deep, took the box with the bomb in my hands, stepped overboard and waded out nearly up to my armpits, then turned toward the bridge and slowly made my way along what evidently was the edge of the channel.

In such circumstances every step has its history, each yard gained its memoir. But at last I became aware by the even deeper shadow than that of drizzle, fog and night that I was under the arch of the bridge, while the slap-slap of water against stone told me where the pier was.

To gain a firm foothold for what I was about to do, I took a few steps into shallower water. The channel, which was about forty feet wide, was divided by the pier, so that this was but little more than twenty feet from where I stood, holding the box with the bomb in my outstretched hands and waiting for the challenge of the sentries, which I figured would drown the sound of the sudden movement I was about to make. I heard their measured tread approaching the middle of the bridge. A moment later came the challenge.

Bracing my feet against the bottom, I launched myself on my back in the direction of the pier. I held the box over my chest and out of the water. I was simply swimming on my back—kicking out with my legs and propelling myself with my feet. The smart slap of the ruffled current against the pier soon told me I was near it. I felt for bottom with my feet and found it, for, as I had assumed would be the case, mud and silt had gathered about the foundation.

To place the box on the ledge seemed the work of a second. Quickly I allowed myself to sink, swam as long a distance under water as I could, came up well above the bridge and, regaining a foothold on the edge of the channel, pushed my way [illegible] to the punt, climbed in and took the oars from Silvain, rowing being the simplest way of keeping warm while drying off sufficiently to don my clothes. For now I realized that the water had been cold and that it was only the excitement of the adventure that had kept me from feeling it before.

The bomb was set for midnight. It must have been about a quarter past eleven when I clambered into the punt. I pulled back to where the stream entered the forest, ran the nose of the boat against the bank, got into my clothes and waited. It could not have been for long, but every minute seemed an age fraught with failure. But I knew the bomb was there; and the last thing I had heard before I started to swim under water from the pier was the ticking of the clock. So I waited and waited.

Suddenly a glare, sullen, threatful, penetrated the curtain of mist and night, and as suddenly left all black again. A roar like that of a thousand cannon burst upon the air. From up stream came the thud of a heavy mass falling into the water. Then a deep silence brooded over the river.

IX.

With the first breath of dawn "Busy Bertha" and the "Ginger Pops" got under way to take position on the hill. My small force of infantry followed. The cavalry I led to a point in the woods between the chateau and the hill, from where it could quickly dash out into the open, yet remain in hiding until the psychological moment for action. Then I cantered back the way I had come until I caught up with the guns. A British "non-com," a fine soldier, had command of the fieldpiece and a Belgian sergeant was with the rapid firers.

Eager to learn the result of my night's work, I rode past the detachment to the top of the hill and dismounted. Cautiously I peered through a network of twigs and branches. Where the bridge had been there was destruction. The explosion had shattered the pier just above the foundation and let it down into the river, followed by the two arches. That was the heavy mass I had heard fall. Here and there fragments were thrust above the surface of the stream, which expressed its worry in a series of futile eddies. A stump of masonry on either bank was all that was left of the approaches.

A veil of night and rain and fog had enveloped this scene of death and ruin when it occurred, but it was plainly disclosed by the light of the morning sun. That it should not have been discovered by the ammunition train which I now saw approaching from the north was due to the furious, blinding speed at which the horses were being urged forward, as if not a moment was to be lost in getting the caissons to the firing line on the enemy's extreme right. Actually, however, it was not until the first caisson was almost on top of the river that the rider of the off leader saw a gaping void where a bridge should have been. To avoid plunging into the stream he was obliged to pull up so abruptly that the second caisson was almost upon the first before it could be checked. In fact, the shock of the sudden stop to the onward rush of the train was so severe that it ran through the entire length, throwing horses back on their haunches with a great rattle of chains and a creaking and straining of wheels and harness.

My men had come up and taken position. The "non-com" was aiming "Busy Bertha," carefully looking through the sight, then running his eye along the barrel, finally giving the breech an affectionate pat. A glint of sun played across the muzzle—a smile flitting over steel lips.

"The first caisson, sir?" asked the "non-com."

"Fire at will!" I ordered.

One of the cannoneers pulled the lanyard. There was a roar of discharge, a little leap of joy on the part of the gun. It was a splendid shot. The shell struck the caisson squarely in the middle, blew up its contents and hurled the wreck of the whole outfit over the brink of the ruined approach into the river. This left a clear space on the roadway, into which the second caisson was unwittingly drawn by its straining horses, whose efforts in pulling themselves up from their haunches had forced them forward.

Another shell, another roar, another little jump of joy and "Bertha" had strewn the road with the fragments of the second caisson.

An attack so sudden, from such an unexpected quarter, in a territory supposedly free from hostile forces and in the confusion resulting from the sudden stoppage of the train would have proved fatally disconcerting to almost any other soldiers. But I had always found the enemy prepared to an uncanny degree for any emergency. As if the force guarding the train had been drilled in the face of just such an attack as it was now compelled to meet, the men sprang from horses and caissons and seeking cover behind the roadway opened a heavy rifle fire on our position.

Two of my men, fatally hit, pitched forward, and rolling a little way down the slope, lay out in the open in full view of the hostile force. At once I ordered the field gun to cease firing and reduced the rifle fire of my infantry to a weak and desultory reply to the enemy's attack. The result was what I wanted. To our foes it seemed as if they had put the field gun out of commission by picking off the men who were serving it, and that they had only a handful of infantry to deal with. Already superior to us in numbers and with a rear guard of cavalry coming up at a gallop to add to these, they made ready to attack our position.

Their commanding officer waved his sword. The men sprang from behind the roadway and, deploying in open order, advanced on the run. It was a force at least three times as large as mine that was rapidly crossing the open terrain between the road, where two of their caissons [illegible] and the [illegible] of the hill from where an apparently slackening fire had been directed on them.

"Shrapnel, sir?" asked my artillery sergeant, who had caught the significance of what I was trying to accomplish.

I nodded assent, motioned the Belgians to be ready and got all my infantry into action. Under the sudden gust of lead from my rifles I saw the officer who was himself up fall back and straighten out in death. The line swept past him. Another officer took his place.

Again I nodded to my artillery sergeant. Once more did "Bertha" roar and jump and once more do herself proud. It was a perfectly timed shrapnel. It burst low over the onrushing line—and where it burst there was a gap. I waved a hand to the Belgians, and suddenly death was hammering out a staccato air that no pianist, no orchestra, could have approached for rapidity. Ludicrous as the comparison may seem to those who have never witnessed the effect of rapid firers, the advancing line melted away like sugar in hot coffee. A moment before it had been there; now it wasn't. Here and there a man stood, confused, bewildered, hesitating, only to drop in his tracks before he could make up his mind what to do.

And the enemy's cavalry? It had not waited to get directly on our front, but had left the road and was coming at our position from an angle. "Bertha" kissed it with a shrapnel, the rapid firers showered a round of leaden confetti on it. Then we had to stop. For out of the woods charged our own cavalry, caught the enemy on the oblique flank—and all was over.

MINETTO POWER IS APPROVED

Public Service Commission Puts Its Stamp Upon Big Project

After careful examination by its engineers and accountants the up-State Public Service Commission, on the opinion of chairman Van Santvoord, has approved a method for the utilization of a large water power at Minetto owned by the Columbia Mills, Inc., and to be leased to the Niagara, Lockport & Ontario Power Company for use in its Syracuse and nearby lines, through the creation of a new company to develop the power.

The stock of the new company, called the Northern New York Power Corporation is to be taken by the Columbia Mills in part payment for its power. The bonds of the new company, interest and principal are also to be guaranteed by the Columbia Mills.

Though the Columbia Mills is a corporation organized under the business law, Chairman Van Santvoord holds that as it already sells a small amount of electricity to employes and other neighbors, it comes within the definition of an electrical corporation in the Public Service Commission's law, and as such its ownership of the stock of the other electric corporation must be approved by the Commission.

An Exception.

Though the opinion of the Commission makes plain that the general proposition of stock ownership of an electric corporation by a business corporation is not approved, it points out the following facts in this case:

"Possessed of valuable hydraulic power properties, water rights, easements, etc., which it is not in a position to develop and bring into present use, but upon which it is desirous of realizing, it proposes to transfer all of such property to the Northern New York Power Corporation, taking back from the latter all of its stock plus an amount in cash which shall together fairly represent the value of the property so to be transferred to the power corporation, which latter shall thereupon become a producer of light and power, for each of which there is current demand in the locality where the property is located."

The Northern New York Power Corporation is authorized to issue $900,000 of its 6 per cent. mortgage bonds at not less than 97 to net $873,000. Of this sum $350,000 is to be raised in cash to the Columbia Mills for its water rights, property, etc., and $455,000 is to go for the completion of the hydro-electric development. In addition the power corporation is to issue $500,000 capital stock. This, at 125, is to be turned over to the Columbia Mills, in payment of the balance on the property transferred. The Commission further approves the lease of the new company's thus acquired and developed hydro-electric property to the Niagara, Lockport & Ontario Co.

In approving the franchise for the delivery of the new electric power to the Niagara, Lockport & Ontario system and the furnishing of the same to the Columbia Mills present customers, the Commission compels the companies to stipulate that they will not interfere with the business of the Peoples Gas & Electric Company which is serving the people of Oswego.

The Commission has also approved a new link in the chain of power transmission lines in the northern part of the state, by approving franchises of the St. Lawrence Transmission Co. to extend its lines from Norfolk to Hannawa Falls, there connect with the line of the Northern Power Company, and from Massena north to the Canadian border where connection is made with the lines of the Cedar Rapids Transmission Co. of Canada, connecting with the Cedar Rapids power with that at Hannawa Falls and elsewhere through the territory.

The Commission limits the use of these lines to transmission purposes only, through the villages of Norwood, Messena and Potsdam, and the towns of Pierrepont, Potsdam, Norfolk, Stockholm and Messena, for which the company holds franchises, but in which other local companies, such as the Norwood Electric Light & Power Co., are already doing a distributing business with the approval of the Commission.

The Commission has dismissed the complaint of the village of Solvay which sought to compel the New York State Railways to repave between its tracks on Milton ave., between Rrchard road and Bridge st. The Commission finds that the pavement complained of is dangerous to street traffic rather than to street railway traffic and believes that this is a subject for the village's action under the rialroad law rather than order by the commission. The order points out that under the railroad law the village may notify the railroad to pave, and if it fails to do so within twenty days it may do the work at the road's expense.

ITALIAN PREMIER DEFENDS DECREE

By Brixton D. Allaire

Rome, Feb. 27.—A remarkable patriotic demonstration, indicating that Italy is rapidly drifting towards war with Austria, took place last night at the end of the session of the Italian Chamber of Deputies. It began when Signor Turati, a Socialist, made a speech of protest against the decree prohibiting anti-war and pro-war demonstrations. The deputy declared that he felt sure that the people were opposed to war and would refuse to support hostilities, but before he could say more his voice was drowned in the chorus of cries which greeted his remark.

Premier Salandra then took the floor and defended the decree, saying: "While I do not know whether or not Italy will interfere, yet I am sure that, when the hour comes, every citizen without party distinction will answer the call of his king and country."

At these words every deputy arose and started to cheer for the King. The women in the galleries joined the demonstration by waving their handkerchiefs. The whole concourse then joined in singing the national anthem. Cheering again broke out which lasted four minutes. There were cries of "Hurrah for Trent and Trieste!" The Socialists tried to effect a counter demonstration against war, but they were howled down.

GERMANS TIGHTENING GRIP ON WARSAW

By FREDERICK WERNER

Berlin, via Amsterdam, Feb. 27.—While it is admitted that the Russian troops in Poland, reinforced upon the line to which they retreated after being defeated in East Prussia, are obstainately resisting the German advance, dispatches from the front received here today assert that the operations ar proceeding in a manner highly satisfactory to Field Marshal Von Hindenburg.

The Russians who succeeded in crossing the Bobr river early in the week have been driven back to the left bank and Ossowiec which guards the crossing between Grodno and Lomza, is being bombarded by German artillery. Two of the four forts on the right bank of the Bobr at Ossodie are reported to have been destroyed. Many houses in the town of Ossowiec, which lies on the left bank, are in flames.

None of the forts at Ossowiec are as strong as those destroyed by the German guns at Liege, Namur and Maubeuge and news of the fall of Ossowiec is expected momentarily by the German military experts.

With their advance to Wyszogrod, on the right bank of the Vistula, the Germans have affected a marked gain in their efforts to throw a circle of steel about Warsaw. The recently assumed Russian offensive southwest of Warsaw is taken here to be an attempt to force withdrawel of German troops from north of the Vistula to strengthen Genenera Von Mackenzen's forces.

That commander, however, is understood to have reported that his positions along the Bzunka and Rawaka rivers are practically impregnable and that he needs no assistance in withstanding the sporadic Russian assaults.

Constantinople, by way of Berlin and Amsterdam, Feb. 27.—An unsuccessful attempt was made to assassinate Palat Bey, minister of the interior, last night in Stamboul. Three shots were fired by the assassin. The man who tried to kill him was tried by court martial, was found guilty and executed this morning.

RUSSIAN CLAIMS ARE OF OPTIMITIC NATURE

By Francis Lavelle Murray

Petrograd, Feb. 27.—General retreat of the German armies in Northern Poland was predicted at the war office today as a result of the Russian victory at Prsanysz. It was asserted that the Russian advance in the Przsanysz region had cut through the German front extending from the Niemen to the Vistula and that the troops of Grand Duke Nicholas were proceeding steadily toward the East Prussian frontier, thus menacing the Germans along the Niemen-Bobr-Narew front.

These German forces have succeeded in bringing their heavy artillery up before the fortress of Ossowiec. While this is a pivotal point in the Russian line of defense, war office attaches profess to have no anxiety over the situation there. They claim that with the Germans retreating in the Przsanysz region, those before Ossowiec will be unable to hold their positions.

To the northeast of Ossowiec along the Niemen river, desperate fighting is in progress in the swamp there where Germans suffered such severe losses in their invasion of Russian territory. At some points by the sacrifice of many men the Germans have succeeded in gaining temporary advantages, only to be wriven from their positions by conventrated Russian attacks. On Thursday they threw pontoon bridges across the Niemen north of Grodno and two divisions crossed upon these to the east bank.

Last Thursday night, however, three Russian regiments made a brilliant bayonet attack upon the Germans and drove them back to the west bank ofter fierce hand-to-hand fighting. Lacking artillery, the arriving of which had been delayed by the deep snow, volunteers to blow up the pontoon bridges were called. Fifteen men were selected. They attached bombs to the structures and shattered them.

Of the fifteen that volunteered for the task, however, only three returned unwounded. Seven were killed.

ALLIES AGREE UPON BLOCKADE OF E. AFRICA

By Herbert Temple

London, Feb. 27.—A blockade of the coast of German East Africa will go into effect at midnight Saturday night by order of the British government and it is expected that on Monday Premier Asquith will announce in detail the retaliatory methods against Germany upon which England, France, Russia, Servia and Belgium have agreed.

The government order as to German East African coast has removed, according to observers here the last doubt as to whether England will proclaim a blockade of the North sea coast of Germany. They assert that by March 15 a rin gof British warships will be in a position to halt every ship bound for Germany.

ARRAS FALL IN RUINS UNDER GERMAN FIRE

By Franklin P. Merrick

Paris, Feb. 27.—The Germans are gain bombarding Arras and Soissons as the result of French troops concentrations in those cities, accordin gto dispatches received in Paris today. The big German mortars have done terrific havoc at Arras and a great part of the city is in ruins. Despite rainy, foggy weather in West Flanders, artillery duelling is still in progress there. A considerable amount of French artillery has been placed at the disposal of the Belgians, who are shelling the German lines near Ostend.

Infantry fighting in the forests north of Verdun has cost the Germans heavily. In the Bois Forges peasants have been working for two days burying the dead and still many bodies remain upon the ground. There is a double bend in the river Meuse at that point, forming a letter "S." Ailly, which has been mentioned in the recent official dispatches, lies at the eastern extremeity of the lower bend. The French occupy a strong position on the eastern bank of the stream and are throwing shells across the river into the German lines on the west bank.

There has been no decisive result in the past few days fighting in the Vosges and Upper Alsace.

Athens, Feb. 27.—The Russian Black sea fleet is reported in advices received here to be trying to force the Bosphorus and Constantinople from the east. A bombardment of the ports from the Asiatic side is said to have opened yesterday. The Bosphorus is only 18 miles long and the Russian warships may reach Constantinople before the Anglo-French fleet.

DEMOCRAT POLITICIAN DIES

Savannah, Ga., Feb. 27.—William U. Hensel, who was a Democratic leader in Pennsylvania for many years, died here early today. He had been ill for some time and was taking a trip on the yacht of Don Cameron when his condition became critical. The yacht was turned toward Savannah and arrived here yesterday.

ROCHESTER SUFFERS BIG MORNING FIRE LOSS

Rochester, Feb. 27.—The fivestory building at 15-21 Elm street, just off Main street, was badly damaged by fire at an early hour this morning. Three alarms were sounded, calling all but a few companies to the scene. The fire, which started on the third floor, burned through to the roof before extinguished and ten manufacturing concerns suffered loss by fire and water. Lieutenant George Turpin of Truck No. 1 was seriously hurt. The damage is estimated at $100,000.

FIREMEN INJURED

New York, Feb. 27.—Eight firemen were injured, one seriously when a floor collapsed today during a fire in the six-story loft building at 29 West 21st street. John Middlestadt, who had just returned from sick leave occasioned by injuries in another fire, was rushed to the New York hospital in serious condition. The loss was $50,000.

WEATHER FORECAST

Cloudy tonight and Sunday; probably snow. Fresh northwest winds.

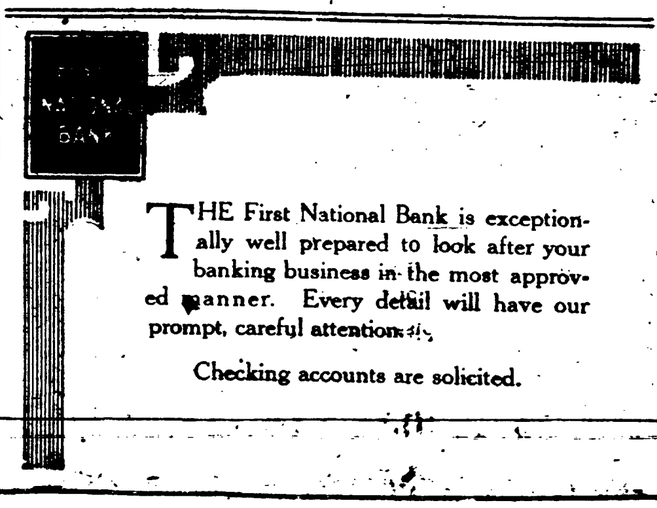
SAYS SHODDY SCHOOL SYSTEM

Ex-President Urges Standardization by Establishing National University

Cincinnati.—Professor William H. Taft, of Yale University, speaking before the convention of the Department of Superintendence of the National Education Association here recently said:

"The cause of free public education is more sacred and of more fundamental importance than almost any other before our people. It is one that awakens the profound interest of the people and commands the greatest and most willing self-sacrifice by the tax paying public. The consequence of this fervor is that school systems are not as much scrutinized as they should be. Indeed, it is now difficult for the public of a community to learn the facts as to the thoroughness of the discipline and of the knowledge imparted in their schools or of economy in the expenditure of their funds devoted to education. Parents are themselves not qualified to pass upon the result of a public school system in a town, county or district in such a way as to make their opinion the best criterion. Hence there is great opportunity for fustian and shoddy in the product concealed under a cloak of a pretentious curriculum and glowing annual reports.

"What we need in the country is an opportunity for standardization and comparsions of school systems in the different states and different cities. This, I think, we might have by establishing what Washington recommended —a national university in Washington.



"The Bureau of Education might well be enlarged into a university, which should not be a teaching university but one with a corps of experts who could offer to the people of all the states and the people of all local communities, the opportunity of having their respective school systems examined and reported on as to proper scope, efficiency, thoroughness and economy.

"The pressure of the taxpayers upon their particular school authorities to apply for an examination and report would be so great that it would soon become equivalent to a compulsory system. It would stimulate school authorities to earnest work. It would eliminate shoddy, pretence and show, would minimize exploiting and publicity methods, and would give a proof of excellence and comparative high standing that would be incontestable."

A refusal to admit immigrants because of ignorance is an acknowledgement of this country's incompetence to deal with the immigrant question, according to Dr. Albert Shiels, Director of Reference and Research of the New York City Department of Education. Dr. Shiels contended that immigrant illiteracy constituted more than 90 per cent of the total illiteracy in large cities. In an analysis of both skilled and unskilled labor Dr. Shiels indicated that illiteracy and inability to speak and understand English handicapped by a proper distribution of skilled labor and isolated the immigrant in urban communities.

Cornmeal and Fig Pudding

One cupful cornmeal, six cupfuls milk, two eggs, one cupful molasses, one cupful finely chopped figs, one teaspoonful salt. Cook the cornmeal with four cupfuls of milk, add the figs and salt. When the mixture is cool add the eggs well beaten. Pour into a baking dish and bake in a moderate oven for three hours or more. When thoroughly cooked add the remainder of the milk, without stirring the pudding. This may be served with whipped cream or a custard sauce.

ULTON'S $75,000 POST OFFICE OPENED TODAY

ly Risers Were on Hand to See ars and Stripes Raised to Top-mast by Postmaster's Nephew

Old Glory waved its starry folds this morning above the city's iful new post office. To Maurice Conley, nephew of Postmas- Conley, fell the honor of raising the national emblem. The hour at 6:30 and Old Sol rose in all his glory to make bright and ome, and even phophetic, the occasion for Fulton, "the biggest city known."

In its location at Broadway and First st., the fine structure, har- onious and artistic in every line, stands free and clear from every obstruction. The building occupies a space 60 feet by 90 feet, and is of two stories. The architecture is of Grecian design; five massive Doric columns mark the front of the building. The exterior is built of natural limestone brought from Indiana. The floors and roof are built of re-inforced concrete while the public lobby, subject to great wear, has a Tarrazzo floor which is made of marble chips and best Portland cement. This is a spacious room with many num- bered windows to serve mail; the money order department being at the south end.

The work room is very commodious and supplied with all the latest devices for doing rapid work. It is lighted from four skylights easily operated, for ventilation from the main floor, and several win- dows. There are two fire- and burglar-proof vaults in easy reach for postage stamps, envelopes and valuable papers.

The second floor contains six large rooms and several smaller rooms for needed cases. At the central front is the room that will be used for the civil service examiners. Proper desks and chairs, etc., form the furnishings of this room. The inspectors' "lookout" for general supervision has a well chosen location. The postmaster's room at the north is a large, beautifully furnished room. The walls in soft tan coloring, the brown of the woodwork, the handsome sturdy tables, desks and large chairs of simple, though fine design, and in finish corresponding to the woodwork, all go toward making this room, from the softly tinted ceiling to the harmonius brown rug covering the floor, a correct and modern setting for the youngest post- master Fulton has ever known. Peter I. Conley.

The painting and decorating is of marked quality. The white finish of the plaster throughout the building is hung with muslin to conceal any hair checking which might occur in the white coat, and to present a surface of rough though even texture for the finish.

The lead and oil with which the building is finished throughout is applied on the muslin and stippled into the fabric. The color scheme in work room and all offices is light tan; the ceiling extending to the picture molding. The side walls are a deeper shade, and with dark oak wainscoating.

The walls of the toilet rooms are of light green and are models of sanitary planning. Pumbling, bowls, floors, and every detail is perfectly constructed.

The lobby is finished in gray green, and quarter sawed white oak, which came from Minnesota, trim the lobby, and too the halls, and postmaster's room. This is finished in a soft brown tone and has a wax coating. All other wood work throughout the building is of North Carolina pine, stained medium oak, with gloss finish. The floors throughout are of maple.

OBSERVER COMMENDS JOSLIN

Upon another page of this issue appears a reply to Edward Joslin's attack leveled at one of this city's churches. Observer's letter offers a few vulnerable spots for attack, and readers will do well to read, ponder and--REPLY.

Magnificent Building the Product of Ability of Government Engineers and Contractor F. R. Pratt

The heating and lighting is complete. The building is equipped for the use of both gas and electricity. The plumbing is sanitary in every detail—the best having been used regardless of cost.

The basement contains a rest room for the rural carriers. It has individual lockers, tables, chairs, etc. Adjoining is a room with a perfectly appointed shower bath arrangement. Outside is a court like arrangement where the horses may be tethered.

The government contractors, John G. Unkefer and Co., with Frederick R. Pratt, vice president, were in charge of the work. The cost of the building, aside from the lot is $75,000. Of this sum $40,000 has been paid for labor and material purchased from local merchants and lumbermen. To skilled mechanics and other laborers $22,000 was paid. Similar postoffices are now in process of erection by this company in Kentucky and Ohio, also at Cortland, N. Y.

Within the last few years Mr. Pratt has had charge of govern- ment work in Pennsylvania, Ohio, North Carolina, South Carolina, Indiana and other states. Mr. Pratt was born at Gilbertsville but left home at an early age to make his way in the world. Fulton's fine postoffice is an example of how well he has succeeded.

The staff at the postoffice is as follows: P. T. Conley, P. M.; T. H. Hargrave, Asst. P.M.; clerks, W. N. Lalonde, J. T. Fassell, Florence Deuel, Anna Brannan; mailing division clerks, T. H. Per- kins, F. L. Jennings, W. H. Hornibrook; City carriers, Aurie Palmer, J. Cox, F. Hewitt, F. Haskins, R. Rich, B. Waugh, S. Frawley; rural carriers, F. Middleton, F. L. Darling, F. Boigeol, F. W. Austin, F. Blodgett, R. Crandall, E. Menter, Anna Palmer, J. Dunn; aux. clerk, F. Brown; sub carriers, J. Barker, J. Storm; engineer, B. Slanson.

The postoffice is open from 7 a.m. until 8 p.m. Money order department from 8 a.m. until 6 p. m.; lobby open at all times.

TURKISH FORTS SMASHED BY MONSTER ALLIES' GUNS

By Herbert Temple

London, Mar. 1.—With the Anglo-French fleet fifteen miles in- side of the Dardanelles, and the British and French flags flying over six of the reduced Turkish works, the bombardment of the inner forts continues with unabated fury. The British and French war fleet is now within three miles of the narrowest point of the strait and have already silenced the strongest of the forts defending the waterway. Never before in history, in any operations by land or by sea, has there been a cannonade of such fury as that which wrecked and smashed the Turkish forts on the Asiatic and European sides of the Dardanelles' entrance. Turkish works near Helles Burnu, Kum Kale, Sedd-El-Bahr, Erenkui and Kale Sultanie were supposed to be almost as impregnable as Gibraltar. In addition to the natural and the superimposed strength of the fortifications they were defended by guns of enormous calibre. But they proved no match against the powerful armaments of the fleet.

Dispatches from Athens state that, when Anglo-French forces were landed to take possession of the silenced Turkish forts they found a scene of such carnage as had seldom been witnessed upon a field of battle. Excavations seventy feet wide and thirty feet deep had been torn up by theb ursting of the shells; guns had been shat- tered, the fragments tearing asunder the bodies of the Turkish artill- erymen in the forts. Magazines had been exploded, sending a storm of exploding shells and wreckage through the steel and concrete masonry. Parts of human bodies and fragments of shattered arma- ments were found a mile and more away from the scene.

The Queen Elizabeth of Britishh navy and sister ships carrying 15-inch guns have joined the fleet and the mighty guns of these super- dreadnaughts, as powerful as the strongest of the Krupp mortars, are thundering against the remaining works.

Landing parties are preparing for extensive operations against the 65,000 Turks massed upon both sides of the Dardanelles east of Fort Nagura (a work that is still in action against the fleet). These forces, including French and British marines and artillery, have been landed on both the Asiatic and European sides of the waterway.

High in the sky, above the smoke shrouded ships and the flam- ing forts, French and British aeroplanes have hovered, dropping bombs upon the Turkish works or directing the fire of the ships.

Despite the efforts of the Turkish authorities to keep secret the success of the allies, it has become known in Constantinople and panic is reported to reign there. Thousands of persons are fleeing from the city taking their portable effects with them. The military precautions have been redoubled. Field Marshal Von der Goetz, of the German army, who is military dictator of Constantinople, is taking final and extreme meausres to save the city. The Turks have threatened to set the torch to the Turkish capital if it falls into the hands of the allies and there is little doubt that this threat will be carried out. The allied fleet is still far from Constantinople, but their present rate of progress gives indications that the fleet will be able to push through the Sea of Marmosa and thence to the Turkish capital.

As rapidly as the ships have advanced the channel of the water- way has been swept clear of mines. Hundreds of these mines were collected and destroyed.

NOT ONE GERMAN SUBMARINE LOST

This Is Germany's Claim, Since Beginning of Warfare Beneath Water's Surface

By Frederick Werner

Berlin, Mar. 1.—via Amsterdam.—Not a single German sub- marine has been lost in the under sea warfare against Great Britain and France, it was asserted at the admiralty today. Reports from French and British sources that from two to six German submarines had been destroyed since the blockade went into effect on February 18 were declared wholly untrue.

The success of the submarine operations is expected to have a marked effect upon the reply to the recent American note transmitted to Berlin. According to information from reliable sources, this reply which probably will be sent this week will inform the United States that Germany is unwilling to drop her submarine campaign against England.

Captain Persius, the famous naval critic of the Tageblatt, con- tributes an article today bearing out this belief. He says: "We must firt await for publication of the contents of the American note to our government. Then it will be possible to take up a definite posi- tion regarding the question whether a change in our naval policy shall be considered.

"It may already be stated that the activity of submarines which have begun promisingly, must continue. If any mitigation of our method of warfare were to be contemplated it could only be out of consideration for the interests of the neutral.

"Against England every means will be resorted to to attain our object."

Spanish Socialists Protest Neutrality

Madrid, Mar. 1.—Many demonstrations in which Spanish par- ticipation in the war was urged were held in Spain on Sunday. The most imposing gathering was at Barcelona, where Socialist radical speakers protested against Spain's attitude of neutrality and warmly upheld the cause of the allies.

Senor Lerroux declared that the Spaniards should change their attitude and co-operate with the allies in their triumphs, as Spain would otherwise be excluded from the peace conferences which will follow the conflict.

Ate the conclusion of the speech there were prolonged cheers and cries of "Long live France, England and Belgium."

At Valencia and Tuelva demonstrations of sympathy were held before the Belgian consulate.

GERMAN ARMIES MENACES GET TO FRENCH CAPITAL

By Franklin P. Merrick

Paris, Mar. 1.—Terrific efforts are being made by the French to break the German lines in the Champagne district in order to force a retirement of the German forces between the Aisne and Oise rivers. In the past five days at least thirty attacks have been made by the French against the German lines between Souain and Servor, north of Perthes, Beausejour and Les Hurlys. The German armies lying in the angle formed by the junction of the Aisne and Oise rivers will continue to be a menace to Paris until they are forced to retire. These amries are only forty miles from Paris and if General Von Kluck could pierce the French lines with a sudden movement near Soissons he could not only drive in the section of Paris, but could split the entire French forces in two. That the French war office regards the fighting in the Campagne as being of vital importance is shown b yespecial pains taken to enumerate small gains.

In West Flanders the Belgians are continuing their activity against the extreme German right using both infantry and artillery in their attacks. Heavy artillery fire is reported from the district northeast of Amiens and south of the Lys as well as in the valley of the Meuse.

In the Vosges mountains the struggle for strategic heights is becoming fiercer. The Germans have been reinforced with land- sturm united from southern Belgium where they have been used as patrols and as guards for the lines of communication.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

London, Mar. 1.—Premier Asquith announced in the House of Commons this afternoon that the British Gov- ernment had decided to prevent com- merce of any kind from reaching or leaving Germany. This means that no foodstuffs of any kind will be al- lowed to reach Germany. The em- bargo will also include all raw ma- terials. This action was taken by the British Government in retaliation for Germany's submarine warfare against English merchant shipping. England will now try to starve Germany into submission. It is understood notes were sent to all neutral countries in- cluding the United States stating Great Britain's intention before an- nouncement was made in the House of Commons. Premier Asquith's an- nouncement is of great importance to neutral nations including the United States.

Berlin, by wireless.—Sunday's fight ing in the western theatre was the firecest of the operations in the last two months. The French army in its attempt to cut through the German lines in Champagne and the Argonne is using great numbers of men. To region.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

CIDER

SWITCH off on the beer and the porter and whiskey, the ale and the stout and the vodka and wine. Away with the liquids that make you feel frisky, fall back on the harmless and sweet apple brine. Now what can compare with a draught of sweet cider that comes from the depths of the little brown jug? You've got as much chance as a fly with a spider to helplessly lie from this drink on the rug. Just drink all you want and you'll merely be merry; you won't walk around like a flat footed goose. You won't even act like a brainless canary, confining yourself to the old apple juice. I've yet to see mortals fight, quarrel and grapple and act like a fool or a sick lightning bug who limit themselves to the juice of the apple that comes from the depths of the little brown jug. Now what in the deuce can a fellow be thinking who parts with his wages for pretzels and beer, who spends all the night in promiscuous drinking and wakes in the morn with his head feeling queer? I can't understand why a man will go spilling the fluid down his throat known as "water of joy"; the stuff packs a punch that is dazing and killing; it plays with his life like a babe with a toy. Oh, part with the liquor and be a self guider! You'll travel through life with the speed of a tug. Just limit yourself to the sweet apple cider that comes from the depths of the little brown jug.

EXPRESSIONS POLITICAL OF EMPIRE STATE EDITORS

Condemnation of recklessness and extravagance and a desire to see that money is wisely spent is not hostility to the workmen's compensation law as a principle, however, the wasters try to so make it appear. The Republican party is not to blame that Governor Glynn adopting the law as his child failed to put aside money for its sustenance. The governor made a claim to economy based on failure to support his pet schemes. Now the mahogany desks, brass inkstand and generally ornamental crowd embracing about 500 Tammany men prior to election, comes forward with a demand for money from the party it worked against, condemns a desire to know where the money is going as hostility and objects to reduced salaries or to economy.—Watertown Standard.

A comparison with the votes cast for the candidates for president in 1912 when the Democratic candidate received 6,293,019, the Progressive candidate 4,119,507 and the Republican candidate 3,484,956, shows that in two years the Republican party jumped from last place into first.—Cortland Standard.

Republican State administraitno's in heritance financially from the Democrats, as stated by Comptroller Travis: "Five millian dollars' worth of unpaid bills, a shortage of $15,000,000 to finish our canal, and a budget calling for expenditures of $30,000,000 more than the income of the State." Governor Glynn practiced "economy" with a vengeance.—Newburgh News.

When an overwhelmingly Democratic legislature of a State, as almost unanimously Democratic as Texas, refuses to pass a resolution, indorsing President Wilson and his policies, it begins to look as if the people in all parts of the country were getting wise to the state of things.—Niagara Falls Gazette.

We venture to state that were a vote to be taken tomorrow, there would be an overwhelming majority in favor of the return to Republican policies at Washington. There is no doubt about how the business interests would vote and there is no doubt how the working man would vote. They are tired and sick of the whole situation all over the country and eagerly hope for the return of prosperity under Republican rule.—Pough keepsie Eagle.

REMOVE THE NOSTRUM

The Fulton Evening Times has been working earnestly to bring into the greatest possible prominence the great vitality of its columns as an advertising medium.

Its consistently sincere efforts have done much to turn the tide of favorable opinion to its columns. The people of this city and surrounding country appreciate the enterprise—they want the paper because it is the only home daily, and they like the idea of getting the news of the world in tabloid form.

In too many instances advertisers have but one thought—that in order to get results they must advertise in the medium that can boast of a great circulation. They do not ask the newspaper agent how that circulation came to reach its proportions, nor do they ask another question of vital importance to them, is that circulation the result of a great natural desire on the part of the public to have as a visitor each day that one particular paper?

These are questions the advertiser has a right to ask. He is the man who is spending money to secure returns, to get more business. He is the man who is furnishing sinews to the newspaper that he may get his wares before the homemakers, the women and the men who are the real buyers of the country.

Now why should the advertiser ask of the agent these questions? The answer may be contained in these words: First, because, unless the medium in which he is seeking to reach the people is giving something the people want, without the assistance of premiums, clubbing offers, etc., he is being cheated. The boasted circulation is the result of catch-penny schemes—it is unsubstantial, and, from the ethical point of view, does not give value for value received. The people are taking into their home that particular publication because they have been led to believe they are getting something for nothing, and the advertiser foots the bill.

GIVING IN THE DOING

The Fulton Evening Times has for its foundation a circulation that was not built upon anything but merit. In the paper the people of Fulton and surrounding territory have recognized the enterprise of its founders in giving them something that they have for years wanted—a home daily newspaper; a newspaper that would pay particular attention to home affairs, besides giving them as much as they need of the doings of the world. For many years the people of Fulton have wondered why the city that is classed as the "biggest little city in the Empire State" could not support its very own daily newspaper; why this city of 10,000 plus population could not be placed upon the same footing as other towns of equal population? They asked for something they wanted, and were given instead one day a week publications. At last their questions were answered. The only way to answer such questions as were asked is to do like Governor Whitman is endeavoring to do, in the matter of retrenchment—Retrench. This fact was recognized, and the evening visitor to the reader's home is the result. The Fulton Evening Times is a fact. It is here to stay, because the people want it, and wanting it they want to see it become successful, powerful and a credit to this section of New York State. They are doing their part, for they are loyal to the enterprise. Words do not alone imply loyalty, but in the case of The Fulton Evening Times and its claims for popularity there is something of a more substantial nature than mere words—there is the unmistakable evidence that the people of this city meant exactly what and all they have said. They pay their money for the paper and what is more, they kick at things when they do not get the paper, or do not get an opportunity to pay their money for it.

Hence the vitality of the youngster, but then there are other reasons why The Fulton Evening Times is a logical and potential factor. These we shall liberate from the cage as necessity demands of us.

WINNING CONFIDENCE

As a rule advertisers keep in close touch with the trend of the times. One glaring illustration of this was the action of a great mail order house in Chicago that threw out all patent medicines and nostrums. For many years that house did a thriving business in what is known as "standard" patent medicines. And the standard patent medicines simply mean those which have been widely advertised. There were at least two reasons why the great corporation made the move. One may have been a matter of conscience. The second was the doubtful effect on sensible customers in advertising patent medicines for sale. At any rate that corporation was alive to the situation. It recognized the fact that public sentiment was against patent medicines. This is one of the perquisites of greatness. Great merchants everywhere endeavor to hold the confidence, respect and esteem of the public. They secure access to the arteries of trade by keeping in touch with public sentiment. Big business men have their fingers constantly on the pulse of the public.

Now public sentiment is with The Fulton Evening Times. It is against the merchant who dares to ignore the value of this paper's columns as advertising mediums, and the same public sentiment ridicules the merchant who pays double space rates to have his advertising appear in juxtaposition to that of the big city merchant, in the big city daily. This is a plain statement of facts. Inquiry will demonstrate its truth.

FOOLISHNESS OF IT ALL

For the enlightment of the reader—not the advertiser—the foregoing paragraph means simply this:

The Fulton Evening Times is a vital force by reason of its circulation as an advertising medium. Its space rates are as low as consistent with sound business principles, yet you are treated to the spectacle upon every day of the week of seeing in the columns of the city dailies the announcements of merchants of Fulton who are paying more than twice or thrice the space rates charged by this paper for the privilege of bringing into our city the advertising of the big merchants and, in certain instances, these same men are the loudest in the hue and cry of "Trade at Home." Continuing, the spectacle witnessed by you every day of the week is that there are merchants of Fulton who buy in the city papers space to the amount of three or four inches, which appears upon one page, while upon a page immediately and directly opposite there is always to be found the announcement of the local merchant's large competitor.

"Buy at Home," yes, but can the merchant expect to get well quick; can he expect to cure the ailment known as the buy-away-from-home habit by taking the kind of medicine he is taking out of a spoon?

We say that the only way to effectually cure the Fulton and other town ailments is to throw out the nostrums—all mention of the things that do not speak for Fulton's independence and greatness.

Opinions

Against New Colleges

A dispatch from Watertown, the estimable little capital of Jefferson county, brings the melancholy news that a generous citizen of that Black River London, the Hon William Pitt Herring, is about to found there a college, Herring College, to perpetuate his name and to "further education in all its branches." Herring College! There are now in these United States nearly or quite 600 colleges, unversities and technological schools. In 1913 New York had 35, Pennsylvania 42, Illinois 32, Ohio 40, Iowa 26, Missouri 26, Tennessee 24, Virginia 23, Michigan 33, North Dakota 26 of these institutions—most of them superfluous, many of them meager of endowment and starved of instruction. * * * It is wiser to add to the plant of existing schools than to create new ones, destined to be permanently parochial and serving no real need. Less than 60 miles from Watertown is Canton, the site of St. Lawrence University. Why not help this or some other New York college? * * * There should be co-ordination and increase of educational powers, not weak, sporadic, flickering lights of pseudo-cultivation. In fact, to found a college now is mere waste. There are altogether too many already.—New York Sun.

A Gluttonous Institution.

The State spends a great deal of money on its big farm show, which is held every autumn at Syracuse. The show isn't altogether concerned with the practical business of increasing the quality and quantity of the State's produce, as every one knows who has attended a State fair.

It costs a lot of money to conduct this big annual show, and there is room for doubt whether or not it is worth the cost. Possibly its expense could be cut down with advantage to the much-abused taxpayer.

The State Fair Commission has some big ideas. It asks this year for $200,000 for a horticultural building on the grounds in Syracuse, and another $10,000 for "a woman's building." Incidentally, why confine the building to the edification of one "woman?" We suppose this building is to instruct the womenfolk how to cook, wash, take care of the baby and keep the hens off the back step.

The commission asks also for certain maintenance charges of $95,000, not to mention the trifling figure of $25,700 for salaries and expenses of the commissioners. All told, the big show would cost $420,700 this year, which would leave, of course, the horticultural and the woman's building for use next year.

We don't mappen to know how much the State has sunk in the fair grounds, but the interest charges and the depreciation must amount far up in the thousands of dollars.

The State Fair lasts a week and the $120,000 requested for this year for the mere running expenses is a considerable sum to ask for a six-day performance attendly chiefly by city and village folk. Quite a sizeable agricultural school could be run the year around for that amount.

The State Fair is too much of a "good thing." It ought to be dehorned. It ought to be sprayed with lime and sulphur to get rid of scale and other parasites. The rank growth needs thinning out. It should be trimmed. There ought to be a more scientific method of seed selection. The costly weed seeds should be eliminated. There are too many "boarders" in the stock. A large part of the fair has the foot and mouth disease and ought to be slaughtered. We expect to see some movement in this direction when the commission is reorganized through the operation of a law now in the Legislature. The thing that will help will be to give the State a commission of practical men. With a commission made up of such men as Fred W. Sessions of Utica, the State fair might be made a helpful institution, probably with the money it now costs.—Observer, Utica.

An Astounding Proposal

Through the representatives in Congress from Connecticut the Gompers party has put forward by resolution in the house of representatives a most astounding proposal. It is that the United States government shall assume liability of the consequences of labor union illegally and great immunity for law breaking and outrage by relieving the lawbreakers of the penalty thereof. It is proposed the government assume liability for the $290,000 judgment in the Danbury hatters' case. There is nation-wide sympathy for the unfortunate Danbury hatters, who will have all of their life savings taken from them if they are not relieved of a debt the law has charged against them.

The Danbury hatters were merely dupes of the big labor agitators who form the Gompers group. They ought to be relieved of the hardship by paying the cash penalty, but they ought not to be relieved by the government. The Gompers group ought to foot the bill, or devise some means by which it may be paid by public subscription. The United States government might as well go out of existence if it is to punish itself for the crimes it convicts its citizens of committing.—Albany Knickerbocker-Press.

Chicago Women

Carter H. Harrison has given Chicago straight reform government during his five terms as Mayor. On Tuesday the Democratic voters refused him a sixth nomiination. Ninety thousand women took part in the Democratic primary. They will now be called on to explain why they deserted reform and nominated a Sullivan man.

The explanation is more simple than flattering to the women. They did not vote as a separate sex, but as average residents of Chicago. The undefined "feeling" that Harrison had been Mayor long enough and the influence exerted by his powerful foes to oust him, had come to pervade the voting population, male and female.

Suffragists have always been wrong to demand votes for women on the promise that this extension of the franchise would purify politics. The only consistent and demonstrable argument in favor of female suffrage is that there can be no political democracy without. If political democracy is not essential to social justice, then equal suffrage is unimportant.—Telegraph, Philadelphia.

Mr. Barnes Sees the Point.

However one may differ with William Barnes—and the man incites opposition—it is always necessary to recognize that his comment reflects a real point of view and a constant opinion.

In saying that the attempt to pass the Argetsinger bill would provoke criticism, attack, party disorganization, he is absolutely correct, and his view coincides exactly with that of The Tribune.

He is equally right in criticising the ten thousand minimum fixed for signatures for petitions nominating candidates for Governor on the primary ballot. This is far too great a number.

As for the party convention, to indicate the party preferences for offices it is perfectly possible to hold it unofficially now. Only cowardice and fear of popular suspicion prevent such conventions. Leaders who are not afraid—and Mr. Barnes is of that number—could go ahead wth such gatherings and leave it to the people to decide whether they were actually open or boss ridden.

The short ballot, which must come, will simplify many difficulties and do much to restore the convention if it is actually needed. Meantime Mr. Barnes talks sound common sense when he warns the Republican Legislature to hold its hand this year in election law "reform."—Tribune, New York.

The End of the War

Every now and then the newspapers give prominence to a statement as to the time when this war will end. Let us not forget that at the beginning six weeks was suggested by some as its limit. During the fall it seemed to a very great many as though the spring would surely see the end of it. We know now that the end is not in sight and that guesses with regard to it are quite at random.

When General Sherman after three months of our Civil War ventured to suggest that the war might last three years and his expression found its way into the newspapers as a sensation the authorities at Washington were very much angered over it and Sherman so in unmistable terms. As a result Sherman was biter against reporters all during the rest of the war. He was right, however, and the administration quite wrong in the estimation as to the duration of the war.

If a similar wearing down process to that which proved necessary during the Civil War should be required to bring about the conclusion of the present war—and the feelings on both sides are quite as bitter—then even the longest estimate so far is not too long. In the meantime no one knows anything about it, and attempts to estimate when the war will end are the merest guesswork.—Herald, New York.

MINUTES IN MANHATTAN

By Gotham Knickerbocker

International News Service Special Dispatch

New York, Mar. 1.—The Old Hoffman House, famous for early hal fa century, and one of Manhattan's leading hosteries in the palmy days, is to go.

It will follow the equally famous Fifth Avenue Hotel, the Bartholdi and the other landmarks at Twenty-third, Broadway and Fifth Avenue into that bourne from which no superannuated hotel returns.

With the passing of the Hoffman House, famed in song and story as well as in the hearts of the millions who have in times past made the old place their temporary home, there will be nothing left but Madison Square Garden to remind the old-timers of the days when Twenty-third street was the heart of the Great White Way, when Martin's at Twenty-fifth street was almost the northern limit of the night life district.

When the original Hoffman House was built, the ground cost $5,000. The plot now has been sold for $3,500,000. So much for the unearned increment. Along with the Hoffman House proper, the purchaser bought the old Hotel Albemarle, now an annex of the Hoffman House, and on the site of the two will be erected a sixteen-story office building.

The immediate success of the Hoffman House in its first days led to frequent additions, so that, up to a few years ago, the Hoffman, with the Albemarle included, occupied all the Broadway frontage at Twenty-fifth street.

In its best days, the Hoffman House vied with the Fifth Avenue Hotel, at Twenty-third street and Fifth avenue, which, some five years ago, gave way to an office sky-scraper. The Fifth Avenue was the headquarters of the Republicans and the rival Democrats took up a reservation in the Hoffman.

Grover Cleveland stopped there frequently and was staying there when elected to the Presidency the second time. Gen. Benjamin Butler and Gen. Winfield Scott were regular patrons of the hotel.

An outgrowth of the Fifth Avenue Hotel is the famous Amen Corner, an exclusive organization of newspaper men and politicians, who hold annual dinners and pull off stunts like those of the Gridiron Club in Washington.

Behind the elevator in the Fifth Avenue, adjacent to the buffet, there were two seats, joining at a right angle, and upholstered in red plush. These seats were hidden from the lobby, and formed an excellent place for quiet conversation. The late Senator Platt, former Gov. B. B. Odell, the late Mark Hanna and many other Republican politicians of that day, along with Sam Blythe, Eddie Riggs and other political writers used to meet there each afteernoon for conferences.

Somebody dubbed the red plush benches the Amen Corner and the name stuck. The formal organization grew out of it.

A romantic incident in the history of the Hoffman House happened in 1882. An eight story addition was built on the hotel, and S. Stokes was taken into partnership. Stokes had shot James Fisk, Jr., in 1872 and had done four years in Sing Sing for the shooting. Grover Cleveland, a patron of the house, became interested in Stokes, and as President, restored Stokes' citizenship.

It was while Stokes was connected with the Hoffman House that he installed in the Twenty-fourth street bar-room, an art collection that became famous the world over. No visitor's New York stay was complete until he had seen the Hoffman House art works.

It was the northward trend of New York's business and home life that wrote the death warrants for the Fifth Avenue, the Hoffman, the Bartholdi and the other downtown hotels. People moved uptown, Harlem, the Bronx, Washington Heights, and other far-northern districts blossomed with apartment houses. The retail stores followed the march.

The theatres, perforce, followed suit and this spelled ruin for downtown hotels. Visitors to the metropolis, here for a good time, go where the crowds are to found. There are a few of the regular visitors of other days, who are clinging to the old hotels. They stayed in the Fifth Avenue until it was closed and then went to the Hoffman. Now they are going to the Holland House, a few squares up Fifth Avenue.

The last old hotel to go was the Astor House, in lower Broadway, across from the post office. Somehow, the Astor House held its patrons for years after it was entirely absolete. It finally had to give away before the approach of a new subway.

"SANITO" COOKING UTENSILS

are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

TRADE BALANCE FAVORS AMERICA

Dun's Review Sees Only Bright Prospects Ahead of Manufacturers

New York, March 1.—The volume of trade continues moderate, but is fairly well maintained. Any more rapid development of business activity and confidence is, for the time being, checked through the anxiety created b ythe growing intensity of the European war, and especially by the uncertainty as to the effect upon neutral shipping and oversea trade of the recent war zone order. The markets for both wheat and cotton have been conspicuously disturbed during the week by the foreign situation. There is, moreover, evidence in the stock market of larger foreign liquidation of securities, and the weakness of exchange also reflects the widespread perplexities of the international outlook. Meanwhile, the great volume of exports of food products, war materials and manufactured articles continues and in the latest week the trade balance in favor of this country aggregated about $32,000,000. February iron and steel business has been on a broader scale of production, with a hopeful outlook for March. In the textile markets there is fair activity and the cotton and woolen mills are well employed, but it is characteristic of the situation that while stocks in retailers' hands are not heavy, the latter are adopting the policy of buying only for immediate needs. This requires frequent purchases of comparatively small quantities, the aggregate of which is considerable. The railroads display some increase in confidence, although their earnings still fall short of last year, and the number of idle cars is greater. The boot and shoe industry reports moderate improvement. Advices from the leading commercial and industrial centers reflect a situation in which optimism is tempered by conservatism, and in which the rate of improvement varies in different sections of the country. The statistics of bank clearings show clearly how much larger the volume of transactions is in the Middle West as a result of the great demand for wheat and other cereals.

Quotations of iron and steel lack the stability of normal times and competition is keen for desirable business. Practically all departments are operating under enlarged capacity and the leading interest now has 34 furnaces active out of 59, while independent plants are running at from 50 to 75 per cent. Current demands afford encouragement, though orders from the railroads still develop slowly. Recent rail contracts involve about 20,000 tons and China is inquiring for 9,000 tons. Further lots of rails, wire rods, skelp and barb wire have been sold to the warring nations, but high ocean insurance complicates an already harassed shipping situation. A rapid advance in galvanized goods has resulted from the flurry in spelter, sheets having risen $8 a ton in the last fortnight to the highest poit in years.

This is the active season for retailers in the dry goods markets, and staple domestics, such as wide sheetings, pillows tubings, bleached cottons and linings, are in largest demand, while white goods and wash fabrics sell more freely than expected. Higher prives prevail for southern ginghams, which rules on a basis of 5c., or ½c. up from the extreme low point. War shipments of cotton duck continue large, but export trade with the Far East is negligible, except in the case of British East India. Now that arrangements have been made whereby foreign supplies of wool can be relied upon, relief is expressed in the finished material markets. Fancy woolen suitings are being bought actively for fall and values are advancing. Duplicate spring orders develop slowly, however, and considerable machinery is still unsupplied with summer business.

Ask for new prices on auto tires, also Ford supplies, including new style radiators, demountable rim wheels, slip covers, hand horns, speedometers, non-skid tires, chains. We will have a larger stock of oils, cements, patches, tire gauges, etc., than ever. Van Wagenen, IInc.

MAYORS PRAISE HEALTH WORK

Legislative Committee of State Conference Urges Adequate Appropriation for State Department

Albany, N. Y., Feb. 28.—On the ground that the educational campaign of the State Department of Health strengthens the work of local departments and gives it a backing without which local departments would be "unable efficiently to carry on such work," the State Conference of Mayors and Other City Officials thru its Legislative Committee, is urging adequate appropriations for the work of the State Department. The resolution adopted by the committee is being sent to all mayors and health officers by Mr. William P. Capes, secretary of the conference. The resolution cites the fact that the first conference of mayors devoted its entire program to "The City Healthful" and became thereby a pioneer in the agitation which brought about the demands for the present "Excellent State Health Law."

The preamble of the resolution cites the fact that the conference has persistently urged adequate appropriations by the State and its municipalities for public health work, and recommends the continuance of the educational campaign to bring about a further reduction in the State's death rate. The resolution notes with "satisfaction" that a beginning in this reduction was made last year.

The mayors and local health authorities are urged by this resolution to bring to the attention of their local representatives in the Legislature the necessity for an adequately supported state department of health that can assist in the development of local health activity.

OSWEGO'S CITIZENS OPPOSE OFFICIAL SALARY INCREASES

Concerning the proposition to make increases in city officials' salaries, the Oswego Times says: "The Times called attention briefly last night to the general objection on the part of taxpayers to increases in the salaries of city officials or the expenses of municipal government. The Times said that the burden of taxation was already quite as heavy as the taxpayer could bear without any further additions to the salary charges.

"The official figures as to municipal finances show that it is time for economy in the administration of city affairs. With a tax rate of $1.80 in 1914, one of the highest, if not the highest, in the history of the city, there is good reason for exercising restraint in city expenditures. Certainly, it is no time for increasing the salary of the city attorney from $1,200 to $2,000, as is proposed in a bill just introduced in the Legislature. This would be followed by salary advances in other city offices until quite an additional amount would be placed on the taxpaying property.

"The city budget for 1913 was $184,481, the assesed valuation was $12,891,108.62, the city tax rate was $1.52 per $100 and the county tax rate $1.56.

"The 1914 budget called for $230,550.38 the assessed valuation was $13,415,483.98, the city tax rate was $1.80 and the county tax rate was $1.34.

"These figures show that the budget inerease was $46,069.38, the valuation increase was $524,375.36 and the increase in the city tax rate was 28 cents per $100 valuation. The county rate shows a decrease, but this is due to the fact that there were no extraordinary appropriations for county purposes.

"The figures given are eloquent of the great increase in the cost of municipal administration in the past two years and is a warning to the city authorities to replace extravagance with economy. In spite of the raise of half a million dollars in valuation the budget was increased in greater proportion, making it necessary to impose a record-breaking tax rate."

Victoria Cross Awarded by King George to Man Who Chased Four Companies of German Soldiers

Edinburgh, Mar. 1.—George Wilson of Edinburgh tells how he won the coveted Victoria Cross as follows:

"The proudest minute in my life was when the King pinned the Victoria Cross on my breast and talked to me for a few minutes.

" 'You're not a very big man but you've got a very big heart. Truly, I'm proud of my soldiers.' These were the words he used, and there were tears in his eyes. The King also asked me what were my feelings while I was going through the job, and I told him the thing I remembered best was when the German officer tried to shoot me with his revolver and I put the bayonet through him.

"After the retirement from Mons the H. L. I. came to a village called Verneuil, and we entrenched there. Not far off a few snipers were potting away. One of our officers got up out of the trench and was just kneeling down and putting the binoculars to his eyes when a bullet struck him. He rolled over dead. I was a few paces off, and turning to the next man I said, 'Poor Powell is over and I'll have revenge.'

"We tried all we could to locate the snipers, and I was lucky to get a good sight of them. Two bullets from my rifle did for them, and then we advanced cautiously nearer the enemy. When we were getting nearer I was surprised to see a number of spiked bayonets. I was taken aback for a second, but then I decided to make a rush for it.

"Shouting at the top of my voice, 'Charge, men, charge!' I rushed at them. They were taken by surprise and threw down their rifles. Two men in a Middlesex regiment came up and I told them to look after the Germans. There were eight of them.

"Further along I took up my position in a trench, but when I looked over I was horrified to see men lying about in all sorts of positions. Some were dead, and others were writhing in agony. I asked the man next me what was wrong, and he said, 'It's a Maxim, and it's not done with its work yet.'

"I stood up to see for myself. The machine gun of the Germans was not a great distance off, and I said to myself 'It will kill us all if something doesn't happen to it.' I thought I would at least have one shot, and got in position to fire. The officer told me to get down, but I was so excited that I ran forward. Besides me there was a man in the Middlesex regiment, and he turned to me and said, 'Jack, will you have a try to stop that gun?' I said I would, and he replied, 'I'll go with you.'

"By this time we had got beyond range of the officer's orders, for we had gone without permission.

"Then began a journey that as long as I live will ever remain in my memory.

"The Germans saw us coming and bullets flew thick around us. My pal struck in several places and dropped. I ran zig-zag and dropped on my knees to take a shot at the operators of the machine gun. My first shot knocked the man sitting on the Maxim backwards. His place was taken by another German, but he, too, I accounted for. How I escaped being hit myself I cannot explain. There seemed to me a good providence keeping guard over me.

"When four of the Germans were killed there only remained an officer beside the gun. He had crept behind it and was waiting for me with his automatic pistol ready.

"I rushed forward, yelling at the top of my voice, when the pistol started to spit. One bullet just passed the side of my head and my ear tingled. That was all the damage that German officer did. I sprang at him in wild fury and drove the bayonet straight into his body. He collapsed, and to withdraw the steel I had to put my foot on his face. My clothes were spattered with blood, but I felt much easier in mind, and I put down my rifle and turned to the belt containing the ammunition.

"There were over 700 rounds left. I shifted the Maxim round in the direction of the Germans. They were overa hundred yards off and massed in close formation. I started firing, and to my delight I saw big holes being made in their ranks, for it was impossible to miss them. They fell in bunches, and the heaps kept pilling up.

"The enemy now saw the deadly effect of their own gun being used against themselves and sent shells in my direction. They flew on all sides of me and threw up dirt and splinters, but not once was I struck. I continued working the Maxim until the Germans fled in disorder.

"There must have been four companies of Germans altogether, and I reckon the Maxim accounted for at least half their number—200 men.

"As there was no further use in me remaining where I was I took the gun and two boxes of ammunition back to our lines. I hadn't gone very far when I began to feel sickish, but once I came near our own lads I bucked up and an officer came to meet me.

" 'There's the d——d thing that's been causing all the damage,' I said to him, and he replied, 'You have done splendidly.'

"Then I was told that my comrade was stilling lying out in the open, and I told those near me that I would bring him in. They told me not to risk it, as the snipers were again busy potting. However, I wasn't going to rest until I had made an effort to save him.

"I reached my pal all safe and lifted him on my shoulder. When I had gone a few yards a terrible hail of bullets whizzed around us. I felt the finger of one of my hands tingle. A bullet had just grazed it. My poor mate was, however, struck several times, and he did not live long after I carried him into our lines.

"His dying words to me were—'Thank God you got that gun.' "

VON HINDENBURG'S FORCES SENT BACK 11 MILES

By Francis Lavelle Murray

Petrograde, Mar. 1.—The German invasion of Poland north of the Vistula river appears to be completely shattered. The Russians, on the offensive along the entire line from the Niemen to the Vistula are dealing tremendous blows to the forces of Field Marshal Von Hindenburg.

Official reports received here today record Russian successes in all sectors. In some the Germans have been driven back eleven miles. In the Przasnysz region, where the troops of Grank Duke Nicholas have driven a wedge into the German center and are advancing toward the East Prussian frontier again, the Russians are capturing village after village, taking from 500 to 800 prisoners in each.

As a result of the fighting of the last days more than 18,000 prisoners have fallen into Russian hands. The Germans have also lost many guns.

The Russian successes in the Przasnysz, have as was predicted, forced the retirement of the Germans before Ossodiec, according to the latest reports received here. Before Grodno the Germans are also weakening and the Russians are making attacks upon their foes.

The Grodno garrison is assisting in these operations.

The Germans encountered enormous difficulties on entering Russian territory and they seem to be in dire straits in some regions. Those taken prisoners say that several German corps have exhausted their ammunition.

The following statement was issued at the war office today:

"Prisoners and guns captured north of Grodno belong to the best German corps, the Twenty-first field corps, which in peace times was stationed on the French frontier. The initiative in the fighting north of Grodno has now passed to us.

"The Germans, notwithstanding their lack of success in the Jedwabno-Bohr region, continue their attacks, which are wanting in vigor and courage.

"Our troops are seen even in sectors where we are making no serious efforts. They anticipate the advances of the enemy and are ready to rush out and attack.

"Our progress in the Przasnysz has been considerable. In other sectors the Germans are making counter attacks and bringing up new reinforcements.

"Our front on all these sectors are advancing daily. German prisoners complain that their units are inextricably confused and that it is impossible for them to maintain a semblance of order. Their ammunition supply has ceased.

"Since February 22 we have driven the enemy back eleven miles in several sectors. In others, where counter attacks have been frequent, we have advanced from two to three miles.

Russian success in the operations against the Turks in the Caucasus is announced in the following official dispatch from Tiflis:

"The Russian advance forces have reached the River Khopatchai driving the enemy before them. On the other fronts the situation is unchanged."

BEHIND FRENCH LINES IN VOSGES

Diary of a Gendarme Gives Inside History to Operations In the Valley

By A. BEAUMONT

Central France, March 1.—I have just returned to the center after a visit to the extreme right of the operations in France, and nothing can give one a better impression of the vastness of the line of warfare. From Belfort to Epinal it is nearly seventy miles; from Epinal to Nancy, forty-six miles; from Nancy to Verdun, seventy-four miles; from Rheims to Soissons, forty-four miles. It is only by numerous detours, of course, that one can now follow this line, but after traveling for days and realizing that one has only to approach within fifteen or twenty miles of any point to hear the guns and perhaps the sound of a violent local engagement, one becomes more and more impressed with the immensity of the operations.

As I pushed through Nancy the arrival of the Prince of Wales was momentarily expected, and the announcement of his coming filled the people with joy. There was a pleasure in every face, for, as far as the records of the town went, no Prince of Wales had ever visited, as an ally, Nancy in arms. Picture postcards of the Prince were visible everywhere and offered for sale in the shops.

The violence and obstinacy of the struggle in this part of the field is shown by the record of a gendarme in a tiny village through which one passes, and which has been systematically shelled by the Germans for the last two months and more. The gendarme very simply entitles his record a 'diary of the bombardment.".

shells and no damage. Sunday, Nov. "October 30," he writes, "three in eight shells, one house badly damaged, four killed in one place and seven in another; a French battery took up a position and replied. Nov. 3, ten shells, one person wounded. Nov. 18, fifty shells, three rails smashed on the railway and immediately repaired and one killed. Nov. 20, six shells, four killed."

Thence daily to the end of the month three or four shells a day, some of which struck the village church. Dec. 3, twenty-one shells, one of which killed a man who had just come to get news about his family from the gendarme.

"Dec. 4, five shells, one of which killed two men and another cut off two fingers from one as he was shaking hands with a comrade. Dec. 10, our infantry advances on the Prussian lines, and the enemy makes a desperate resistance. Dec. 12, ten shells; Dec. 19, twenty-one shells. The first killed three men who were in M. M.'s barn, and the second completely destroyed the stables of M. X. without killing any of the animals. The third killed a sergeant.

"Another destroyed the upper floor of the house of M. P. and his sister, who was just laying the table, was not injured, but a fork which she was holding in her hand was broken in twain. At M. G.'s house two men were killed. Several shells fell into the river and threw up a big spray of water. Dec. 14, eight shells about nine a.m. and six others about three p.m. One traversed a wall nearly a yard thick and killed a man at a table. A German aeroplan flew over the station at 3.30 and ropped a bomb, killin gone man and wounding another. Dec. 15, twelve shells, one man killed and nine mules injured."

For six weeks the fighting near this little village, where the gendarme so placidly wrote down his notes after counting each shell, went on uninterruptedly and suddenly became very inense. He notes in fact, on Dec. 17, thirty-seven shells. On the three following days, no shells reached the place. The French guns set up in various points had, by that time, begun to bombard the German positions, and silenced some of the German guns. He writes on Dec. 20:

"The Germans are geeting it thick; our batteries of 75, 90, 120 and 155 clatimetre guns are making a devil of a racket. tI is like the continuous roll of thunder.

"The gendarme is delighted at last to note that the Germans are "getting it." One of their positions at a certain village has been taken. Dec. 22 the Germans retake the position. Dec. 23 the French again drive them out. Their 75 mm. guns are spreading havoc among the enemy.

Dec. 24, writes the gendarme, the cannonade is furious. The ground is shaking everywhere. Our battery near the church has fired on a German aeroplane without hitting it. It is three o'clock. The aeroplane con- D. There is is bombarded by a battinues its flight beyond the village of tery of our 75-guns, and hit by the third shell. The aeroplane drops like a stricken bird, all in flames, and the two German officers in it are burnt to death. The machine is completely destroyed.

Dec. 25, the French fired on a German aeroplan, and they fired on two of the French, both without any result. No more German shells have reached the village. The French had been bombarded by two guns hidden in a cellar, and since those two guns were discovered and silenced by the FFrench batteries, the Germans have not been able to reach the French in the village any more. But still the fighting goes on within hearing of the village, and the German and French battries are firing away day and night.

As I left the Vosges the tops of the hills were covered with white, and if the wounded suffer in fair weather, we may well imagine what they endure in the snow. In Alsace, I was told, there had been some particularly severe fighting last week around lower and upper Aspach and Mjchelbash, where the French and German trenches are within only a few hundred yards of each other. Between the trenches there are numerous barbed wire fences erected by both sides. The French received orders to clear the German wires, which they did in spite of a furious rifle fire. They moved on further to the edge of the German trenches, but finally had to fall back owing to superior numbers. In their retreat they were unable to take with them all the wounded owing to the barbed wire.

At dusk the Red Cross stretcher bearers approached with the Red Cross emblems and attempted to reach the wounded. Three times they tried to do so, and each time they were driven back by a furious rifle discharge from the German lines. Twice again during the night they tried to get near the wounded, raising hihg their mantles to show that they carried no flag. But still the Germans would not let them approach. It was not till the next day that some of the wounded were brought back. During the night several of their comrades had died from exposure in the snow.

German aeroplanes had been making repeated attempts recently to reach Belfort and one morning, at nine o'clock, three of them were seen coming up the Rhine over Piteerhausen.

LIKENS SIN TO BRAMBLES, ETC.

Sunday Says There Never Was a Time When Sin Was So Easy

Sunday preached Saturday afternoon on the fir tree. His text was:—

Isaiah 55:13: Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the briar shall come up the myrtle tree.

It takes very little spiritual discernment to see all the way through the Bible, especially the Old Testament, that God is talking to us in pictures. That's because, the laws of the mind require that mode of teaching. You try and communicate any kind of an idea to a child and you will see at once that without the help of pictures it is almost impossible. That is the way Jesus taught. There has never been a successful teacher in any age of the world's history who did not follow similar practice. When God wanted man to see anything He first told him what it was like. That was making word pictures.

You can bet He didn't come here on a vacation. While He was here He gave the human mind all that it was capable of holding.

I read "Without a parable spake He not unto any man." That's because He wasn't teaching to put in time, and so He used plenty of pictures to enable us to see important things which He came to enlighten us about.

There has never been a language that didn't have its beginning in pictures. You have all seen men who appeared to be speechless if their hands were tied. Take the Frenchman, for instance. He talks all over when he talks. He talks with his head, his shoulders, his arms, his eyes and body. Why? He wants others to see things the same way he sees them. This is also true of the German and the Jew. Especially is this true of the American Indian. He talks so largely in signs that deaf mutes can understand him.

In al our kindergardens and primary departments the teachers make much use of pictures. They must use pictures or they cannot teach anything. Pictures are always attractive one can read them so readily. There is never any brain fag in learning things we can see and grasp at a glance. That's wey the "movies" have taken such a strong hold upon the people—it's so much easier to read the story in pictures than in a printed book.

Some preachers would get along a whole lot better if they would use more illustrations. I am knocked by all sorts of knockers because I use so many.

Perhaps I don't use enough, and that's why I am handed so much criticism.

All minds in the formative period of life think in pictures, even before they are able to do any thinking in words. When God told Adam to name the animals it was the same as if God had said to him: "Study moving pictures."

The Bible is a great picture book. It is the most wonderful picture book ever made—never wears out. Children soon tire of the nursery pictures. You can go through the Bible and see all the pictures in it in a short time, and yet it thrills with new interest all the way along and never wears out.

The Bible keeps up with us all through life. When we grow it grows. As soon as we see one thing it shows us another. Before God undertook to say much about salvation He filled the Bible full of pictures to show us what it was like.

Perhaps Adam was in the Garden of Eden hundreds of years before he could find a name big enough for the lion. Probably spent months watching crickets and toads before his eyes were big enough to se the lion all at once. That's the way to lear things—a little at a time.

Some fools think they can learn all about God right off the reel. You are a fool if you think so. Most of you haven't learned the A B C's about God.

You're a lot of fools—I don't care who you are—if you think you have learned all that there is to be learned about God. You might live to be 1,000 years old and you could keep on learning about God.

Briars and Thorns Cut Out all Growth

In the text God has given us two contrasting pictures. A thing is made clearer by contrast. On the one hand we see the pictures of desolation, and over against that we find a scene of thrift and happiness.

There were no thorns or briars in this world until sin gained a foothold.

When the devil came he brought brambles and thorns, and has been making trouble ever since. When thorns and briars cover the field nothing can grow—everything else is choked out by the weeds and thistles.

The same is true with sin. Give sin the right to reign and it will cover the earth with desolation. Nothing good could flourish where thorns cover the land; it makes it the hiding place of snakes, lizards and all manner of unclean and loathsome reptiles. It's the same with wickedness.

Don't you know that every bad man in a community strengthens the devil's mortgage.

There was no trouble in this world until sin came into it and sowed the seeds of the brambles and thorns, from which sprang unrest and unhappiness and vice and evil and all the other things that have so often helped to make this poor, old world look as though the devil had a mortgage on it.

You would be a fool to go out and eeat brambles and thorns and pass up a nice omelet, wouldn't you? And yet you will go out and show a preference for the brambles and thorns of sin, instead of grasping the nicer things with which God strews your path.

You're a fool to pluck brambles and thorns when you know they mean dissolution, and the pretty flowers of happiness and contentment and virtue are to be so easily gathered.

Suppose the only ones in Philadelphia were sinners, and hen you would see what would happen to virtue. If you would rather have misery and misrule and briars and thorns, you can take the devil and go to the devil with him. Every bad man makes it easier for the devil to thrive in Philadelphia and to send more souls to hell, and every good man makes it harder for him to do business in your city.

I saw in one of your papers where two columns of saloons were advertised for sale right in your city. There will be more than that for sale before we get through. I believe that the people of this State, if the question were put up to them squarely, would wipe out the saloons in a jiffy.

All the Legislature has to do is to give Brumbaugh a chance to sign a local option bill, and it won't be long before the liquor people go out of business in your State.

I haven't anything against the bartender or the little saloon-keeper, personally. I'd help either of them if they were down and out, just as I would help any other man who is down and out. But you can take it from me that I am after booze and those who make it, to the limit.

I believe that every saloon in this Commonwealth will soon have to close up, just as I am sure that in every other part of the country we are going to see this weapon of the devil smashed.

If Gogernor Brumbaugh is given an opportunity, I know, Christian man that he is, that he will help to smash the booze evil. Just let the Legislature of Pennsylvtania give Brumbaugh a chance to sign a local option bill and you bet he'll sign and help to give this spawn of the devil the rinky-dink.

Just see how every hellish thing is hatched and hidden in the saloon—thievery, gambling, prostitution, graft corruption, wickedness of all kinds. The life of a bad man is more of a curse to the place in which he lives than a mass of matted thorns would be in a field.

His vote, his indifference helps to shield and shelter that which would tear down a home. His life is a curse. Nowhere can we find a bad man compared with anything good—always something worthless and devilish. You will notice this in reading the First Psalm. On the other hand is a simile for the good man—always something good—salt—light—and the Palm tree.

Thec hapter from which my text is taken is full of pictures, which are meant to show the blessedness of righteousness. There are enough pictures in one chapter from the Songs of Solomon to keep an artist busy the rest of his life. Take the Bible and go through it carefully and see for yourself, see that God wants us to realize that being religious in the way the Bible teaches makes us the brighest and happiest. "Instead of thorn shall come up the fir tree." There is not to be any amalgamation—it reads "thorn and fir." You see the thorn gives way to the fir.

Never a Time When Sin Was so Easy

I am satisfied that there has never been a time in the history of the world when it is harder to live a consistent Christian life than now.

There is too much, good Lord, good devil about some people's religion. They are walking a tight-rope with the devil. Some of you are afraid to come out for Jesus Christ because you fear you will lose a chance to put your feet under some society belwether's mahogany and drink her booze. You might offend some Unitarian.

I believe that the conflict between God and the devil, between right and wrong, between good and evil is hotter than ever in all the centuries that have gone before. I don't believe the allurements of sin were ever more fascinating or more insidious; I don't believe there was ever a time since Adam was turned out of the Garden of Eden when pitfalls were more dangerous or more deadly than today.

Never a time when religion has been reduced to so much form and ritualism.

In the mind of Jesus religion was not to build up the church. The church was to build up religion. Religion is not the end, but the means to the end. Religion does not consist in doing a lot of special things, but in doing all things in a special way, as God directs.

The Pharisees were the religious highbrows of their day. Jesus had no more use for moral snobs than society snobs.

BIRD HABITS SHOULD BE UNDERSTOOD

Whether a bird is beneficial or injurious to farmers depends almost entirely on what it eats. The Bureau of Biological Survey of the Department of Agriculture has conducted, for some years, a study of the various common birds which are useful to farmers. In the case of the birds which feed to some extent on the crops of the farmers, the question of what they eat is of great importance and it is only by means of an examination of the stomachs of the birds that their regular food can be obtained. Within certain limits, birds eat the kind of food that is most accessible, and if their natural food has been destroyed, unintentionally, by the farmer, they sometimes injure the crops, when they would not otherwise do so if their habits were better understood.

The Department of Agriculture has issued a Bulletin No. 630, on the food habits of the common birds, which would be of great interest to any one interested in birds in relation to agriculture. Congressman Luther W. Mott has a limited supply of these bulletins and will be glad to send them to any one who applies.

OBITUARY

On Sunday, Feb. 21, Lena Young Gorham, wife of William W. Gorham, died at her home on North Seventh street, this city. Mrs. Gorham was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robinson Young of Palermo, N. Y., where she lived until her marriage. She attended Fulton High school and Training class, and taught for some time. Since her marriage she had lived most of the time in Fulton.

There are few of whom it could be more truly said that she lived for others. She had been in ill health much of the time for several years, but through it all her patience and courage made her appear stronger than she was. She was a woman of rare ability and originality, and loved to entertain her friends, who will long remember her hospitality. As wife, mother, sister and friend, she will be sorely missed. She is survived by her husband, two children, Howard W., and Doris M. Gorham; two sisters, Mrs. William Briggs of Syracuse and Miss May Young of Mount Vernon; and by two brothers, Charles W. Young of Seattle, Wash., and Tracy M. Young of Palermo.

F. W. SARR HAS TAKEN UP NEW POSIITON

Received Appointment Last Week as Second Deputy Highway Commissioner.

Fred W. Sarr leaves Fulton today to assume his duties as second deputy highway commissioner at Albany at $6,000 per year.

Three years ago Mr. Sarr resigned as division engineer of the highway department to assume charge of the engineering work connected with the H. P. Burgard canal contract here in Fulton. The dams and locks built at Oswego and Minetto were constructed under his direction as was all the dredging on this level.

Upon the entry of the Whitman administration into power every effort was made to secure the very best assistance possible for the highway commissioner and Mr. Sarr's name was always among those mentioned. His appointment was announced last week, so he leaves Fulton today for Albany.

Those who had the privilege of knowing Mr. Sarr and his family will regret their leaving Fulton and are certaoin that they carry with them the esteem and best wishes of us all.

DON'T THROW AWAY GOOD WILL

SEVERAL PUBLICITY EXPERTS RECENTLY GAVE THEIR OPINIONS ON PRESENT ADVERTISING CONDITIONS.

J. B. Shelffield, advertising director of Gimbel Brothers, New York city, in discussing the temptation to discontinue advertising, has the following to say:

"Probably more money is wasted in advertising by running consistently in a publication for a long time, and then suddenly dropping it, than in any other way.

"It amounts to deliberately throwing away the good will which the readers of that publication have built up for the advertiser's name and product.

"It is better to advertise moderately, but regularly, than to use larger copy spasmodically."

H. K. McCann, the well known advertising agent, says that persistent advertising pays, because:

"Advertising is friendly. It persaudes. Slowly but inevitably, it creates the attitude of good will and confidence. It brings customers—who stay. A business built up in this way is built on a firm foundation. It's the kind of success that lasts. But it cannot be done in a day—or a month. Nothing but persistent advertising will accomplish this sort of success."

CLEVELAND IN 1915

This Is An Off Year for Fellows Who Predict for the Naps.

By Frank G. Menke

Ed Bang, who writes for the Cleveland News, advises all comers to "Watch the Indians in 1915," and darned if we don't agree with Ed that the oncetime Naps might bear watching.

Among other things, Ed says:

"It has been history that every time a Cleveland Club was touted highly it has fallen down and that it has made its best showings when least expected."

Ed goes on to recite history.

From 1904 on to 1908 the sporting experts figured the Naps as possible pennant folks and each year the Naps smashed the figures by finishing a mile or two behind the parade. During the 1908 winter, the Naps weren't figured to have much of a look-in and what happened? These pesky Naps finished just one-half a game behind the pennant winning Tigers—a half game and no more—after the most thrilling pennant fight in the American League's history.

The Naps were untouted in 1913. No one figured that they had a chance, yet the Naps acted as runners up to the Athletics from the start practically to the finish of the 1913 season. Had it not been for those five or six straight beatings doled out to the Naps by the Senators on the "Nap's" last swing east in 1913 there might have been a different story to tell about the 1913 baseball season.

Because of their great work in 1913 the Naps were "doped" for 1-2-3 in the 1914 race. And the Naps finished eighth—so far down in the American League cellar that they nearly shoved out the foundations.

The 1915 Naps—newly nicknamed the Indians—are an uncertain proposition. Manager Joe Birmingham has a team of youngsters. They may deliver—and they may not. But no matter how poorly the 1915 team shows it is certain that it must be an improvement on that 1914 Cleveland outfit.

The pitching staff is giving Birmingham the most worry. On paper it looks good, but what will it do on the ball field is a question that won't find its answer until the test comes.

Folks on the outside are amazed because Birmingham is keeping Morton, a pitcher, whose 1914 record was oen victory and 13 defeats—a percentage of .071—probably the worst ever turned in by a major league pitcher over such a stretch of combats. Yet those who have seen Morton work assert that he will develop into one of the best pitchers in the game.

"That boy Morton is a comer," says Bang, one of the best judges of ball players in the country. "He has terrific speed, amazing curves and a good head. He's inclined to wildness but he probably will be cured of that next season.

Morton is a powerfully built kid and can stand the pace better than any man who has pitched for Cleveland in many years. Morton's showing in 1914 was miserable but it wasn't altogether his fault. The men behind him kicked away game after game and things broke badly for him all around. But watch him in 1915. If he gets control you'll see a real pitcher."

Lajoie's absence from the Indian lineup may be felt—and it may not. Larry hit only about .260 last year—a figure that Rogers, the new second-sacker, is expected to beat. Rogers is a pretty fielder and covers a lot of ground.

One of the main reasons for the poor showing of the 1914 Cleveland team was because the team was spent by internal strife. The cliques are said to have been broken up and the team now is weeded into one compact body. With new blood in the lineup, and unjinxed by the "deposters" pennant predictions it might be well to take Ed Bang's advice and

"Watch the Indians in 1915!"

Highway Officials to Meet

The town highway superintendents of the county will meet at the Court House, Oswego, tomorrow afternoon at 1 o'clock for the annual conference. Third Deputy Commissioner of Highways W. F. THE CITY MANAGER.

It is sometimes argued that, although the city manager form has the obvious advantage of providing a trained executive head for the city government, the man cannot be found who is really expert in all the diverse affairs of a large municipality. But if the search for such a man would be fruitless is it not equally idle to expect under the commission form of government such degree and division of expert knowledge among the councilmen as will enable each of them to become an ideal department head?—American City.

MODEL CITY OF JUVENILES.

Municipality in Illinois Run by Young People of Both Sexes.

When the Educational Club of Ridgewood, Ill., confronted with the fact that it was doing much for the minds of adults, but was neglecting the children, decided to form a model city of juveniles within the city to train the young in practical citizenship, the idea was immediately popular among the children. The city has been organized and christened "Ridgewoodville" and has the distinction of being the most complete child city in the world.

The children have elected municipal officials, from mayor down, and now have a board of aldermen, police force, street department and all other essentials of the well modeled municipality. As a means of interesting boys and girls—yes, girls, too—in the responsibility of good citizenship and the science of municipal government the plan has proved a great success.

After the city was declared duly organized amid the enthusiasm of every boy and girl it was decided to visit the various city departments and offices of Ridgewood, Joliet and other neighboring cities to note how the affairs of each were conducted. The children, of course, were especially interested in the police and fire departments, and the municipal officials gladly showed them the operations of each. The chief of the Joliet fire department went so far as to offer the embryo juvenile city some spare apparatus of its fire department, an offer which was regretfully not taken advantage of because the child city had no buildings in which to house the equipment.

When it came to organizing the police department every boy was eager to be elected chief of police, but Herbert Schelk was unanimously chosen. The policemen were selected under civil service. The examination was practically the same as that required by the city of Joliet. Eight boys took the "quiz," and every one passed.

Ridgewoodville is governed entirely by its juvenile officials elected at a regular election by its juvenile citizens. No grownups hold office, although they attend meetings of the officials as advisers and citizens. Their advice the children are not bound to accept. It is in every sense a city of the children.

The youngsters divided the city into three wards. Two aldermen, one boy and a girl, are selected from each ward. The children are strong for equal suffrage, and the boys insist that the girls shall have a fair division of power in the government and in all other rights and privileges.

The problem of financing the juvenile city was one requiring more than ordinary attention. The department of parks and playgrounds came in for special attention. It was found that the only immediate expenditures faced were for athletic supplies, so the children spent their first city cash for athletics. A baseball nine was organized among the boys and a basket ball team among the girls.

Some of the adult advisers wanted an appropriation for streets, but the children replied that all the work would be done by the children, thus saving that expense.

A local bank cashier was secured to deliver an address on the issuing of municipal bonds, and the children were taken on a tour of one of the banks. City government in all its phases is being taught by lecture and act.

Sanitation in the South.

A remarkable instance of what a rural township can do in sanitation if it makes up its mind to be progressive is given in an article just published by the United States public health service. Cape Fear township, in New Hanover county, N. C., started out last summer on a sanitary campaign under the combined leadership of the county board of health, the state board of health and the United States public health service in Wilmington, N. C. As a result every house in the township has sanitary conveniences.

"If there is any other rural township in the entire south that can show a progress equal to this it ought to come to the fore and let itself be known," says the author of the article. "When a study of several hundred counties shows nearly one-half of the farm homes without any sanitary conveniences at all it is a matter of pride to point to the achievement of a township like Cape Fear, in New Hanover county, which demonstrates itself as being so far ahead of the average.

"While it has been repeatedly claimed by some public speakers that the south is making more rapid strides in improving its sanitation than any other part of the country, an examination of tens of thousands of farm homes in the south Atlantic states shows that there are yet many townships where the sanitary index is less than three on a scale of 100."

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

PLAN NEW BELGIUM OF MODEL TOWNS.

Reconstructed Cities and Villages Will Represent Best Modern Types.

Plans are already under way on an international basis for the rebuilding of Belgium into one of the garden spots of the world. All the civilized nations will be invited to contribute ideas for the erection in the devastated cities, towns and villages of Belgium of model homes, which, while preserving as much as possible the picturesqueness of the buildings leveled by the guns of war, yet will exemplify the best examples of community building. A meeting of Belgians has been called in England under the auspices of the International Garden Cities and Town Planning association to consider plans for the reconstruction of homes in Belgium.

"Church and home, public building and farmstead are alike laid waste, and, with the exception of a tiny corner, the whole country presents a scene of desolation which the world has not before witnessed," says the magazine published by the association.

"But tomorrow the Belgians are going back, and the homeless wanderers who are now finding sanctuary in Holland, France and Britain have to return to take up again the broken thread of their life. To go back as things are at present will be to increase the hardship and to create a new risk arising from the remnants of the war and the destruction of sanitary organization. It would seem not inopportune, therefore, for such an association as the Garden Cities and Town Planning association to take the initiative in calling together the experts of the world to consider the replanning of the new Belgium."

Students of municipal planning in the United States are following with interest the attempt being made by high minded men and women of all countries to assist Belgium, not only with material means, but with ideas which, if they can be realized, will build a finer Belgium than the world has known. Incidentally it is noteworthy that the program of the international city planners takes no note of the German occupation of Belgium and assumes that the Teuton will not seek to impose his own ideas upon the scheme of Belgian rehabilitation.

MODERN FIRE BOATS.

New Type of Motive Power Has Appeared in Oil Burning Engine.

The origin of fire boats—or at least the use of them as fire extinguishers—came about through the efforts of firemen to subdue a stubborn fire on the river front in Liverpool many years ago, writes Thomas A. Clancy in the American City. After working for hours it was suggested that a scow or boat be procured; that the land engines be placed thereon and operate back of the burning buildings. This method was the principal factor in extinguishing the fire. Since that time we have attained our improved river front engine or fire boat, a marvel in its mechanism and an asset of great importance in controlling and extinguishing conflagrations, not only along river fronts, but, with the aid of pipe lines, at points a mile away.

FIRE BOATS AT WORK.

In the building of fire boats much depends upon the architect chosen to design them. Needless to say, he should be a master of his craft, and he should be given a free hand. Sufficient power of propelling engines and such construction of hull as to enable the boat to force a passage through any ice that may be encountered in the winter season are essential. Abundant capacity to furnish all the water needed, under high pressure equipment for at least six two-inch streams, should be assured. A pump would be provided for low pressure where a large body of water is required for distribution on the immediate river front, where it is not so much a question of pressure as quantity.

Within the past few years a new type of motive power has appeared in the oil burning Diesel marine engine. The advantage of the oil engine over steam, especially for fire boats, is that the former consumes only one-third of the fuel required to operate a steam plant, and, though coal is cheaper than oil, the greater efficiency of the oil engine more than offsets the reduced price of the coal.

THE ECONOMICS OF CITY PLANNING.

Thomas Adams, English Expert, Emphasizes Its Practical Phases.

"I am very glad to hear that among the objects of the American Civic association is that of getting rid of the impression that city planning has mainly to do with the large cities of hundreds of thousands of inhabitants, and, indeed, that it is not solely concerned with these cities, but that one of the main functions of city planning is to deal with the small town and even with the small village community," so said Thomas Adams, the well known English town planning expert, now civic adviser to the commission of conservation of Canada, in opening an address at the recent convention of the American Civic association on the subject, "The Economic Basis of City Planning."

Continuing, Mr. Adams said: "Town planning does not deal with the beautification of the town, but town planning, I should rather like to put it, includes the embellishment of the external features of the town, both in regard to its public buildings and in regard to its transportation. But these matters are only part of what should be properly regarded as city planning. And when we come to analyze the fundamental things in city life we find that really we ought not to begin with the embellishment or with the beautiful in the city, but that after the route of civil life the two things that matter are the industrial and the residential, as the factories and home life. You want not only to look forward for the next thirty, forty or fifty years in regard to your park systems, but you want to make sure that in the next forty, fifty or sixty years every person who builds a new home will be secured against disease which may be created by anything that can be prevented. You want to make sure that the conditions shall be healthy in regard to housing as well as in regard to the general civic aspect of the city."

Mr. Adams emphasized the necessity of proper legislative steps to give municipalities power to carry out town planning schemes. He pointed out that to have a successful application of restrictive regulations there must be cooperation between the owner and the municipality. "If you leave the control of your building development until the buildings are up the owner is not going to submit to restrictions which will take away his property. If you go to him twelve years before he will join you in the proper health regulation which will help him properly to control and restrict the property so long as you restrict everybody else in the district accordingly."

In closing Mr Adams said: "Somebody said that you in America have no war. Have you not? You have got war with potential degradation and slum life just as we have in Europe, and you have to fight it. You have war with all these difficulties that breed preventable disease, with those difficulties that always confront us. I want to appeal to the American Civic association to be up and doing. Not only let it be said that this hemisphere is a place where there are liberty and freedom, politically speaking, but it is also a hemisphere of homes."

SYSTEM IN CITY BUILDING.

Same Principles Apply as in Commercial Development.

An important session of the convention of the American Civic association was recently held at Washington and was devoted to city planning, with John Nolen of Cambridge, Mass., vice president of the association, presiding. In introducing the subject he said:

"The subject allotted for this session is 'City Planning,' which needs in this association very little explanation because it strikes at the root of so many of our civic problems. I think that it is true that all successful enterprises of magnitude have been planned enterprises. They have not come about by chance. In city planning we recognise that millions of dollars in money and many things more precious than money have been wasted because of a lack of plan. Our streets, our parks, our recreation spaces, our houses and homes give ample evidence of all this. The first step, it would seem, toward the solution of our social and industrial problems is a comprehensive plan. We need transportation plans to solve our transportation problems; we need a zone plan to district our cities, to give stability to land values and to protect districts; we need an industrial district in order to give efficiency to industry, and we need a plan for homes for the workers because without a plan there is not the slightest prospect that they will be properly housed. Commercial efficiency rests upon rapid and cheap transportation of merchandise, upon the proper location of water and rail terminals and facilities, upon distributing routes and upon contented people in good homes with playgrounds."

An Annual Field Day.

Amenia, N. Y., is a small town which holds an annual field day, in which participate all the inhabitants of the village. Teams and not the individuals constitute the successful competitors and the people of Amenia believe that this novel competition has done much to increase their health and happiness.

Woman's World

Mrs. Blatch Thinks Women Are Born Diplomats.

MRS. HARRIOT STANTON BLATCH.

Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch made a ringing speech at Cooper Union, in New York, when 5,000 women met to protest against war. Her words were rewarded again and again with applause, but these brought forth tumult: "Men don't go into powder magazines carrying lighted matches, because they know the nature of powder. But they don't know human nature.

"All the diplomatic posts of the world should be filled with women because they are natural diplomats. The reason for their diplomacy is that they know human nature and, knowing it, have the grace and patience to handle it. Men are blind on the human nature side. When they attempt to handle questions involving men they handle them as they would cattle—by force or terror. With women they have a softer hand, though that is under protest. It is a concession to what men have long tolerated, though with a poor grace, woman's 'touchiness.'

"Women provide the curves of human nature, men the angles, and it is a curious comment that the curves understand the angles, but to the angles the curves remain to the last a mystery. Men have a glimmering sense of this extra knowledge of women, but not one of them has been clever enough or gallant enough to give it its right name. They have talked of women's intuition, their strange, half childlike, half animal scent of the true character, but not once have they applied the term that fits that rare and needful character. The word is 'penetration.'

"A man and woman stand beside the stream of human nature. Man sees the bright surface of it. He notes the swiftness or slowness of its current. A woman sees the mud and the pebbles at the bottom."

What Are Good Manners?

Many definitions have been given from time to time, but one of the best is the sort of manners which are guided by kindness and consideration for others. If you keep this in mind you need not be afraid of criticism. If you let your actions be guided by motives of kindness, if you consider others before yourself, you are bound to do the right thing—which is the kind thing—at the right time.

Of course there are various forms in social usage which can only be acquired by association with refined persons, but if this is denied one the seeker after good manners cannot go very far astray if he or she remembers to let kindness and consideration rule.

In these days when the average person is "out for himself," when selfishness is the predominant note of social and business intercourse, the man or woman who thinks of others and acts according to their wishes will soon be marked for a kindliness of manner which cannot be equaled by those who have been called to higher places in life.

Take Care of Shoes.

The care of the shoes is an absolute necessity with the new fashion of short dresses. The laced shoe has come in again for both morning and afternoon wear, though the type varies.

For morning the vamp has a finish of dull tan or black leather, with a light fawn or tan top. For afternoon the vamp is of patent leather and the top is of paler shade, is trimmed with a bit of the patent leather and is altogether a more decorative type of boot.

Cleaning Marble.

Marble is cleaned as follows: Pound together two ounces of washing soda, an ounce of powdered pumice stone and an ounce of whiting. Sift them through muslin. Make these ingredients into a cream with sufficient boiling water. Apply thickly with a brush, allow to dry, then wash off with hot water, dry and rub up with a soft cloth. All porcelain yellowed with iron sediment may be cleaned with muriatic acid.

Using Stale Bread.

Brown in oven every scrap of stale bread that is left, but don't scorch. Roll while hot and crisp, and sift. Use the fine crumbs for croquettes, etc.; the coarser for puddings, etc. Keep dry in glass jars or tin cans.

NEW SPORTS CLOTHES.

What the Smart Set Dons For Outdoor Recreation.

With devotees of riding enjoying themselves in the country, clothes for day wear at the smart estates become of the riding type.

This brings into consideration a most attractive display of smart neckwear, sports hats, trim shirts and blouses, the most swagger article in boot styles and a corresponding array of good looking sports suits.

Both corduroys and tweeds have their admirers. It is about six of one and a half dozen of the other in point of preference, so honors are even.

For walking suits corduroys are in high favor.

The costume shown by a leading shop forces this point home rather decidedly, for it is one of the new models designed for spring wear by a most exclusive patron of conservative but sports loving taste.

It is of green cotton corduroy. The coat is made with a smart yoke with the skirt part showing inverted pleats, which are belted in such fashion at the waist line that but a small portion of the belt need hang when the coat is worn unbuttoned.

The skirt is of circular cut, buttoned in front and with pockets set on just below the hips.

Falling Off.

Dobbins—I say, old fellow, you are getting thin since you retired from business.

Tobbins (ex-coal dealer)—That's right. You see, I don't weigh as much as I did.—Exchange.

Care of Hairbrush.

Where possible it is very much better to have the hair brushed by a second person, more especially where it is long and heavy. A woman can hardly carry her arm from the scalp to the full length of the hair, and it snarls and tangles until more is pulled out than is right.

There is also a great difference in the sort of brush used. One with bristles that are too stiff will scratch the scalp, often make it very sore and so cause loosening of the hair; one with bristles that are too soft will not be of much use in reaching the skin and stimulating the growth of new hair. A brush that is not perfectly clean will cause dandruff, an oily condition and effectually prevent a healthy growth. So, much attention should be paid to not only the quality, but the cleanliness as well as to the proper setting of the bristles of the brush used daily.

There is a splendid English brush with black bristles that seems to be almost perfect. The effect is to bring about a healthy glow on the scalp, while the hair is left soft and shining after a thorough brushing. Rather high priced, a good brush of this sort will cost over $2, but lasts for years if washed properly, so the cost may be considered worth paying.

The washing of hair brushes is very simple, yet a certain course must be followed: Tepid water with a good soap, the bristles well rubbed with another brush, a comb passed through and through so the bottom of the rows may be touched; two lathers, rinsing in warm water, then in cold, and a rubbing lightly with a towel that does not leave lint. These are simple rules.

The drying should be done by laying the brushes bristles down in a dry, warm place, but not on a radiator or in a hot sun. The heat of either will loosen the bristles. Where very dusty, as after the hair has been filled with dust from a trip or high winds, a teaspoonful of ammonia may be added to the soapy water. This effectually cuts out the greasy dust.

Reason will show that by laying the brushes down on the bristles the water will run out, whereas if placed on the back it will soak into the wood and in time loosen every bristle.

A little sifted cornmeal dusted into brushes and then brushed out often takes away the daily accumulation of dirt where a hairbrush is used constantly, thus saving too many washings. The very particular woman will be utterly confounded to note the appearance of a cloth used to wipe her hairbrush while she is going through her daily application. Where the dirt comes from is a question that can never be answered; but she will be convinced that the most particular care is needed every day if she wishes her hair to be free from dirt and her toilet appointments as fastidiously neat as she thinks they should be.

Bright Eyes.

Keeping the eyes bright is by no means a difficult matter. Every woman knows the value of bright, sparkling eyes as an asset to beauty. First avoid all eye strain. One of the greatest mistakes many women make is that of putting off the wearing of glasses long after they are needed. If you need glasses use them. There is no need to wear them constantly. Keep them for work.

Don't wake in a bright light or sleep facing the window. Have your bedroom window open, but the room dark.

Every morning and night wash out your eyes with a weak solution of boric acid, about one teaspoonful of boric powder mixed in six ounces of hot water and allowed to get cool. Apply this with an eye cup, and after one week's use the benefit will be felt and seen.

Beauty Hints.

Nothing restores a tired body and brain more completely than a refreshing bath and a change into fresh, clean clothing.

Get into the habit of keeping several changes of shoes and change your shoes every night when you come home. It is a great rest to tired feet.

Cold water is a splendid preventive of wrinkles, making the skin firm and smooth. The face should be washed in cold water every morning.

If those who perspire freely would use a little ammonia in the water they bathe in every day it would keep the flesh clean and sweet, doing away with any disagreeable odor.

About Wearing Veils.

A good cream applied to the face, carefully wiped off and followed with a good face powder is better than a veil on very cold days. The veil becomes moist from the breath. This causes the skin to chap and roughen, and it takes several days to get the skin back to a normal condition. Repeated chapping will make the skin coarse and florid.

Massage Cream.

A massage cream may be made as follows: Take three ounces of oil of sweet almonds, an ounce of lanolin, two drams of cucumber juice, two drams of white wax, two drams of spermaceti, thirty drops of tincture of benzoin and ten drops of oil of rose. Combine these and place in a jar for use.

SPRING TAILLEUR.

Black and White Is a Combination Which Finds Much Favor.

A HATTY CREATION.

Black and white continually aspires for favor in the feminine sartorial world. The gown here pictured is one of the season's nattiest offerings. The skirt is not strikingly flaring. The cutaway fronts of the coat, the belt and the pockets, arranged in a slanting fashion, are all good style features. The little flare straw hat is trimmed only with a gay, red coq feather. Buttoned boots are worn with this girlish costume.

NEW SHIRT WAIST.

It Buttons Right Up Under the Chin. Sleeves Are Long.

The new shirt waist has no longer a decollete. It buttons up right under the chin in a high stock collar. The sleeve is set in either raglan or in a rather large armhole, and if it is a blouse model the sleeve attaches to the lining and not to the little bolero like outside blouse.

Georgette crapes, linens, voiles and embroidered batiste all make the most delightful waists. Little vests of plaited lingerie, organdie or net are often set in the front. Odd china buttons give a new touch to the more tailored types and Slavic embroideries a bit of color to the light white and sand colored voiles and linens.

Sleeves are long and in the shirt waists lightly gathered into a tight cuff. In the blouse models some of the imported styles show ruffled sleeves, some with a series of small puffs, others with a high puff at the shoulders, with a transparent loose sleeve that gathers into the wrist underneath.

Tailored morning skirts are of linen, crash and ratine, a corduroy stripe on a net ground. They are about three yards around the hem and cut two or three gored circular. Their style comes in this flare and in the smart way they are belted in at the waist.

Beautiful Tea Tray.

A beautiful tea tray can be made at home by getting from a picture shop the foundation for a glass bottomed tray. Ask him to give you a plain wooden frame with glass and back. The molding should be deep enough to form a good rim on the tray. You can set in this gay little bits of cross stitch embroidery yourself and cover the back of the frame with felt. Put in four little rubber headed tacks for feet, attach brass handles and you have a lovely gift.

ACTIVITIES OF WOMEN.

Queen Alexandra receives an annuity of $350,000 from the British government.

Violet is the color of the clothes of those who are now in mourning in Turkey.

There are more negro women than white women in South Carolina and Mississippi.

In the rural districts of New Jersey there are only 59,522 females as against 86,273 males.

Miss Delia C. Torrey, who during President Taft's administration became known as "Aunt Delia," has given a valuable piece of land to the town of Millbury, Mass., for a library.

As a reward for her valor while under fire Sister Julie Rigard, a nun, acting as a nurse in the Paris Military Hospital, has been decorated with the Legion of Honor by President Poincare of France.

Bowser's Appendicitis

He Expects It Along Any Minute.

By M. QUAD.

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

When Mr. Bowser awoke the other morning he heaved a long sigh.

When he got out of bed he groaned as though in pain.

As he dressed himself he had visions of somber graveyards and weeping willows.

When he came downstairs he intended to tell Mrs. Bowser that the end of things for him was near, but something happened to stop him. He saw her looking at him in an ironical way and without the slightest note of pity. It cut him to the quick. She must know that he was suffering, and yet she could pitilessly look on and make game of him.

Mr. Bowser braced up like a bent bow springing back.

He took his seat at the table as its master should.

He ate with a dignity becoming a Bowser.

When he had finished the meal he rose and departed for the office without unbending. As he came home at the usual evening hour he sniffed and snuffed at the atmosphere of the hall and observed:

"I should say you had a boiled dinner waiting."

"One of the best you ever ate," replied Mrs. Bowser.

"That's very nice of you, I'm sure; but, unfortunately for me, I cannot partake of it."

"But why?"

"I got a little warning today that I think best to heed."

"What sort of warning?"

"Dr. MacCready was in the office on some business, and, hearing me utter

"I DO WISH YOU WOULD VISIT MY GRAVE."

an involuntary groan as I rose up, he began to question me. It wasn't five minutes before he announced that I would have to be very careful or fall a victim to appendicitis. He said I had all the symptoms of it."

"I don't believe any such talk, Mr. Bowser! I haven't heard you groan, involuntarily or otherwise, for a year. Did he charge you a fee for telling you this?"

"He made no charge, but, then, naturally"—

"Naturally you went and handed him over at least $5, while I am in need of a dozen different little things. You have no more cause to be afraid of appendicitis than I have of the Indian plague. Why do you let people work you like this?"

"Softly, now, softly!" he said, as he led the way to the dining room, instead of shouting "Woman!" at her. "Mrs. Bowser, I cannot be classed as an alarmist. Thousands of things have ailed me, and I have never said a word to you about them. I wasn't going to say a thing in this case, but, being put on a diet by the doctor, I had to make some explanations. I have known for months and months that the appendicitis was after me. I have figured that when it overtook me at last I would make a sneak for the hospital and have the operation performed before you knew anything about it. That is the way with me. I do my own worrying and planning."

"Well, what symptoms have you felt?" she asked.

"Pains in the back, roaring in the head, wakefulness and all that. There are days when black specks dance before my eyes. The other morning when I got up my teeth seemed too long."

"And that ass of a doctor made you believe these were symptoms of appendicitis!"

"I knew they were before he confirmed me. I have been saved by just one week."

"How?"

"I am going to follow the directions given me by the doctor."

"Did he tell you to sleep with your feet out of bed and breakfast, dine and sup on catnip?"

"No, ma'am, he didn't. He told me to live on milk and water for the next four days. That boiled dinner smells to heaven, but I can't touch a mouthful of it. It's either milk and water or death for me."

"Look here, now," she said, determined on one last argument, "I have known of as many as five cases of appendicitis right around here, and not one of them had the symptoms you mention. All that ails you is a little biliousness or rheumatism."

"I have got my warning, my dear."

"But you haven't got it from your own doctor."

"One doctor is the same as another when it's a case as serious as this. I'm as hungry as a wolf, but don't tempt me. One full meal would mean the ambulance and the hospital. I might possibly come out alive, but the chances are only one in a hundred. I seem to be fat and solid, Mrs. Bowser, but as a matter of fact I am too spirituelle to stand much pain."

Mrs. Bowser had to laugh. She would have had to had he been standing over her with an ax. She led the way upstairs and was for dropping the subject, but Mr. Bowser hadn't had his say yet.

"In case this milk and water diet doesn't stave off appendicitis and the results are fatal you will find all my business papers in the safe," he observed as he walked up and down.

"Very well."

"You will not be forced to marry to keep a roof over your head."

"No?"

"Naturally I would rather you would not marry at all, but I am not going to exact any promise. I do wish, however, that you would visit my grave once in awhile. I shan't know it, of course, but it will help you not to forget me."

"I shall visit it once in two weeks during good weather," she replied as she saw his lip trembling.

"That is all I ask. The doctor assured me that milk and water would stave off the impending danger, but I have a presentiment, Mrs. Bowser, a presentiment that appendicitis will come and terminate fatally."

"And I have a presentiment that I shall some day meet that fool of a doctor and tell him what I think of him. It's just biliousness that ails you, and a dose or two of calomel would set you to singing. There are yellow streaks under your eyes, and those mean biliousness and nothing else."

Mr. Bowser shook his head and heaved a sigh that finally terminated in a groan and brought the cat out from under the piano. Then he started down the hall and put on his hat.

"Are you going out?" was asked.

"I'm going after a quart of milk. I may wake up in the night and want a drink. I may also talk with the druggist if he isn't busy. I am sure he would help you about the funeral arrangements."

Mrs. Bowser was glad to have him go. She knew the druggist was a blunt spoken man and would diagnose the case pretty speedily. She therefore ran into a neighbor's for an hour. Mr. Bowser made his way to the druggist's, and not finding him rushed, he began:

"Doc, take a careful look at my face, will you?"

"Cert. Thinking of trading it off for a new one?"

"Does my phiz tell you anything?"

"Not much. It never did. The yellow streaks under your eyes show that you are bilious."

"What do pains in the back signify?"

"Rheumatism, generally."

"And roaring in the head?"

"A cold."

"And when your teeth seem too long."

"A little neuralgia in the jaws. Why, what do you think ails you?"

"I was told by a doctor this morning that these symptoms heralded an attack of appendicitis."

"Herald your grandmother! Somebody has been making a fool of you again. You may have appendicitis some day, but it won't come on that way. What did the so called doctor tell you to do?"

"Drink milk and water," sighed Mr. Bowser.

"You ought to be kept on that diet for the rest of your natural life. Didn't Mrs. Bowser say the fellow was a humbug?"

"Well—er—you know"—

"Of course she did, and of course he is. Go home and eat a hearty dinner. Eat as much as you want tomorrow and then take some calomel. Say, man, if you hadn't the wife you have somebody would get the socks off your feet."

Mr. Bowser didn't jaw back. He was too elated. Ten minutes later the cook was heaping the remains of that boiled dinner on the table, and he was eating like a Michigan lumberman. Mrs. Bowser came home and surprised him at it.

"Well, you saw the druggist?" she queried as he refilled his plate.

"The druggist? What about?"

"About your threatened appendicitis."

"I hadn't heard anything about being threatened."

"But you gave up $5 to a fool of a doctor this morning to tell you to live on a milk and water diet for the next four days."

"My dear woman," said Mr. Bowser between huge bites, "please go away. You are laboring under a hallucination. You have somehow got me mixed up with your uncle Joe or your brother Sam. Go away while I get a few mouthfuls to eat."

OBSEVER JOINS FORCES WITH MR. JOSLIN

Commends the Worthy Gentleman On Stand He Takes Regarding The Anti-Saloon League

Editor Evening Times:

I have read and re-read the letter over the signature of Edward Joslin, which was printed in your issue of Feb. 27th, in which he states a few facts and asks some very pointed questions, which at this time should be answered in all due fairness to Mr. J., the anti-saloon league and the vast number of people who advocate temperance and who look to the church people to aid in the good work.

In former letters which have been printed in your valued publication, circumstances caused me to be on one side and Mr. Joslin on the other. Several important issues were discussed and, as you will remember the debate as to whether or not the church members were doing their duty toward strangers who entered the sacred edifice, waxed warm. I am pleased to state, that in this letter, the writer is inclined to stand with our worthy brother and commend him for his attitude toward the First Methodist church of this city.

From what we can gather by reading Mr. Joslin's letter, the official board of the First Methodist church has passed a resolution, which, is against, and, if carried out by all churches, would destroy the Anti-Saloon League. By reading further, we infer, that said resolution has been published broadcast, thus, placing this church on record as being an antagonist to a society whose sole aim is to destroy the saloon. The reason for all this, seems to be, that one, Anderson by name, is said to have betrayed his trust with this society, and for this reason it seems that the church has decided to ignore the whole society on account of the suspected shortcomings of one man.

The question that seems to distress Mr. J. is whether or not the church sanctioned the publication broadcast of the resolution that it passed regarding the Anti-Saloon League. I would say that if it was right and proper for to pass the resolution, then, there can be no great harm in publishing it. The question we wish to ask, is, was the board justified in passing this resolution and should the Anti-Saloon League be ostracized on account of the sins of one man who is connected with it? Is it fair to the other people of note who are engaged in so great a work as this league has attempted, to banish from its church the whole organization in order to rebuke one or even more officers who have betrayed their sacred trust? In our opinion, the board by this action has insulted and belittled Christian men of high standing as well as lending their aid indirectly to the liquor dealers. Why not purify the league instead of attempting to destroy it.

The ministers of the Gospel, and the church members in general, become indignant when the non-church-goers offer as an excuse for non-attendance, the fact they meet so many at church who are unworthy and unfit to be identified with the church. They point out to us that we are not to judge the church by the actions of its members; yet, the First Methodist church of Fulton goes on record as denouncing the Anti-Saloon League and forbidding its members the use of their church—all because it appears one man has gone wrong.

Mr. Joslin calls for a reply from Dr. Stockwell. No doubt the Reverend gentleman will comply with the demand and give a plausible explanation; but, no matter what may be the excuse for the action of the official board, the fact remains that they are not consistent with the argument stated above, which they are ever ready to use when their members' actions are censured.

To one who has attended this church, as a stranger, and received the chilly reception accorded to visitors, the action of the board will not seem strange. The policy of the institution, seems to be—a certain few banded together and with no wish to expand —a select circle, it would appear. There are two Methodist churches in Fulton and one is large enough to seat every church going Methodist in the city. Old residents (and some of the new comers) know the facts connected with the advent of the erection of the other church. In view of all the facts that can be brought out, I repeat, there is nothing strange in the action of the Christian gentlemen who agreed to banish from their sacred edifice the Anti-Saloon League.

Mr. Joslin hits the nail on the head when he recites the facts regarding the delegates who have been sent to Albany in the interests of the temperance movement. He speaks the truth when he admits that he is no temperance man when, by his own admission, we learn that he permitted himself to be induced to sign the resolution referred to. But, we admire the good brother just the same, as it is plainly evident he regrets his action and his statements prove that his heart is in the right place.

We will take the liberty to answer his question as to which is making the most converts—the eight churches or the thirty-two saloons. Without hesitation, we answer, the SALOONS; not because they are greater in number, but, because they attend to business a great deal better, and their work is more efficient than that of the churches. If the churches would use the same energy in the upbuilding of their work and go at it with the same zeal and business ability as the saloon man does toward building up his trade, they could increase their membership so that instead of having thirty-two saloons and eight churches, the figures could be reversed. As a right down business proposition the church is the weakest institution in the city of Fulton—especially the First Methodist. This may seem a strong statement, but facts prove it. A factory's product must be perfect or the industry will be idle for lack of orders. The wholesale merchant must make good his representations to his customers or lose his business. The retail merchant must have goods that are saleable, clerks that are civil and polite to customers, and the right prices, or the sheriff will take charge of his store. The churches must make good their doctrines in a practical way and their finished product (members) come up to samples described and advertised or the public will take no stock in them. A band of men or a single man who will preach against vice and then in an indirect manner aid and abet it deserves all the criticism that they may have heaped upon them. The milk peddler who refuses to deliver milk on Sunday so that he may attend church, and sells watered milk to his customers on a week day, is a hypocrite and the church would be much better without him. The merchant who uses the church as a means of increasing his sales should be given a wide berth. When our churches and church members use more practice and less theory, then, and not until then, will they flourish and attain the ends for which they are praying; and, without the aid of expensive evangelists, who are apt to create a stir while they are here and leave things deader than before when they depart.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, March. 1.—Upon his return from an official visit to Sing Sing prison as chairman of the Assembly committee on penal institutions, Assemblyman Law of Westchester county, brought back with him a determination to devote his best efforts toward securing pensions for prison guards. Convinced long ago that such employes of the State should be provided for in their old age, Assemblyman Law some weeks ago introduced a bill to bring that result about; his visit to Sing Sing strengthened his views upon the question and in argument and legislative statute work as a law maker can carry his measure through it will become a law because it is generally believed to contain meritorious provisions.

The Law bill for prison employes pensions comes up for discussion tonight and its introducer is prepared to explain its intent and need. Armed with data and statistics he will endeavor to convince his brother assemblyman that the State can no longer afford to ignore the claims of prison guards for pensions.

"The whole trend of modern thought is that of pensioning deserving employes," said Assemblyman Law in an interview today. "Especially is this true in other States. In New York State we have hardly kept abreast of the pension provisions made by private corporations. The great railroad systems have set aside amounts which aggregate yearly $20000 to $1,400,600 for the pensioning of superannuate or disabled employes. The Western Union company has set $1,000,000 aside for this purpose and U. S. Steel corporation $8,000,000 to which Andrew Carnegie has added $4,000,000.

"One of the reasons that prison guards should be pensioned is because they are subjected to contagious diseases and violent assault. Their normal working hours are twelve hours a day with every alternate Sunday off and two weeks vacation a year. The maximum pay they can receive is $1,200 a year. If a prison guard is killed durin gthe performance of his duty there is no way in which his family will or can be compensated. there is no provision in the Workmen's Compensation law which can be applied to prison guards."

Assemblyman Law says that both the State prison department and the State Civil Service Commission favor the pension system for prison guards. He quotes from the latter department, which in its latest report it is set forth that "one of the greatest defects in our Civil Service system is the absence of a scheme of retirement or for pensioning superannuated employes."

Another advocate of pensions for aged employes of the State Assemblyman Law points out is George W. Perkins, the former partner of J. Pierpont Morgan. "Mr. Perkins told me," says Assemblyman Law, "that he is in favor of pensions not only because he has read of the system in books and studied the proposition, but also because he has seen the scheme in actual practice."

"Another feature well worth considering," continued Assemblyman Law, "is the fact that there are a number of guards in State prisons who are too old for actual service, yet who are kept on the payroll for charity. At the Elmire Reformatory there is a prison guard 85 years old. Still another reason why there should be a pension system for these men is that many of the best guards soon leave the service of the State when they learn what they must contend with."

AN OSWEGO TEAMSTER INJURED AT GRADE CROSSING

Oswego, Mar. 1.—William M. Burcham, a teamster employed by Walpole & Co., who lives in E. 2d st., near Utica, was struck by a Lackawanna shifting engine at W. Ninth and Utica streets at 8 o'clock Saturday morning and seriously injured. Mr. Burcham was driving a coal wagon across Ninth street and the engine, which was in the ash pit, backed out quickly, striking the rig. Mr. Burcham was thrown a considerable distance, the rig was overturned, scattering coal in all directions and the horse, breaking loose from the harness, ran away. The ambulance was called and removed the injured man to the hospital.

An examination of Mr. Burcham's injuries by hospital physicians showed that they were more serious than at first supposed. It was necesary to amputate his right leg at the knee, his left leg is broken at the ankle and his left arm fractured. He is also suffering from many cuts and bruises about the face and body and it is feared he may not recover. His condition is reported as being very critical.

This crossing, one of the most dangerous along Utica street, has never been protected by a flagman. Cars are left standing on the tracks, obstructing the view of teamsters, and that more accidents have not occurred is a miracle.

LYNCH NEUTRAL ON NEW STATUTE

Labor Commissioner Says Department Is Enforcing One of the Laws

Syracuse, March 1.—State Commissioner of Labor James M. Lynch at his home in this city last night declared that he will take no stand for or against the repeal of the anti-alien labor law.

The commissioner's decision to remain neutral in the fight is looked upon as an indication that the bill to repeal the anti-alien statute will be passed by the Legislature this week.

While the chief demand for the repeal comes from New York city because of the large subway contracts, Syracuse and Onondaga county as well as other up-state counties, are equally affected by the decision of the Court of Appeals, sustaining the law as constitutional but condemning it in principle.

A vast amount of work now under way or contemplated is effected by this law, which provides that alien labor shall not be employed in public work.

Work Affected by Law

The barge canal and terminals, all highway improvement, paving, sewer construction, the Onondaga creek improvement and disposal plant, the State College of Forestry Building, State Fair buildings, the Onondaga County Tuberculosis Sanatorium, County Home addition and all state, city, village, town and county work done under contract are affected by the present law.

The law provides that none except citizens of the United States may be employed. When the Court of Appeals sustained the law the State Department of Labor took steps to enforce it.

"The Department did not declare either for against the measure," said Commissioner Lynch last night. "When it was upheld by the courts we simply prepared to make it effective."

Opposition Expected

Opposition to the repeal of the measure is expectedw but it was predicted in Albany last night that the Legislature will decide to eliminate the anti-alien bar from the laws of the state.

In most cases, it is believed, continuing the law willl result in greatly increasing the cost of construction and in long delays in the completion of contracts. Aliens have been employed. generally for the heavier and coarses work.

The purpose of the act was to give citizens employment, and it is now contended that the law should be continued for the benefit of the unemployed citizens of the state. On the other hand, it is claimed, that citizens will not do the work that aliens have been engaged upon and that large public improvements will be held up.

Must Prove Citizenship

To avoid prosecution contractors will have to obtain proof of citizenship before putting men to work. The statements of the men themselves cannot be accepted as sufficient protection. Naturalization papers with proof of the person's identity or birth certificates, it is said, will be necessary before a man can be set to work in a sewer trench.

The position taken by Governor Whitman favoring the repeal of the law and the demands for this action coming from all parts of the state, it is believed, will be sufficient to secure the passage of the repeal measure. It is probabl that an emergency message will be sent to the Legislature by the Governor.

BANKRUPTCY COURT NEWS

Referee in Bankruptcy Avery S. Wright had a number of cases before him Saturday. The case of William F. Carpenter was adjourned as all of the principals in the case failed to appear. The case of Earl Manwarren of Minetto was adjourned until Mar. 20, to give Attorney Udelle Bartlett an opportunity to examine the bankrupt in behalf of creditors. William Bartholomey, President of the Bartholomey Food Products Co., of Fulton, was examined by Attorney A. T. Jennings. This case was also adjourned until the latter part of March. Hubert L. Gilman of Fulton was appointed trustee in this case. He filed a bond of $500.

The voluntary petitions in bankruptcy filed by Henry T. Neidlinger an Mrs. Josephine Gange Sheehy in Utica during the last week have been referred to Judge Wright. Hearings in both cases will be held the latter part of March.

LOWELL LIBRARY BURNS

Lowell, Mass., Mar. 1.—The Lowell public library was destroyed by fire today. The loss will probably reach $1000.000. The library with its memorial hall, contained man yhistorical and precious relics, notably war relica and flags of the famous Sixth Massachusetts Regiment which first drew blood in the Civil War. Rare paintings and statuary were lost. 15 minutes after the fire was discovered the southern end of the roof fell in. Two firemen were injured.

Safety.

"I've just been over to my brother-in-law's house trying to pour oil on troubled waters."

"Yes. And if I'm ever called on for that kind of duty again I'm going to stand off at a safe distance and pour the oil through a hose."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

JAPAN WANTS SUBJECTS TO GO WHERE WANTED

Addressing the New York Press Club last night, Dr. T. Iyenaga, former secretary of the Japanese Foreign Office, said: "It would be far better for the Japanese Government to remove the Japanese laborers now in California and prevent further immigration, even at a cost of several million dollars, than to have this relatively small labor trouble prove a constant sore, and interfere materially with the broader and bigger problems which involve the welfare of two countries." He censured the "yellow press" for deliberately trying to destroy the friendly relations between Japan and the United States, and told the newspaper men it was their mission "to make the great peoples on opposite shores of the Pacific know and understand each other." According to Dr. Ivenaga, the difficulties on the coast grew up out of misunderstanding. He admitted that the Japanese laborers were largely at fault. They had steadfastly refused to learn the language, manners and customs of the Americans. He added: Manchuria, which is much larger than the Japanese Empire, and is only sparsely settled by the Chinese is the natural place for us to colonize. Then there is Siberia, although, of course, Russia might object. Again let me assert that the Japanese Government does not want its people to go where they are not wanted, but in a century, perhaps, this country and other countries may be glad to welcome a few of us."

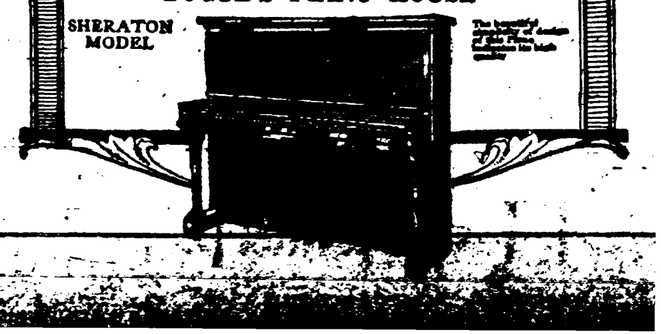
GERM-TOWELS MUST GO

Amendment to the State sanitary code, passed by the last Legislature and adopted by the State Board of Health went into effect today.

The most important is the provisions which prohibit the use of the common towel and the common drinking cups in public places. This is the first step taken by the State to do away with germ-filled, public towels and drinking cups. Paper towels and cups may be used. The laws do not prohibit the use of cloth towels if small clean ones are provided for each person.

The regulations include some important rules for barber shops. This city's shops as a rule have adopted the required measures.

RAMSDEN'S SENTENCE CAUSED GREAT SURPRISE



Rochester, March. 1.—At the opening of Supeme Court this morning F. J. Ramsden of Syracuse was put on trial here for the murder of his wife, Florence K. Ramsden, in this city on Nov. 2. He pleaded guilty to manslaughter first degree. He was sentenced to not less than 9 years 6 months, and not more than 19 years and 6 months in Auburn prison. This unexpected turn of the murder trial caused a great sensation in court circles. Even the jurymen expressed the opionion that Ramsden was insane when he committed the murder.

ANARCHISTS ATTEMPT TO BLOW-UP CATHEDRAL

Detectives Prevented Execution of Worst Plot Since the Day When Chicago Policemen Were Murdered

By Robert C. Cranston

New York, Mar. 2.—An amazing bomb plot concocted by anarchists—one designed to raze religious, financial edifices and the homes of JohnD . Rockefeller and Andrew Carnegie—was revealed today when an attempt was made to destroy St. aPtrick's Cathedral in Fifth avenue. A lighted bomb was placed in the Cathedral while more than 700 men and women were attending early mass. The infernal machine was a powerful one, capable of killing a score or more of persons had it exploded, but the fuse was extinguished by a detective who had learned of the anarchists' plot after being admitted to memebership in their organization.

As he extinguished the fuse, other detectives arrested Frank Abarno, 24, and Charles Carbono, 18. In the possession of Abarno two bombs were found, Carbono is said to be the man who made the bombs. The two men are believed to be members of the Bresci gang of anarchists.

Shortly after the arrest of the two men the police also took into custody Frank Baldo, 23, who said he was a laboret.

Not since the Haymarket riots in Chicago, when a number of persons were killed by bombs, has there been revealed such a campaign of iolence as the anarchists intended should follow the destruction of the Cathedral.

The arrest of Arbano caused great excitment among the worshipers in the church. Arbano entered the church after being trailed b ydetectives. He knelt as if in prayer and lighted the fuse with a cigar he had concealed in his hand. Detective Barnetz disguised as a priest pounced on the man and stepped upon the lighted fuse. The further the police department went with the investigation the more amazing became the reign of terror which the anarchists attempted to inaugurate. Banks were to be raided and wholesale assassination of prominent rich men were planned. Armed with rifles and shotguns lawless bands wer to appear in all parts of the city shooting and robbing. Carnegie, J. D. Rockefeller, his son and Cornelius Vanderbilt were among those marked for death.

ROCKEFELLER SCORED ON COLORADO STRIKE BY HOUSE REPORT

It States He Has Done Nothing for the Uplifting of Army of Mine Employes

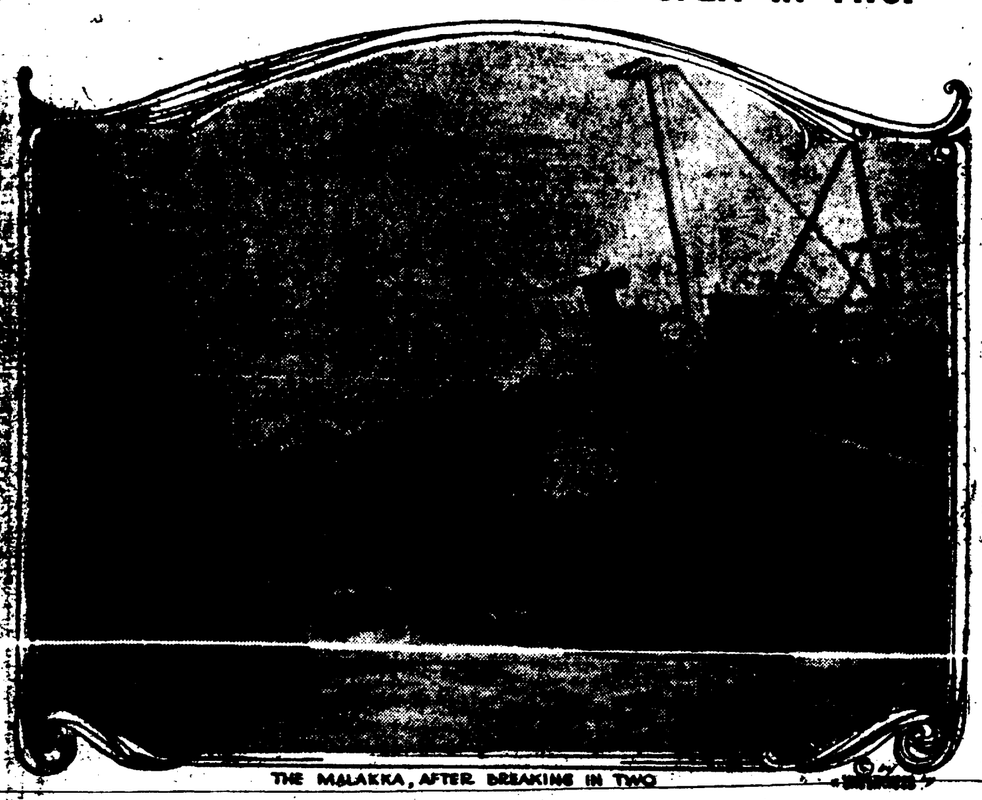
Washington, Mar. 2.—Harsh criticism of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and an injunction to the Colorado Coal mine operators to arbitrate were the keynotse of a report filed in the House today by a sub-comiitte of the mines and mining company, which investigated the Colorado coal strike.

"Greater interests than those of Mr. Rockefeller in these mines, or all the coal mining interests of Colorado," says the report, "have been submitted to arbitration and many lives would have been spared and men, women and children would be alive today who were sacrificed during this controversy had this course been pursued."

Rockefeller was declared "obstinate" and sarcastic reference was made to his philanthropic work in wider fields while dong little or nothing in Colorado.

The report did not attempt to fix, define, responsibility for the battles between the strikers and militia and mine guards in Colorado. It said both sides were guilty of lawlessness. That the militia appeared partial to the coal operatives and some members were guilty of brutality was asserted.

Chairman Foster and Representatives Evans and Sutherland signed the majority report. A minority report was presented by Mr. Byrnes of South Carolina who contended the majority exceeded its majority by becoming a vehicle of publicity.



Representative Austin of Tennessee submitted a separate report filing all testimony taken and referring it to the industrial relations committee for any action deemed necessary.

The majority report finds: That the day of settling strikes by violence has gone past.

ENGLAND CAN CHOKE GERMANY'S TRADE

By Herbert Temple

London, Mar. 2.—England's embargo on food and raw materials destined for Germany is in full effect today and the British government is confident that it will be able to blockade the German coast successfully.

It was learned today that the delay in Great Britain in announcing its policy of reprisal against Germany was due to changes made necessary in the location of English warships in order to shut vessels off from the German coast.

These were completed Saturday and on Sunday a full report of the new disposition of the Britsh ships was transmitted by the admiralty to Premier Asquith. His announcement of the embargo came next day.

The action of the goverenment is hailed with jubilation by the London press, which has been impatiently demanding the "strangulation of Germany" ever since that country opened its submarines warfare. While it is admitted that protests from neutral countries probably will follow the embargo proclamation, the various naval experts on the newspapers here are united in declaring that the precedent set in the American Civil War is sufficint to justify the blockade.

MERCHANT VESSEL RAMS GERMAN SUBMARINE

Weymouth, Eng., Mar. 2.—A naval tug was sent out today to search for wreckage of a German submarine which is believed to have been destroyed by the steamer Thordis in the English channel off this port yesterday. According to Captain John W. Bell of the Thoris a submarine fired a torpedo at his ship, but it missed. Then the Thordis was sent ahead at full speed and rammed the submarine. Afterwards oil was observed on the surface o fthe water and the crew of the Thordis concluded that the submarine had been sunk.

RUSSIANS FORCE GERMAN EVACUATION OF STANISLAU

By Francis Lavelle Murray

Petrograde, Mar. 2.—Victorious in their operations against the Germans in northern Poland, the Russians have now resumed the offensive in Bukowina and southeastern Galicia, on the extreme left wing of the 700-mile battle front. They have already captured Sadagora, a few miles north of Czernowitz, the capital of Bukowina, and Kolomea, a Galician railway center, while at the same time they are bringing such heavy pressure to bear on the Austro-German forces about tSanislau that the evacuation of this city is imminent.

In northern Poland the losses suffered by the Germans have been so severe that they are now making no infantry attacks, their activities being confined to artillery bombardments of the fortress of Ossowiec and the positions northwest of Grodno.

The great number of prisoners taken by the Russians along the Niemen-Bobr-Narew front has been increased by 10,000 captured at Przasnysz and 130 taken at Grodno. In addition the Russians have captured about 30 machine guns along this froint, together with ten cannon and enormous booty.

WAR BULLETINS THREE O'CLOCK MARCH 2, 1915

The Germans made an attack southeast of St. Eloi in Flanders yesterday and it was repulsed by British troops. The operations in Champagne are proceeding favorably for the French who are working under enormous difficulties because of severe weather conditions.

MOSQUITOES.

I WISH the pesty, fierce mosquito would emigrate to Nice or Quito, or to some lonely Isle; if they'd cut out their doggone hatching this weary world would cease its scratching and life would be worth while. They sting through shirt and coat and breeches, and oh! how mercilessly it itches throughout the livelong day; we soak our hides in citronella until the cuticle turns yellow to keep the pests away. We screen the windows and the porches and fumigate the air with torches and taunt them with our fins, but they don't seem to mind the swatting—they ever hover nearby, plotting to perforate our skins. They buss around in countless numbers, and if some soul, perchance, encumbers a crased bloodthirsty swarm, she's full of swellings in a minute (a bursting rifle isn't in it) and punctured in his form. Should you desire to spend an hour reclining in a shady bower on some sweet summer's day, you'd better screen yourself in netting to keep the stingy pests from getting their stingers into play. If you should care to keep from peeping your weary eyes, and spend in sleeping a warm and sultry night, you'll suffer like a weary palmer if you don't case yourself in armor and screw the parts on tight. Depart! oh, cruel and savage skeeter, thou biting, stinging, human eater; depart for evermore, for many moons thou hast subsisted, in multitudes, thou hast existed and fattened on our gore.

Opinions

The Failure

Party lines will not measure, partisan consideration cannot alone inspire the regret the people of this country must feel as they see the passing of the present Democratic Congress.

It was a good thing, it was a useful thing, for the whole nation that the Democratic party, after years of defeat, dejection, ineptitude, should regain the commanding place at the capital. There was need for a change. There was a demand everywhere that new men, new ideals, a new spirit should come into a political life grown sterile. Republican failure to meet the just demands of a public no longer to be driven by mere iteration of the empty legends of other days gave the Democrats a deserved chance—a real opprtunity.

Turning back to March 4, 1913, it is still possible to recall that, save for the narrowest of partisans, all shades of public opinion looked with frank enthusiasm or resignation upon Democratic resurgence. Even the most loyal Republicans saw in it an assurance that their own party might be driven by adversity and through necessity to do in exile what it had declined to do in the hour of prosperity and power.

And on March 4, 1915, how far we shall be away from all that! What a mess the present administration has made of its splendid opportunity! And if one seeks to discern the cause for this failure, it is impossible to escape the conviction that it is found in Mr. Wilson's incapacity to face a fact, to deal with things as they are, grasp the opaque and solid substance rather than pursue an evanescent shadow.

Things as they are Mr. Wilson has wholly failed to see. In his vision the Mexico of Huerta became the America of 1776 and bloodstained bandits like Villa were transformed into the liberators who were to play the part of Washington and Jefferson in the southern republic. To this distorted conception the Americans who died at Vera Cruz were sacrified, and when the fact did prevail, as facts must, we scutted out of Mexico hiding a flag still unsaluted and leaving behind the wreck of years of patient effort to earn the respect and regard of Latin America.

At home, at a time when the streets of this city were filled with lines of the hungry and the miserable, when every man in this town could know among his own acquaintances and see in the world about him unmistakable evidences of the extent of unemployment, of the area of hunger, Mr. Wilson told an amazed nation that this thing was psychological, and when it persisted lectured the employers and censured the capitalists for failing to provide employment for men in mills whose doors had been closed by Democratic legislation, by Mr. Wilson's own methods and measures. He would have had men gamble on the hope he had banished, and in their refusal he saw the proof of moral obliquity.

More than all else there has been revealed in Mr. Wilson an almost pathetic faith in the phrase, a blind confidence that there was in the lucky combination of mellifluous words a magic to charm away the grimmest fact or to compel obedience from the most unruly of natural forces. Again and again, when a crisis came, when action, cool, experienced judgment were required, the President has appeared, on the balcony, as it were, to admonish the clouds and the wind, to bid the storm depart and the waves to be still, and then retired confident that what had been needed had been supplied.

Again and again it has been as if Mr. Wilson had touched a button at his desk to set in motion mighty machinery many miles away, without the smallest thought that there was lacking any wire to connect the button with the distant lever. Government by phrase we have had, by a phrase that was honestly believed to be potent to transform Bryan into a Secretary of State, Daniels into a Secretary of the Navy, to make a useful public servant out of McAdoo, to abolish all the ancient superstition that there was a relation between supply and demand.

And now after two years a Democratic Congress goes out followed by no applause save that which its going arouses—and a new Congress comes in, Democratic by the smallest of margins and already divided by factional differences which promise the paralysis of the whole majority program. It comes in unwelcomed by a country already discounting a Republican victory a year hence, a country filled with douht, apprehension and distrust toward Mr. Wilson's advisers, frankly alarmed at the possibilities for harm at home and abroad in the next two years of a man whose desire to do well is not denied.

The very worst thing about the Democratic failure is that it has been so complete that there is no present prospect that the Republican party will feel the necessity to nominate its best, to face and abolish evils within and the abuses that have once produced an insurrection. If the Democratic party has suffered from the Wilson failure, the Republican has not secured less. About the worst thing that can happen to the latter would be to win a negative victory in 1916, to win on Democratic blunders and shortcomings and not through any new and real effort on its own part to satisfy the intelligence and conscience of a new generation just rising to political command.—Tribune, N. Y.

FREQUENCY OF ELECTIONS

Former President Taft has been giving a series of lectures this winter upon the Initiative, Referendum and Recall, at a number of colleges. In a recent talk Mr. Taft voices the opinions of thousands of fellow citizens. He said: "I want to show the young men of this country, the absurdity of having weary armies of voters tramping frequently to the polls—at the call of would-be reformers—in a struggle for incessant changes in the laws. I want to emphasize the fact that this doctrine is an evil thing. I want to preach sanity and sense."

The former President, now a Yale professor of constitutional law, is by thus expressing himself, simply leading the way for hundreds of his fellow citizens, who have become more than tired of the frequency of elections under the constitutional checks known as the Initiative, Referendum and Recall.

If the average man of business were to have his way there would be little doing indeed in the way of frequency of elections. This upon investigation may be found true in about 15 out of the 17 states where the Initiative, Referendum and Recall are operative. In one New Jersey municipality that boasts of its reform government there have been in addition to the regular elections no less than three recalls in as many years.

While the former Chief Executive recognizes the extent of the nation-wide movement for popular control of the machinery of government, he is able by reason of vast experience to foresee the dangers embraced in a system that gets its strength in unrestfulness and consequent agitation. Upon the merits of the Initaitive, Referendum and Recall there are thousands of persons who think in a different groove than the ex-President, but it would be hard to find a man who does not believe in him implicity as a truly representative of all that is sound in the institutions of the Republic as founded by the men who were able to foresee years ahead of their time.

THE SOB BRIGADE

Every village, every hamlet, every city, has its sob brigade, its army of kill-joys; and these invaders do a lot of damage. I would rather sit in a cabin with a polecat under the floor, than be compelled to spend one evening with a sour-visaged old crab, a fault-finding human.

Pope says, "The man that loves and laughs must sure do well." Old Shakespeare contributes his ideas of playing the "fool," and they are good. John Wolcott ("Peter Pindar") makes a significant reference to the life-giving qualities of laughter: "Care to our coffin adds the nail no doubt; and every grin, so merry, draws one out."

I am inclined to believe that most men laugh too much—are not serious enough when young, when life's opportunities are before them. I speak from personal experience.

There is a happy medium between the sob brigade and the frivolous, and most men who are successful find this medium. Extremes in anything are dangerous.

A little fun now and then, and plenty of work, make a man healthy, and then he is wealthy.—Silent Partner.

Canada's Good Sense

The Canadian Government has had the courage to do what the Wilson administration refuses to do—raise the Tariff rates to secure the revenue necessary. While the United States is steadily losing money and the deficit is growing, the administration refuses to make any change in its Traffic laws because it would be an acknowledgement of inefficiency in drafting the Tariff laws. The Canadian Government gives no thought of its former policy; it sees the necessity of raising more money and it promptly changes its Tariff schedule to meet the emergency. In the case of goods now on the free list there will hereafter be a customs charge of 7½ per cent. on goods from the United States and elsewhere, with the exception of Great Britain and colonies on the preferential list, where the charge will be 5 per cent. From the increased Tariff duties an annual revenue of between $20,000,000 and 25,000,000 is expected.—Doylestown (Pa.) Intelligencer.

Water Storage

The Chamber of Commerce has requested our representatives in the legislature to introduce a bill making possible water storage for all the rivers of the State. The bill is substantially the same as the Jones bill of years ago. It was prepared by a committee representing the association for the preservation of the Adirondacks, the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, the North ern New York Development League, the Buffalo, Rochester and Watertown Chambers of Commerce, and has the approval of these organizations as well as the approval of the sentiment of all those in the State who have given unprejudiced thought or study to this great subject.

In view of the fact that our legislators are so heartily committed to legislation on this subject and particularly to this bill, and that Governor Whitman in the pre-election campaign showed beyond question his sympathy with the purposes and plans of Northern New York in this regard, the bill should have an easy time in the legislaturre. The provisions and purposes of the bill are well known throughout the state.

The regulation of the flow of our rivers to prevent floods in the spring and droughts in the summer is a proposition which commends itself to the judgment of all upon its mere statement. The difficulties of the accomplishment of a regulated flow are, however, not a few. This proposed bill is the result of thought of those who have given years of study to the subject, and it means the situation as well as it is possible to meet it. The subject is a state wide one. The rivers which now need particular attention are the Hudson, the Black and the Genesee, for the industrial life upon these rivers is seriously impaired during the low water period.—Standard, Watertown.

Behind the Pictures

Men and women visualize the battlefields with their dead and dying or the ocean with its drowning men clinging to bits of wreckage. But the nerves cannot bear such a continuous strain. By some provision of nature their acute sensibility becomes dulled. Even imagination loses its power to portray such terrible scenes. The war has now been in progress a little more than six months, and we can read of catastrophes to armies and fleets as if they were the normal events of life. From the eastern theater of war the report comes that the Russians lost 170,000 men, more than twice the total number now serving in the United States, and the story elicits scarcely an ejaculation. Perhaps the only way in which we can now realize the tragedy of the war is to neglect the numerals and look at a page of an illustrated British journal—the "Roll of Honor." Each week there are pictures of healthy young men, just such as we all know at home, who have fallen at the front and every one of them has a circle of sorrowing loved ones to whom this war is the supreme tragedy. There may be times, there have been times, when war forms the only means of saving honor. But in the progress of civilization we shall surely discover a method that will settle all differences without the brutality and barbarity that war always involves. If not, civilization will have been in vain.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Illiteracy on the Wane

For a clinching argument against the literacy test, and a conclusive vindication of President Wilson's course in vetoeing that proposal, nothing better is needed than the figures just made public by the United States Bureau of Education. Illiteracy is on the decline in this country. It is in such a state of decrepitude that it cannot survive as an appreciable detriment to our social order, and the disposition to acquire the arts of reading and writing is so pronounced, that it can not make head against such ignorance as is found here now, but against any influx of illiteracy which can proceed from the Old World.

A story is told of a Frenchman who kept a boarding house, and who owned a turkey of extremely mature age, and which had become a pet of the boarders. One day the turkey disappeared from the backyard, and was served up at the dinner-table.

"What, have you killed the turkey?" screamed the boarders in chorus. "Ah no—I not kill ze turkey," explained the proprietor. "Ze turkey—he die himself."

Illiteracy in the United States is in pretty much the same plight as the Frenchman's turkey. It is dying of itself.—Times, Buffalo.

Old Sol seems shy, but by and by he'll come in all his splendor. He'll say to you, "My friends so true, my thanks to you I render. For when time rolled, and winter cold brought snow and winds to freeze you, you did not whine, nor yet repine because I tried to tease you. You donned your cap and extra wrap, and snapped a fig for weather. You shoveled snow and on you'd go, your hearts as light as feathers. Now, friends of mine, I'm going to shine both sides the fence, don't doubt it. And then you'll know that I'm not slow. I'll tell you more about it. And when spring showers bring pretty flowers, I'll dress your trees in splendor. Then birds on wing, their songs will sing, sweet chants for you they'll render. The time is near, yes, almost here. Just now, spring's bells are ringing. Then, all abide on Sunny Side, where life anew is springing.

"ISIS ITEMS"

From a British Warship's Magazine

London, Mar. 2.—The British warship Isis, publishes a bright little magazine. It is called "Isis Items." A sailor contributor has composed the following parody on Carrolls, "The Jabberwock":

THE SUBMAROVE

'Twas Frescold and the Torpy droves
Did pate and troller on the Swead,
All Leapious were the Dolphipoise
And the Grute Geals outscreed.

"Beware, my son, the Submarove,
The Scope that peers, the torps that shine,
Beware the Zep-Zep bird, and shun
The Splovious Tentimine."

He took the Badgish ship in hand,
Long time the lurchive foe he sought,
Then hearkened he, 'neath the Turbolsea,
A submarovish snort.

And while in listish thought he stood
The Submarove with Scope awash
Came mumming through the Foamsome waves,
And Torpled as it Swosh.

He saw, and turned his Badgish ship
His Rammal bow hit Thick-a-thwack.
He left sim sunk ten fathoms deep,
And went Steamoliphing back.

"And hast thou sank the Submarove?
Come dine with me, my Blyish boy!
Brass hat shall be reward for thee."
He chortled in his joy.

'Twas Frescold and the Torpy-droves
Did pate and troller on the Swead.
All Leapious were the Delphipoise
And the Grute Geals outscreed.

"Tatchetee," the author signs himself.

"Splovious tentermine" means the explosive mine, and the "grute geals outscreed" is Carrollese for "the great gulls screamed." Some of the others are fairly obvious.

WHEN FRESH VEGETABLES ARE SCARCE

Mushrooms and Macaroni

(Italian style)

Put one tablespoon of butter and one teaspoon of lemon juice into the blazer of the chafing dish. Add two dozen mushrooms, broken into small pieces, and cook slowly for five minutes. Add one and one-half cups of milk, scald, and stir in two tablespoons each of butterr and flour, creamed together. When the sauce boils add one-fourth pound of macaroni, cooked and drained in the usual manner; heat over hot water, and just before serving add one-fourth cup of grated cheese.

Curried Vegetables

Make a cream sauce of one-fourth of a cup of butter and flour, one tablespoon of curry powder, half a teaspoon of salt, a dash of pepper and a pint of milk; add half a teaspoon of onion juice, one cup of cooked peas, half a cup each of potato balls, turnips cut into cubes and carrots cut into straws. Heat thoroughly and serve.

Kornlet Oysters

Two well beaten eggs, one cup of kornlet, two tablespoons of flour, a scant half teaspoon of salt and a dash of paprika. Drop by spoonfuls into a hot, well buttered blazer and cook to a golden brown on both sides.

Asparagus Peas

Cut the tender portions of one can of asparagus into pieces about one-half inch long. Make a cream sauce by melting one tablespoon of butter, and one of flour together, adding one cup of milk. Cook until thick, and add one can of French peas. Beat the yolks of two eggs, add half a cup of cream, and stir into the sauce. Add the asparagus. Heat and serve on squares of bread that have been well buttered and browned in the oven.

Mushroom Cromeskies

Peel fresh mushrooms. Wash and dry. Wrap each mushroom in a very thin slice of bacon and pin together with a wooden toothpick. Melt one tablespoon of butter in the chafing dish, add the mushrooms and cook for five minutes. Serve on toast.

APPETIZING RECIPES; TRY THEM

Fruit Puddings

A fruit pudding offers to the housekeeper not only an excellent way of using fruit in the daily diet, but also a very economical dessert. Before the fresh fruits and berries of the spring and summer come into season it is a good plan to use the dried fruits and the fruits that we have with us always as much as possible, for as long as the new berries last no one will look at dried fruits again. Yet with proper preparation these will make extremely good desserts.

Here is a boiled fig pudding that is exceedingly healthful as well as palatable. Chop one-half pound of beef suet very fine and rub it to a cream, one-half a pound of figs chopped fine, two heaping cups of stale bread crumbs; mix with one-half cup of milk two well-beaten eggs, one cupful of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of baking powder and a little flour; mix well together and steam for three hours. When cooked serve with the following sauce: Two eggs, beat the whites and yolks separately until very light, add one cupful of sugar, beat again and add one teaspoonful of brandy or sherry.

Steamed Date Pudding— Two cups of entire wheat flour add one-half a cup of molasses and one-half a teaspoon of bicarbonate of soda; one cup of milk, and a pinch of salt; pour this mixture over one pound dates, stoned and cut into pieces; steam for two hours in a covered mold and serve with a foamy sauce.

Foamy Sauce—Beat until foamy the whites of two eggs, add a cup of powdered sugar and beat well again, then add a cup of boiling milk and the juice of a lemon. Beat again and serve.

Rice Tutti-Frutti

To half a cup of cooked rice add one cup of cream whipped to a stiff froth, chop six figs, six candied cherries, a little preserved ginger and a little sliced citron; heat half a box of gelatine that has been previously soaked in half a cup of cold water, stir until it is dissolved; add to the rice and cream half a cup of sugar, the chopped fruit and strained gelatine; mix thoroughly, turn into a mold and set it in a cold place. Serve with sweetened whipped cream.

Lemon Pudding

One cup of sugar and three tablespoons of butter creamed together, one cup of mashed potatoes mixed with one-half a cup of cream, two eggs and the juice and rind of one lemon; add the cream and potatoes to the sugar and butter, last add the eggs and lemon and bake for 20 minutes.

Oyster Croquettes

Oyster croquettes are delicious when just right. They should be crisp without and creamy within, and when once you have tried them you will be sure to serve them frequently. Drain the oysters and bring them to a boil without adding any liquor. When plump drain once more, reserving the liquor that has collected in the sauce pan. Then chop fine. Put the liquor on to boil with a cup of rich milk, a tablespoon of butter and salt and pepper to taste. Thicken with a tablespoon of flour rubbed smooth with a tablespoon of milk, add the chopped oysters and cook a few moments, then spread out in a flat dish to cool; make into croquettes, dip in cracker crumbs, let them stand for an hour or two, then egg and crumb and fry according to directions for frying, previously given.

"SANITO" COOKING UTENSILS

are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

For the Children

While New York city has not had much snow this winter, there have been several days when the hills in Central park were covered with a hard, icy crust that made coasting a delight. You may be assured that the young folks of the great city who live anywhere near that famous playground made the most of the opportunity provided by old King Boreas. Sad to relate, a fatal accident occurred on one of the hills in the park. A little boy in endeavoring to avoid another coaster slid into a tree and was killed. Coasting is not a dangerous sport, but children are often careless at play, and when a hill is long and icy it is not well for very little folks to attempt to coast alone. The accident, of course, was a great shock to the boy's playmates, and perhaps most of them heeded the lesson it taught. The girl in the picture is Miss Betty Pierson, daughter of J. F. Pierson, Jr.

Forfeits.

When the young people are sitting around after the evening dinner here are some things to keep them busy:

Tell the culprit to grasp the right ankle with the right hand while standing on the left foot, bend it until the right knee touches the floor, then slowly rise to a standing position again. Keep the left hand extended, touching nothing. The right foot must not touch the floor nor the ankle be released from the right hand.

Put one hand where the other cannot grasp it. Do this by grasping the right elbow with the left hand.

Place an object on the floor so no one can jump over it. Do this by placing the article in a corner.

Hold the foot in one hand and walk around the room whistling "Yankee Doodle."

Pose as "Liberty Enlightening the World."

Stick a pin in the center of a ball of yarn, allowing it to stand up so that the victim can catch it with his teeth. Black the top of the ball with burnt cork. Play this only on a person who will take the joke without getting angry.

Put "Mary" through the keyhole. Write the name on a bit of paper and poke it through.

The Game of Wink.

The boys of the party are seated in a circle of chairs, of which one chair remains vacant. A girl stands behind each chair, her hands on its back. The girl behind the vacant chair selects a boy and literally "gives him a wink." Thereupon he tries to get from his chair to hers. His partner, however (the girl standing behind his chair), must be quick enough to intercept the wink and place her hands on his shoulders to restrain him. If she is successful the girl behind the empty chair must try again and until she has secured a partner. Then, of course, there is another chair to be filled in the same way.

It is a strict rule that the hands of the girls must remain on the backs of the chairs except when restraining a deserting partner. As all girls do not wink with equal facility or grace and no chance for practice is given, you can count on roars of laughter from this very simple game.

Queer Coal Chambers.

Chambers for the safe storage of coal are dug in the bottom of the Panama canal. The deposits of coal placed there will be secure from enemies, and a further advantage lies in the fact that coal is less liable to deteriorate under water than when exposed to air.

A Tongue Twister.

[This is said to be a certain cure for the hiccups if repeated in one breath.]

When a twister a-twisting, will twist him a twist,
For the twisting of his twist he three times doth untwist,
But if one of the twines of the twist do untwist,
The twine that untwisteth untwisteth the twist.
Untwirling the twine that untwisteth between.
He twirls, with the twister, the two in a twine;
Then twice having twisted the twines of the twine.
He twisteth the twine he had twined in twain.
The twain that, in twining, before in the twine,
As twines were entwisted, he now doth entwine;
'Twixt the twain intertwisting a twine more between,
He, twirling his twister, makes a twist of the twine.

Points for Mothers

Children's Clubs.

At about the age of nine or ten the rapidly developing social instinct of the child lights on the "club" idea. This is the beginning of secret societies. If taken in hand and properly treated this demand for social life can be made most educative.

Little girls' clubs are so easy to conduct that it must indeed be a hard hearted mother who, having once had the plan suggested to her, could refuse to give one afternoon a week to her young daughter.

The size of the club may vary as found desirable. Five are enough to have a pleasant time together. Twelve are really all one person can handle.

The club must have a name. The children are full of ideas on this subject. Sunshine Band, Happy Hour club, Busy Bees, Flower society and Helping Hands are a few of the names usually suggested. It may or may not be wise to have a president or club dues. Each individual leader will have to decide this for herself. A club badge, even if it be only a bow of the favorite color ribbon, is a source of great pleasure to little ones.

The object of the club will necessarily vary with the tastes of the children and the possibilities of the locality.

Game circles and dancing classes are always pleasant. Glee clubs are, where the leader is a capable musician, the greatest success of all. The concert which the small members give is an event of which the parents never cease to talk.

When Little Folks Are Ill.

A hot fomentation is the very best of all remedies for a really bad "tummy" ache and is so safe that whatever the cause of the upset it can do no harm.

Put the small patient to bed and give a dose of castor oil.

Take two yards of flannel, a large square of oil silk and some wadding.

Cut the flannel in half and tear one of the pieces into two strips, joining up the ends to make a long, wide bandage.

Place a towel across a large basin and put the whole yard of flannel, folded in three, into the towel and pour on boiling water.

Get some one to take one end of the towel, wring as dry as possible, lift out the flannel, hold to the air for a moment to cool down slightly, then slowly drop it on to the little sufferer's abdomen; not too quickly, as it may be too hot to bear; put a layer of cotton wool on top, cover with the oil silk and quickly bandage round and round with the long strip of flannel.

This will probably very quickly relieve the pain. It can remain on till the morning (unless the pain continues, when another one should be applied), but great care must be taken not to let the little one get a chill.

If the pain is not very severe you may apply a hot water bottle.

Toys and the Imagination.

When you have put into a child's hands an extremely elaborate toy it cannot and does not satisfy his imagination. He will play for a whole day with a train made of chairs, because imagination enters the game, the armchair is an engine, the sofa is a sleeping car, another armchair is the baggage car.

If you give him a perfect thing his imagination is not exercised; there is no part for it to take in the game, there is nothing to be done with the mechanical model except to break it open and see how it works. Indeed, more summary methods are sometimes attractive. A little boy of four years old, to whom an elaborate working model of a motor car had been presented, after watching it work for a few minutes, took it up in his hand and hurled it to the ground with a smile of satisfaction. It was the only thing he could think of doing with it.

That is why the hoop or the train of chairs or the rough and grotesque toy train will always give more real pleasure than the most elaborate machinery that can be conceived, that is why the rag doll or the woolly lamb will always lie nearer the heart's affections than the most wonderfully equipped and elaborately clothed French doll.

When a Child Should Walk.

Sometimes young mothers are worried because their babies of a year old or more do not seem inclined to walk. There is really nothing to be worried about.

A child will walk directly its legs are strong enough, and when that time comes, short of tying him up, you won't be able to keep him off his legs if he wants to use them.

No young child should be upon its feet before it shows a decided desire to go upon them. To put it on its legs before this time will not strengthen them at all and may result in deformed legs.

If a child a year old makes no effort to walk it is simply because its legs are not yet fit for walking. Let it alone. Give it plenty of fresh air, plenty of good milk, an egg every day or so, a slightly warm bath once a day, using soap sparingly; plenty of sleep and plenty of opportunity for "kicking exercise" on a rug and it will "find its feet" before long.

PASQUALE AMATO WILL SING AT MAY FESTIVAL

At a special meeting of the Board of Directors of the Central New York Music Festival Association at the Onondaga last night Fred R. Peck, president, announced that Pasquale Amato, baritone of the Metropolitan Ojera Company, had been engaged for the opening night of the festival, Monday, March 10.

Mr. Peck and Prof. Tom Ward, conductor, have just returned from New York, where they concluded arrangements with Mr. Amato to come to Syracuse for the second time on the occasion of the approaching festival. Amato is recognized today as the greatest operatic baritone in the world, and his singing at the Metropolitan this winter has aroused quite as much enthusiasm as that of Caruso.

He was herre for the 1913 festival and delighted everyone who heard him. Possessed of a striking personality and genial manner as well as a superb voice, Amato has a forremost position in the music life of this country and Europe.

By presenting Amato on the opening night with Mme. Frances Alda, also of the Metropolitan, the management of the festival is giving the music lovers of Syracuse and vicinity the strongest opening programme in the history of the festival. The first programme will be strictly operatic, and both Mme. Alda and Amato will be heard in arias from operas in which they excel.

The programmes for all the concerts are exceptionally strong, and the series will be brought to a close Wednesday with Miss Margaret Woodrow Wilson, daughter of President Wilson appearing in several songs. Prof. Ward conducted a successful rehearsal of the chorus at the Central High school last night. The works which he has selected are exceedingly interesting, and the chorrus gives evidence of doing better work than ever before.

BUSINESS DEPT. OF HIGH SCHOOL

Miss Waugh of the Commercial Department Believes Business Heads of Fulton Should Co-operate

The special teachers held sway at the Current Events club meeting which was held at the home of Rev. and Mrs. M. J. Peters last evening.

Miss Alta Thompson, supervisor of music, told of the work being done in her department in the schools. The method used was explained by chart and it was plainly seen the kiddies are doing real masterly work.

Miss Margaret Rankin spoke on the open air school and its possibilities, by taking up the side of the school training which is productive of great good aside from the physical side.

Mrs. Lora White Kesler elecution instructor, recited with fine interpretation, "The Song of this Country."

Mr. Lanigan, principal of the Phillip st. school, also instructor of the night school, spoke on the literacy test. One of the many good points made by Mr. Lanigan was that the establishing of a standard for the admittance of aliens is the greatest problem which this country has to solve. The establishing of such a standard cannot be done in a haphazard way. Too many conditions of complex nature surrounding the immigrant make it impossible to draw the line between the desirable and undesirable immigrants.

Mr. Lanigan pointed to the list of honor students in each of our leading colleges and universities whose names are of decided foreign construction The rapid strides made in the educational world by students of foreign extration is most marked and surpasses that of the average American. This, Mr. Lanigan explained, is not so much due to their superior learning capacity as to their intensity of purpose. Many incidents relating to the night school were given by Mr. Lanigan which showed the earnest desire on the part of the foreigners to receive an education.

Miss Jane Waugh, in charge of the commercial department of the schools, spoke enthusiastically on the value of commercial work in the school. Miss Waugh stated this department can do more thoroughly the work of training the students along commercial lines than can the average business college. Indeed, Miss Waugh thinks the average business school is a money getter, and not much else. In the large business colleges the average pupil is lost in the shuffle, while in the high school there is individual attention given each pupil which would be quite impossible in the business colleges.

Most of the pupils of the commercial department, Miss Waugh stated, are, in connection with their school work, doing extra work in the business offices in this city sufficiently remunerative to bear their expenses until the completion of their course.

Miss Waugh believes the business men of this city can do much in helping build up this important department in the school.

Miss Waugh stated further:

The people who for years contended that the public schools should recognize courses of study of those things which are most useful in preparing for the practical affairs of life must feel highly gratified to learn of the progress that the public schools of today are making along the lines of vocational training Vocational training is doubtless the most radical and far reaching change wrought for years in the history of education.

Is there one who does not welcome the new kind of education which has something to offer to all classes, something to please the boys and girls who are thec oming men and women who must determine the destiny of our country, its propserity, its happiness, its place among the nations of the earth.

Dean Balliet says: "There are two tpyes of minds—the bookish and scientific on the one hand, and the executive, on the other. To the foremr belong literary and scientific; to the latter, practical minds. The former want to know truth because it's true. The latter because they want to use it to do something with it. The large majority of our minds belong to the latter class, but our courses of study until recent years have been made only to suit the former. We cannot meet the needs of both with the same uniform curriculm, even in the lementary schools, and when the vocational interest and the instinct for earning money develop, pupils will leave scholl "to go to work' if the vocational interest is not made basal in their curriculm.

"The vocational motive in education has already brought about a defferentiation in our high schools, which accounts for the rapid increase in attendance. We have the literary, the technical, the commercial and the agricultural high school.

We realize that secondary education is most effective when it is based on the vocational interest. For most minds vocational education is the most effective "general" education, provided it is broadly conceived and includes all the science work and the so-called "literary" study which have a vital bearing on the vocation. Many minds can be interested only in scientific and literary studies in so far as they see their connection with their daily work or their lobby. Most of us adults are in that condition."

The above is indeed a notable statement in regard to training for usefulness, and was made by a man who sees things from a college man's viewpoint.

The thought that when we are teaching the pupils who want to do things how to do the things they want to do we are filling their minds with what they are hungry for. The kind of mind that demanded to know something that could be used was the kind that brought forth the private commercial school or business college—the only place for years where one might receive commercial training. It is reasonable to think that the founders of the private commercial school really offered the first challenge to our public school system by asserting that it did not provide the kind of training that was necessary for the average person who earned his or her own living.

When the Department of Education of New York State first offered special business and stenography diplomas few public high schools were offering commercial subjects. Since then they have taken up the technical commercial subjects and in a large number of cases have established full commercial departments with courses covering a period of four years. A pupil covering the work required by the four years' commercial course is entitled to the State Academic Diploma with the designation "in commercial subjects." To show that our State Commercial Course is conceived along broad lines I will read the subjects required for the four years' work:

Commerrcial Course

First Year:
English first year, 4; Algebra, 5; Biology, 5; Latin first year or German first year or French first year, 5; Music, 2.

Second Year:
English second year, 3; Plane Geometry, 5; Latin second year or German second year or French second year, 5; Elementary Bookkeeping and Business Practice, 3; Business Writing, 2; Elocution, 1.

Third Year:
English third year, 3; Ancient History or English History or History or Commerce, 3; Physics or Chemistry, 5; Commercial Law, 2½; Commercial Geography, 2½; Commercial Arithmetic, 2½; Elocution, 1.

Fourth Year:
American History and Civics, 5; Commercial English and Correspondence, 3; Advanced Bookkeeping and Office Practice, 5; Shorthand (optional) 5; Typewriting (optional) 2½; Elocution, 1.

The commercial subjects in the above course must be passed with a standing of notl ess than 75 per cent.

Many pupils leave high school before they have completed the entire course and therefore receive no definite testimonal of the work done. Such pupils would surely profit by the possession of one of the State certificates which may be secured by passing the repartment examinations in the commercial subjects without regard to academic education providing the time requirement in these subjects has been met.

The State Commercial Certificate is a credential granted to those who pass the department examinations in advanced bookkkeeping, Commercial arithmetic, commercial law, commercial English and correspondence, and business writing, provided the time requirement in each subject has been substantially met.

FULTON HIGH SCHOOL ART DEPARTMENT PRAISED

Saturday, February 27th, the Syracuse art conference was held in the Central high school, Syracuse. At that time a very high honor was conferred upon the Fulton high school by Dr. R. Bailey Farnum, the head of the drawing department of the State of New York.

Among the exhibits made at the high school was one arranged by Miss Nancy Cook, the supervisor of drawing and the teacher of handwork in the Fulton public schools. Miss Cook's exhibit consisted of basketry, jewelry and leather work done in her department during the past year. Among the work shown were problems of following pupils: Elizabeth Royce, Ruth Beels, Isabel Merriam, Pearl Foster, Hilda Clark, Fred Eames, Bernard Reswick and Dempster Hill.

The courses planned, the kind of work, the masterly execution and the high ideal of finished work held by the students were all recognized and praised by Dr. Farnum. He said that although no Regents' course had been mapped out by his department he would nevertheless grant full Regent's credits to Miss Cook's students in the Fulton high school but that this privilege would be taken away from the school in case of Miss Cook's department.

Dr. Farnum said that Miss Cook was a pioneer in this line of work but in emphasizing beauty in personal adornment and the beautifying of the pupils' home she was working along the progressive lines that depicted the change which is taking place in art instruction. He claimed that although the Fulton exhibit was the best one he had seen in this State he yet saw in it the possibility of greater growth and usefulness in the students in the high school.

60TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Was Celebrated Monday by Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Dann, In 2d Street

On Monday evening at 512 Utica st., the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Dann, a most happy celebration took place.

Surrounded by most of their children, grandchildren, nieces and nephews the sturdy old couple were surprised with the announcement that a quiet little banquet had been prepared for them all.

After a round of joyful congratulations all were seated around the festive boar at which Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Dann presided. Merriment was a guest at that table and many tales of the past were told and re-told of the trials, struggles and progress made by each one during the years gone by.

Mr. Dann, inshowing his marriage certificate stated that the ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Benson of the Wesleyan Methodist church in the old Gasper hotel the sight of which is now occupied by the Hotel Fulton.

One of the witnesses to the ceremony was Miss Marietta Holly, better known to the literary public as "Samantha Allen," the authoress.

Miss Holly happened to be snowed in at the Gasper hotel at the time and was asked to act as a witness. She consented and made a clever little speech at the end of the ceremony.

Mr. Dann is now in his 82d year while his wife is in herr 83d. They are both strong and well and when asked about the past, both stated, that they were always very happy and had made up their minds that they "did not intend to grow old."

Looking back Mr. Dann stated that it seemed but a short time to him as he can vividly remember almost every little detail of his wedding day.

At the close of the celebration all wished the venerable couple many happy returns of the day, in which sentiment all of their friends through Fulton and the entire county most heartily join.

OBSERVED LADIES' DAY AT BORROWED TIME CLUB

The Borrowed Time club at is regular meeting yesterday afternoon observed Ladies' day. A goodly number of ladies responded to the invitation and enjoyed the hospitality of the club.

President Whitaker presided and Sceratry Gilbert read a highly interesting letter from F. A. Arnold of Seattle, Wash. To be looking not into the past too much but into the future was what Mr. Arnold advised his Borrowed Time club friends to be doing. The time is past, he suggested when the "old man and his pipe" are relegated to the chimney corner to brood over by-gone days. Now the live questions of the day are absorbing the minds of those who passed the experiences of long years, and so keep him a live enjoyable companion. The whole lett er was an inspiration to the members.

Mrs. G. W. Braun spoke briefly on the fences of discord. Nationalism, creeds, big business, and the unequality of sexes served to illustrate the points.

Mrs. Rogers gave two pleasing piano selections, and Rev. M. G. Bassett when called upon by the president responded in a happy manner, bearing his remarks upon the discussions of the afternoon.

JAMES HARRIS' HOUSE BURNS

Was Completely Destroyed; Sparks Carried by High Wind Endangered Schoolhouse

At about 8 o'clock last night fire broke out at the home of James Harris on the East River road, near Lawton's hotel.

The roomers at the hotel and all the men about the neighborhood under the leadership of Mr. Harris formed a bucket brigade and worked with a will to save what they could; but the high wind fanned the flames to a furious blaze throwing showers of sparks high in the air and scattering them for nearly a mile away.

For some time it was feared that the Battle Island school house would be aflame from the blazing embers which were blown all about it; and it no doubt would have caught except for the untiring energy of the fire fighters who kept the roof wet with buckets of water from a nearby spring.

The Harris house was a two-story frame structure valued at about $2,500 which is fully covered by insurance.

The loss in furniture belonging to J. H. Burdick is estimated at about $800.

At 2.30 this morning the building was still blazing, but is was a total loss. The origin of the fire is unknown, but is is believed that an overheated furnace flue was the cause of it.

The volunteer fire fighters deserve great praise for saving the school house which at one time seemed doomed.

You get the $5 gold piece if you take the most Uneeda, Nabsico, Adora or Anola labels to C. A. Beckwith's shoe store. The count closes 6 p.m. Saturday, March 6th. The gold watch contest closes April 17th. Adv. 62c

BANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

rdoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, Mar. 2—Perhaps the most interesting figure in New York State politics today is Governor Charles S. Whitman. His splendid record as district attorney of New York county, his brilliant victory last November against two formidable candidates and his exacting and highly important duties in connection with the legislature which is dealing with subjects of great moment to the administration all tend to bring to immediate notice the man at the helm of State.

Much has been written of Mr. Whitman as a district attorney but very little has been brought to the attention of the reading public concerning his life and duties as the chief executive of the most powerful State in the Union. One of the first things which commend the governor to the average visitor to the Executive chamber at the State Capitol is his robust, attractive personality and his engaging smile. For these things Governor Whitman stands out as no other governor has stood out before. In spite of the manifold tasks which he must each day attend to, notwithstanding that politicians seek to trip him into promises by their adroit lines over which it is difficult to step without stumbling, the executive retains his smile and courtesy.

Governor Whitman as a news factor, pales in comparsion with Governors Glynn and Sulzer who were ever ready to vouchsafe some bit of information which could be readily weaved into a story. Whether it is because he is modest concerning his own ambitions and those of the party leaders who have given him their confidence, or for the reason that he doesn't think well of heralding forecasts of his intentions, he has little to say to the newspaper men whom he meets twice each day by standing arrangement.

It is generally agreed about the Capitol that the governor is a most interesting and likable character. While obviously cognizant of the importance of his duties he in no way leaves the impression that he is either overworked or in a hurry. Thorough to the eleventh hour he has been in siging bills and deliberate he is likely to be in disposing of subsequent ones which come to him from the legislature. In no hurry to make appointments, nevertheless when he announces his choice they are at least the ones which have thus far been announced—are confirmed by the Senate and favorably commented upon by the public.

Take it all in all, Governor Whitman is regarded as a safe and sane executive. He has been true to his promises of rertrenchment and economy, none can criticise his loyalty to his party and few would care to declare that his duty to the State has not been performed. That is saying much and yet there is no doubt as to the truth of it.

What criticism has been aimed at him has been mild and political in its trend. There has been an absence of arraignment of the governor from Democratic legislators, though naturally their views upon the legislation aimed to reorganize State departments occupied by Democrats do not coincide with his. The party the governor represents and not the executive himself is held as being to blame. Moreover, it is the policy of Governor Whitman by his own declaration to allow the law makers to take their own stand upon important bills, for there has been as yet no attempt to coerce them to nact legislation foreign toh is mesage and known policies.

Many times on record as the sponsor for frugality, it can be safely predicted that appropriations which appear toh im needless will be vetoed.

CALLS EDDY BLL MENACE TO STATE

Majority Leader in Assembly Opposes Legalizing Christian Science Practice

Albany, March 2.—The bill to legalize the practice of Christian Science healing was opposed by the majority leader, Mr. Hinman, when it came up for final passage in the Assembly today. Mr. Hinman gave his reasons for his opposition.

"It is common experience," said Mr. Hinman, "that the welfare of the public health depends entirely on the administrativ health officers being thoroughly informed of the presence of infectious or contagious diseases, that the proper means may be taken to control these diseases in their beginning and that epidmics may not arise from undetected sources. It is perfectly apparent that if the character of a disease is not ascertained it may prove to be infectious or contagious and give rise to a large number of other cases.

"The Christian Scientists deny the existence of disease, and denying its existence, they are, of course, incapable of differentiating between diseases. Having, in fact, no knowledge of this art, they treat tuberculosis, typhoid fever, diphtheria, scarelt fever, Bright's disease, heart disease and all other diseases in exactly the same manner. Mrs. Eddy's own book, the basis of their belief, requires them to abstain from all knowledge of hygiene and states that there are no diseases of the human body at all, and that the suppossed infection or contagion of a disease is a figment of the imagination.

"If the Christian Scientists wish to practise medicine, and the legal decisions of many courts in the different states hold that the practice of Christian Science belief is the practice of medicine, let them take the medical examinations and become licensed under the laws of the state as they at prresent exist and then practise as they choose.

"No matter how we feel concerning adults who submit themselves to treatment by Christian Scientists willingly, there can be no question that some protection is due children, who are incapable of making wise choice for themselves. There have been many instances in many states where children, under the treatment of Christian Scientists, have not alone died, but have become the starting points of epidemics because of the lack of regard for the health laws."

Robert S. Ross, a member of the New York Christian Science committee on public health, tonight issued a statement urging legislators to demand statistics on the number of deaths of persons under Christian Science treatment. He maintained that Mr. Hinman's criticism was not based on facts, and asserted that the deaths of children under Christian Science treatment were negligible, as compared to the deaths of those under the care of physicians.

BIBLE BILL FIGHT BEGAN TODAY

A lull before a storm is the manner in which Democratic Minority Leader Alfred E. Smith characterizes the cessation of protests against the bill which requires the daily reading of ten Bible verses in all the public schools of the State, which came before the Legislature today. Mr. Smith telegraphed yesterday to Harry S. Schlacht, superintendent of the East Side Protective Association, New York:

"We will win. Be prepared with your forces to fight."

Assemblyman Smith has taken a decided stand against the Greiner-Tallett bill and has notified Mr. Schlacht that the Democratic members of the Assembly will follow his lead in opposing the measure. The forces which Mr. Smith refers to are the children and mothers who accompanied Mr. Schlacht to Albany, where they spoke against the bill.

Mr. Schlacht said last night that more than one hundred mothers had petitioned him to permit them to accompany his party to the state capital. Of these he has chosen six. There were six children, three of whom were girls.

"The people of the East Side are aroused and are more firm than ever to effect the defeat of this obnoxious bill," said Mr. Schlacht. "The Assemblymen of the East Side have united with us in the condemnation. We speak not as Jews, but as Americans, when we urge the defeat of this bill, for we do not know what would be forthcoming next."

Judge Aaron J. Levy is chairman of the committee which will travel to Albany. The other members are former Deputy Attorney General Edelson, ex-Assemblyman Adolph Stern, Alfred E. Smith, Democratic minority leader of the Assembly; Assembly Nathan D. Perlman, Miss Sadie American, Assemblyman Harry S. Schimmel and Harry S. Schlacht.

MOTT WILL MEET STOCK YARD BUTCHER

Fulton's heavyweight boxer, Henry Mott, is scheduled to meet Fred Steward, the stockyard butcher, in a bout at Sullivan's hall, West Side, Tuesday evening, March 9. This match promises to be one of the liveliest of the season, as for some time Mott has been somewhat in the background. He has had a thorough rest and should be able to give the butcher the knowledge that makes men wise.

It will be a handicap match, Mott agreeing to throw Steward two times in 40 minutes, the winner to get the purse, gate receipts and glory.

Mott's match last Saturday night, when he won honors by throwing Leightemann, the German-Pole two times in 50 minutes, proves The Times' prediction for the coming event.

Mott's performance Tuesday evening will do a lot toward inspiring the confidence of his friends in him when he meets Leo Podello of New York city at an early date.

DON'T THROW AWAY GOOD WILL

SEVERAL PUBLICITY EXPERTS RECENTLY GAVE THEIR OPINIONS ON PRESENT ADVERTISING CONDITIONS.

J. B. Shelffield, advertising director of Gimbel Brothers, New York city, in discussing the temptation to discontinue advertising, has the following to say:

"Probably more money is wasted in advertising by running consistently in a publication for a long time, and then suddenly dropping it, than in any other way.

"It amounts to deliberately throwing away the good will which the readers of that publication have built up for the advertiser's name and product.

"It is better to advertise moderately, but regularly, than to use larger copy spasmodically."

H. K. McCann, the well known advertising agent, says that persistent advertising pays, because:

"Advertising is friendly. It persaudes. Slowly but inevitably, it creates the attitude of good will and confidence. It brings customers—who stay. A business built up in this way is built on a firm foundation. It's the kind of success that lasts. But it cannot be done in a day—or a month. Nothing but persistent advertising will accomplish this sort of success."

MATTY GETTING OLD

Menke Says Chances Favor Giants, With Braves as Close Followers

By Frank G. Menke

The 1915 pennant fight in the National League probably will be between the Giants and the Braves. Unless some miracle is wrought the Phillies, Dodgers, Pirates, Cubs, Cardinals and Reds will not figure very largely in the bunting battle.

But don't bet against the chance of that sextet. This is the age of miracles. That was domonstrated last year in the case of the Braves. None of the six teams mentioned looks strong enough—on paper—to give a real battle to the Braves or Giants. But you never can tell.

The Giants' chances depend very largely on what the young pitchers can do. McGraw has an army of them and ought to extract two or three good ones from the lot.

Tesreau probably will be the Giants' mainstay this year. Mathewson is getting old, but he should have a good year. Matty, if not worked too often, ought to be good for at least 60 per cent. of his games. It is not certain at this writing, whether Marquard will be with the Giants when the season opens. Even if he is it is not certain what he will do. He may have a good year—and he may not. Fromme, another of the Giants' veterans, probably will be worked only as a relief pitcher.

Schupp, Schauer, Ritter and Palmero look better than the other young twirlers. Two of the four might measure up to major league standards. Probably one or two of the other youngsters will blossom into a star. If they do McGraw will have a pitching staff that need not cause him worry.

The Giant infield probably will be Merkle, at first; Doyle at second; Fletcher, at short, and Lobert, at third. None of the youngsters seem to be good enough to replace the veterans, at least at the start of the season.

In the outfield, McGraw will have Burns, as certainty in left field. For the other two fields he will have Robertson, Piez, Bescher, Snodgrass, Murray and Thorpe to draw from, with the chances of favoring Robertson and Snodgrass.

Behind the bat, McGraw is well fortified. He has a star in Smith, secured from the Savannah club. Elmer Johnson, another recruit, isn't such a bad catcher. Meyers and McLean are the veterans. Both have passed their prime—but both still are pretty good at clubbing and also at backstopping.

The Braves will present a stronger lineup in 1915 than they did in 1914. That would indicate that they ought to be odds-on favorites for the pennant. But they aren't. The Braves in 1914 were favored by luck. Will they be favored in 1915? That's the question—and the gamble.

The Braves' infield, probably is the strongest in the National League. Schmidt, at first, is a sure fielder and a good hitter. Evers at second—well, what's the use of telling about him? At short, there's Maranville, the most marvelous shortstop that is playing the game today. J. Carlisle Smith, at third, although he does not measure up to the standard of his three mates, is a good fielder and a fair hitter.

The acquisition of Sherwood Magee has greatly strenghtened the Braves outfield. Magee's presence adds at least 50 per cent. to the offensive and defensive power of the outfield. With Catcher, Moran, "Slugging Joe Connolly and Gilbert as company for Magee, the outfielding department of the Braves will be taken care of better than ever before.

Behind the bat there's "Hammering Hank" Gowdy. He's almost enough in himself, but the Braves also have Bert Whaling, one of the best fielding backstops in the game, and three recruits—Fred Tyler, William Tragesser and Frank Buggy. All three are highly touter.

The Braves have no cause for worry about the pitching department. They will have as veterans "Big Bill James and Dick Rudolph, who performed in such wonderful fashion last year and "Lefty" Tyler, who pitched marvelous ball from July until the end of the season and a swarm of youngsters.

Included among the "youngsters" are George Davis, who pitched a no-hit game last season and who is reported to be ready for regular duty in 1915; Cottrell, Crutcher, Strand and Cochran who were on the Braves roster last year, and, Luque, secured from Jersey City where he made a great record.

Tom Hughes, secured from Baltimore, and Otto Hess, the veteran, round out the Braves' pitching staff.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Sammy Robideau Aspires to Lightweight Title.

Little Sammy Robideau, who made everybody sit up with a start when he flattened Gilbert Gallant in four rounds recently, is perhaps the most dangerous puncher in the ring today. He is one man who has the entire respect of Champion Welsh.

Robideau was born in Minneapolis, Minn., in 1892. He enlisted in the United States navy in 1909 and began his career as a fighter in the service. He beat all the good ones in the navy, and after his discharge he went to Philadelphia, applied to Jack McGuigan for a berth and has been with him ever since. One man is responsible for Robideau's improvement. This is little Johnny Loftus, who piloted Ketchel, Frankie Neil, Leach Cross, Al Kaufman and Jack Johnson. Loftus said in speaking of his latest charge:

"He will win the title sure. He is the hardest hitter alive, and he is going ahead all the time. He has had about fifty battles and never has been knocked out, though I will say Joe Shugrue almost turned it at the Garden. You remember Joe landed one on Sam's chops, and he took a count of seven for his bit. Robideau thinks Gallant is the roughest and toughest fellow he ever met, while Jimmy Duffy is the classiest. I only hope Welsh gives us our chance. I'll stake my life on it that he knocks the Welshman cold."

Olympian Stowaway Turns Boxer.

Harry Norton, the schoolboy whose propensity for traveling led him to become a stowaway on the ship that carried the American athletes to Stockholm on the occasion of the last Olympiad, has turned a boxer. Norton made his professional debut a few weeks ago in a four round preliminary and made such a showing that three fight managers have offered to look after his business affairs. Norton stopped Kid Moulton in three rounds. His work showed class throughout. Norton stripped to 116 pounds. He declares he is cured of the wanderlust.

Amateur Baseball League.

E. C. Patterson of New York was re-elected president of the National Amateur Baseball association at a meeting at Cleveland. C. C. Townes of Cleveland and George Buechel of Louisville were elected vice presidents and E. C. Seaton, Chicago, secretary and treasurer. Pittsburgh and Detroit were admitted to membership in the league. Applications from about forty other cities were received. Reports were made showing the healthy growth of amateur baseball and plans discussed for the 1915 amateur world's championship series.

Nickalls Coming Back.

Guy Nickalls, the English oarsman, sailed from London on Feb. 20 to take charge of coaching the Yale university crews, according to a statement by Captain Denegre at a mass meeting of crew candidates. More than 200 students presented themselves as candidates for positions in the varsity and freshman boats. Practice on the machines will begin soon in the gymnasium.

English Horse Wins King's Cup.

The winner of the King-emperor's cup at Calcutta on Christmas was the English bred Arthur B., by Athi, and on the following day he ran second to Bachelor's Wedding in the Viceroy's cup. This makes six consecutive victories for British bred stock in the Viceroy's cup, which was formerly monopolized by Australian breds.

Peterson Heads Oarsmen.

The Pacific Association of Amateur Oarsmen elected Henry C. Peterson president. The San Francisco rowing organization indorsed the application of San Diego for this year's annual championship of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen. This regatta will be awarded next March.

NOTABLES IN THE LIMELIGHT

General Moritz von Bissing, Governor of Belgium.

When General Moritz von Bissing, German governor general of the occupied territory in Belgium, assumed the duties of his office he said he wished the Belgians to know that he was a just enemy; that his aim was to maintain peace and order in the land that had become the basis of the operations of the German army in the western theater of war. He added that he hoped to succeed with a policy of mildness, but that he would apply stern measures if they should become necessary. He contemplated no change in the policy of his predecessor, but as he always had been interested in economic problems he hoped in cooperation with the civil administration to do everything possible to get the weak on their feet again in Belgium.

General von Bissing succeeded General Colmar von der Goltz, who was first appointed military governor, but later was sent to Turkey to assist in the mobilization of the sultan's army and in the planning of the campaign against the Russian forces. General von Bissing is now seventy-one years old and is a veteran of the war of 1866 against Austria, and he also served in the Franco-Prussian war. From 1901 to 1908 he was commanding general of the Seventh army corps. In 1902 he was promoted to the rank of general of cavalry and later raised to the nobility and made a member of the herrenhaus, the upper house of the German parliament. During the early period of the present war General von Bissing was engaged in staff duties at headquarters and took little if any part in the actual fighting. Although highly regarded as a soldier, his prodigious as an organizer and his skill as a campaign tactician made his services very valuable at headquarters.

Wyoming's New Governor.

The new governor of Wyoming, John B. Kendrick, succeeds Joseph M. Carey, who the past four years has presided over the commonwealth. Mr. Carey was a Progressive in politics, and his successor is a Democrat, who was indorsed in the recent campaign by the Progressives as "the individual through whom the greatest measure of fulfillment of Progressive principles in Wyoming can be secured." Mr. Kendrick was elected by a plurality of 3,213 votes in a total vote of 43,377, and a majority of the whole number of votes cast of 1,397. He also polled a larger vote than the Democratic presidential candidate in 1912.

Governor Kendrick is a successful stockman and farmer, with large holdings of land in the northern part of the state. Until recently he had taken no great part in political affairs, but about six years ago he was elected to the state senate. Since that time he has been coming to the front as a public man and has rapidly gained in popularity. In 1913 he was nominated by the Democrats for a seat in the United States senate, but was beaten by the Republican incumbent, Francis Emory Warren.

WORKING FOR REVISION

New Committee Formulating Plans for Amendment to the United States Constitution.

New York, Mar. 2.—From its headquarters in Brooklyn, the committee on the Federal constitution is working hard to further the measure introduced in Congress by Representative Bryan revising the amending article of the constitution. Their purpose is to put the government of the United States more fully in the hands of the people.

The new committee includes Dr. John B. Andrews, secretary of the American Association for Labor Legislation; Prof. Charles A. Board of Columbia University; W. T. Cross, secretary of the National Conference of Charities and Correction; Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart of Harvard university, and Mrs. Florence Kelley, general secretary of the National Consumers' League.

The resolution introduced by Representative Bryan provides for the reduction of the vote by which Congress may propose amendments t othe Constitution, from two-thirds to a majority, and of the proportion of the States required for ratification of amendments so proposed, from three-fourths to twoi-thrds.

It also provides for a new plan of revising the Constitution that is independent of Congress and of the State Legislatures. This new plan requires that the question of holding a convention to propose amendments to the Constitution shall be submitted to the voters of the country at every fifth Presidential election, or every twenty years, and at such other Presidential elections as a majority of Congress or a majority of the States may determine.

When decided in the affirmative, delegates would be chosen and the convention assembled on the fourth of March two years afterwards and the convention's recommendation submitted to popular vote at the ensuing Presidential election. By the terms of this measure a majority vote for ratifying amendments proposed by conventions. Each state would be represented in the convention by as many delegates as it had representatives in the two houses of Congress.

The committee declares that "the people of the United States have not control over their fundamental law at the present time, save in a minor degree, with the consequence that our institutions do not reflect the popular will, but in reality other forces over which we have only a measure of control."

HOME DECORATION.

Lace Is Important In House Adornment, So 'Tis Said.

Lace assumes more and more an important place in the domain of home furnishings. It is so important that upholsterers have to employ lacemakers and are obliged to make lace purchases on a considerable scale.

Among other things, pianos and windows are draped with lace.

The renaissance combines with lace of quite modern origin. And combining with all and second to none in fashion or effect is the old fashioned crochet. The present taste for crochet denotes a remarkable revival in this kind of thing.

Another revival besides it and making common cause with house and especially drawing room decorations is the equally old fashioned netting. For long years past this species of handwork has been left almost exclusively to fishermen and their industrious wives.

It served for fishing nets, and that was about all. But now it is coming back as fast as it can to the place it occupied, let us say, a hundred years ago, in the repertoire of fancy work for women.

Then was the time when dainty slipper cased feet were put forward and used in the service of the kind of fancy work known as knitting. Now machinery does a great deal of the work which human fingers, aided by the foot, used to do.

But whether wrought by fingers or machinery, it remains a fact that old fashioned netting is a distinct revival and that its presence in drawing rooms throws an air of fashion around them. The effects of embroidery upon it are now more artistic than of yore, nature as well as pictures often serving as models.

Spider Web Embroidery.

The new spider web embroidery is charming. The webs are used for backgrounds of floral designs, bright colored dragon flies and the like and sometimes stand out alone with only the residing spider upon them. The embroidered webs are alarmingly and delightfully natural, being usually of pale gray. They may be made in any color that you prefer, however, and a beautiful effect can be obtained by such a design in different shades of deift blue, the lightest shade being used for the webs. Spider web embroidery is being used upon luncheon sets, bureau sets and occasionally upon sofa pillows.

FADS AND FANCIES.

Boudoir caps have large bows made of wide ribbon.

Organdie will be a great favorite in cotton materials.

Simplicity is the keynote of the new shirt waist styles.

Dainty muslin collars, berthas and ruffles, recalling the mid-Victorian days, are among novel neckwear for spring.

New crocheted scarfs are being done with irregular patterns which suggest the old Spanish designs that came from Vienna.

For the Children

Young German Patriots Saluting Kaiser Wilhelm.

Young people, as a rule, are intensely patriotic. They believe—and it is natural they should—that no country equals their own native land. No other nation is so great and powerful and nowhere else are the soldiers so brave. It is entirely proper that one should cherish a love of country and home, for without patriotism to inspire it no nation would amount to much. The boys in the picture are German, and their picture was taken during a recent visit of the German emperor to Berlin. At the present time he does not spend much time at his capital, but more frequently is at the battle front. The boys, you will notice, are dressed in uniform. They were standing at their window so as to be able to see their loved ruler, and when he arrived opposite their place they saluted in true military fashion.

Two schoolgirls were busily occupied with their lessons, when the younger asked abruptly:

Far From Tipperary

A Story of Love and War

X

"The General's compliments, sir, and he would like to see you at headquarters."

This message was brought to me some days after the events I have just narrated. Headquarters were at the Château de Vervé. Our advance had been checked. The enemy had fallen back upon prepared positions and was holding his lines in what subsequently developed into the battle of the Aisne, or, as it is sometimes called, the battle of the Seven Rivers.

The men of my raiding force had been distributed among their several commands and I was again with my regiment. But I think I should add that when our little fight at the passage of the river was over I was not obliged to wait long before the destruction of the bridge became known to the retiring flank of the enemy in whose rear we were operating. About a mile and a half from across the river was a long, low ridge. Suddenly a score of little pennants, coming from the far side, fluttered above it. Then I saw the shafts of lances, like so many slender masts. The helmets and heads of a body of uhlans next appeared, and finally the men and horses of the whole reconnoissance. Evidently they had been hurried back from the line of retreat to aid in rushing up the caissons. Now as they looked down from the ridge they saw only the remnants of a bridge and their train in the hands of British cavalry.

Again I called upon "Bertha" for her star act. The shell, bursting among the reconnoitring cavalry, sent it scurrying back to the main force with word, no doubt, that the train was captured, the bridge destroyed and the river where the crossing had been held by a hostile force with artillery. In any event, in about the time it would have taken the scouting party to get back to its lines the big white bubbles began to veer eastward, showing that the enemy felt obliged to draw in the extreme right of his line and make the crossing further upstream, which greatly accelerated the movement of the Allies by leaving a clear space on their front.

Using the pontoons sidetracked by the river, I started to throw a bridge across for the use of the British, who might be expected to come up in a few hours. In fact, the last pontoon hardly was in place before the first scouting parties of English cavalry appeared on the ridge from where, earlier in the day, we had sent the uhlans scampering back. The German retreat had swung off to the east and the British left was coming forward to reoccupy positions from which it had been forced when the enemy was making his terrific but unsuccessful drive at Paris.

And now my commanding general, with headquarters at the château, where I had not been since I had rejoined my regiment, had sent for me.

"The War Office," he said, after he had returned my salute, "has acknowledged your report, which I forwarded to it, and instructs me to say that it will follow the recommendations for promotions which you have made. Heathcote and the other officers who have served under you have been made captains. The 'non-coms' mentioned in your report have received commissions. It has occurred to me that, as the services for which these men have been promoted were rendered under you, it might be a pleasure to you and an equal one to them if their commissions were handed them by you."

I thanked him for his consideration, and, as he seemed to have finished and had handed me a bundle of papers, I rose to go. Just then there was a knock at the door and Henriette came in, directing an inquiring look at the General, who greeted her with his accustomed old-time dignity and courtesy.

"I sent for you, Baroness," he said, "because this is the officer who has been conducting military operations in your neighborhood."

"Oh!" she laughed. "I know Major Carden very well."

"Really?" he asked. "It seems to me, then, you should be aware of his rank."

She looked at the General, then at me, and naturally somewhat in bewilderment; nor, I must confess, did I appreciate what he was driving at.

"The last time I saw this officer," he continued, "he was a captain, and I have never seen his commission as a major. All I have for it is his word. For several days I have had my doubts as to his being a major, and now these doubts have been confirmed. Here is a communication for him from the War Office. The word 'major' isn't mentioned in it. The rank by which it is addressed to him as 'Brigadier General.'"

That is the way my father's old friend and comrade announced to me the brilliant reward England had accorded me for my services in the woods of Vervé, in which, without thought of self—for that I can honestly say—I had but sought to do my duty as a soldier.

When the large envelope was in my pocket he placed a hand on my shoulder. "My boy," he said, "your father, one of the finest officers I ever knew, would have been proud could he have lived to see this day. And now, Baroness, I will ask you to excuse me. I am riding out to inspect the lines." And with his courtliest bow to her he left us.

I had heard Henriette give a little gasp, unmistakably of joy, when the General read off the address on the envelope. Now I turned toward her. For a moment her eyes met mine. Then, as a deep flush mounted her face, she looked down.

Why did my throat feel so dry? Why wouldn't the words come out? Why did it seem that it required far less courage to charge a battery than to say what I wanted to? Was it because the happiness of my life depended on her answer?

As I stood there confused, awkward, hesitating, she gave a little furtive glance in my direction. It seemed to say:—"Here I am. Are you going to take me or leave me?"

That decided me.

"Henriette, if you love me, for God's sake, say so!"

Again that furtive glance; an arching of the lips in a delightfully coquettish smile; finally, and with a most delicious inflection of voice:—

"Are you really such a very long way from Tipperary?"

Even I, big, blundering fool that I was, sensed her meaning. A long way? One stride took me to her and brought her into my arms; and when she was safely there I heard her draw a deep sigh of relief, as if a great load had been lifted off her mind.

(The End.)

TOWNS FOR WAR VICTIMS.

Belgian Refugees in Holland Are Housed in Structures of New Design.

A new Belgian town in Gelderland, about five minutes' walk from the picturesque village of Nunspect, has arisen as if by magic. It has more inhabitants than any other in the Veluwe, the well wooded, hilly heathland of the province of Gelderland.

The town is one of the cities of refuge for the Belgian fugitives that are being or have been constructed in various parts of Holland, and this particular place is made ready for a population of 13,000. A large tract of heather grown soil has been fenced in with barbed wire, and within this inclosure has been built a town of wooden buildings, a town in three parts, each separated from the others by long, wide stretches of heather.

The wooden sheds have double walls to exclude cold and are covered with plates of a newly invented material that is impervious to the wet. Each building can shelter 250 persons, who sleep in little rooms designed for five persons each. The buildings are heated by huge stoves.

Meals are served in great common dining rooms for 1,000 persons each, with long tables and benches alongside. These dining sheds stand close to the kitchen, where ten big stoves are kept going all day for cooking. No separate cooking is allowed in the living and sleeping buildings and no smoking either—all for fear of a possible fire, which might have most disastrous consequences in this town of timber. The town is electrically lighted.

Another large refugee town for 10,000 people is being built at Ede, also in Gelderland, and other camps are to be made in other healthful localities, for it has been found absolutely necessary to evacuate the first fugitive camps, those in north Brabant, Zeeland and Limburg.

In a kind of way the Belgians in these refuge towns govern themselves, although the burgomaster is appointed by the Dutch government. Under him stand the several parish priests, who know their flocks, having fled with them to Holland. The priests choose trustworthy men to keep order in the various sections and to be spokesmen for the people if they have anything to request. Every day the burgomaster makes the rounds of his town himself, and any one that wishes may speak to him personally.

A Utilities Bureau.

Preliminary plans for the organization of a vast national agency through which all American cities may co-operate in exchanging information about public utilities were made recently in Philadelphia when the trustees appointed at the recent convention of American mayors in that city held their first meeting. After perfecting their own organization the trustees, who include men of national reputation, outlined the activities which will be essayed in 1915 by the new utilities bureau, an organization which, with its tremendous scope, is expected to lead to a fairer adjustment of public utility rates and service throughout the country.

In general the organization will serve as a national agency, in which American cities may co-operate in exchanging data as to rates, service standards and cost factors in municipal utilities.

Improved Gas Illumination.

Owing to the numerous improvements, the intensity of gas illumination today runs to 5,000 candle power and over in single burners.

The gas is also distributed under much higher pressure than formerly. The city of Berlin has systems in operation as high as seventeen and a half pounds per square inch. This pressure is obtained by the use of blowers.

Another practice employed abroad is to light whole sections of the city simultaneously. This is accomplished by an automatic lighter for each lamppost, which are caused to operate by slight changes in the pressure. These changes are in the mains and are controlled from a central point. The lights are extinguished simultaneously by the same method.

Spontaneous Combustion.

Spontaneous combustion can only occur when oxidation causes the temperature to rise to the ignition point of the material. Spontaneous combustion of the human body is impossible on account of the heat regulating effect of the 75 or 80 per cent of water contained. The enormous heat necessary to dry the tissues sufficiently would destroy life long before ignition could take place. An old idea was that the alcohol in a confirmed drunkard might promote combustion, but Liebig showed that even if the body could give off inflammable vapor and this could become ignited the body itself would not be set on fire.

CITY ELECTRIC STREET RAILWAYS

Equipment Depends on Condition to Be Met.

THE COURSE OF TRAFFIC.

In Developing a Comprehensive Traffic System Thorough Study of the Flow of Traffic Should Be Made and Its Probable Increase Taken Into Account.

In the operation of a street railway system the equipment will depend, as in the case of the power house, upon the conditions to be met.

If the system is a local one direct current at 600 volts should be adopted, but if the lines run into distant suburbs the best current to adopt is the single phase, and the voltage may run to 10,000 or 15,000, thus reducing line loss.

The equipment of the cars should be such as to run on either the 600 volts direct current in the city or on the single phase, high voltage current in the suburbs, thus passing to and from the city without interruption.

The substations for stepping down the high voltage current should be well situated along the line to obtain the most economical power distribution. They are preferably located around the outskirts of the city on the various lines, so that high voltage current will not be brought into the city. The distribution system in the city itself should be underground, a method which, though more expensive than the overhead distribution system, is otherwise preferable, due to the many advantages it possesses.

PLANT AT DARDOW SUPPLYING ELECTRIC POWER TO STREET RAILWAYS.

In developing a comprehensive traffic system thorough study of the flow of traffic should be made and its probable increase taken into account. Where the traffic is heavy or likely to grow to large proportions, especially where the haul is long and heavy, the question of subways and elevated roads should be considered, even though the necessity is not imperative, as such rapid and convenient means of transit to outlying districts will have the effect of developing such sections and of causing the city to expand much more rapidly than would otherwise be the case. The same is also true to only a less degree in the case of suburban trolley lines.

In the development of a traction system much depends on the comfort and convenience of the traveling public. The equipment should be up to date and attractive in every respect. Cars should be of appropriate design and of neat appearance. Means of access should be easy; the seats should be comfortably designed and preferably crosswise in the car, as the public is paying for a seat and should have a seat and not a crowded bit of a side bench or a strap to hang on by.

Abroad it is customary for companies calling for bids on electric traction systems to receive not only specifications of cars, but also detailed designs, showing color schemes and interior decorations. The companies are thus in position to select the most pleasing and effective designs of cars instead of taking whatever car manufacturers may be pleased to turn out.

In handling traffic the convenience and interest of the public as well as of the operators is best served by having a uniform fare rate instead of a variable scale of fares and by the issuance of transfers at all intersections. Such transfers should be issued at the time demanded by the passenger, though preferably when entering the car if the ingress of passengers is not thereby interfered with. If demanded on leaving the car traffic is likely to be delayed.

Abroad passengers are seldom allowed to stand in cars, and operators are obliged to supply sufficient cars so that there will be seats for all. On paying his fare the passenger gets a ticket with the destination punched, similar to our system of railroad tickets, and this ticket in many cases entitles the passengers to reach his destination over any lines that intervene.

TO REVISE METHODS OF AMENDING CONSTITUTION.

Entirely New Plan of Revision Proposed by Commission.

A movement has been launched by the committee on the federal constitution for a revision of methods of amending the constitution of the United States that will make it easier to secure needed amendments in the future. A resolution embodying the committee's plan was recently introduced in congress by Representative Bryan of Washington. A two-thirds vote in both houses of congress and ratification by three-fourths of the state legislatures will be necessary to the adoption of this resolution.

The changes provided for in the resolution would reduce the vote by which congress proposes amendments to the constitution from two-thirds to a simple majority and of the number of the state legislatures required for the ratification of amendments from three-fourths to two-thirds. In addition to this an entirely new plan of revising the constitution is proposed.

This new plan calls for the submission to the voters every twenty years of the question whether a convention shall be called to propose amendments to the constitution, and when decided in the affirmative delegates are chosen and the convention assembled on the 4th of March two years afterward, while amendments proposed by the convention are voted on at the ensuing presidential election, a two-thirds vote being required for ratification. This plan is almost identical with the convention system of amending state constitutions as followed in New York and other states.

The committee believes that the present method of amending the constitution is outworn and unworkable and that if the constitution is in the future to be adapted to changing social and political needs a more liberal method of amendment must be adopted. It is claimed in behalf of the plan that it requires full deliberation, does not encroach on the rights of the states and affords adequate protection to the minority. The proposed convention system would not make the calling of conventions compulsory, but only optional, and this, it is believed, will insure against interference with the constitution except when there is a general demand. The committee contends that under the present system the people have but little voice in matters affecting the constitution and that this plan is put forth to give them power. Self government in any real sense is, in the committee's opinion, impossible without it.

The committee includes in its membership Professor Charles A. Beard of Columbia university, W. T. Cross, secretary of the national conference of charities and correction; H. S. Gilbertson, executive secretary of the national short ballot organization; Professor Albert Bushnell Hart of Harvard university, Miss Florence Kelley, general secretary of the National Consumers' league; Owen R. Lovejoy, general secretary of the national child labor committee; Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, secretary of the federal council of the churches of Christ; Charles A. Prosser, secretary of the National Society For the Promotion of Industrial Education; Professor Edward A. Ross of the University of Wisconsin; Rev. Charles Stelzle, founder of the Labor temple, and Clinton Rogers Woodruff, of the National Municipal league.

DEAF, HEARS ON CHRISTMAS.

Soldier Who Lost Faculty in Battle Recovers.

This is the story of a man who was made deaf and dumb in battle by the nearby explosion of a great shell. His name is Darcy, and he is a patient in Claridge's in Paris, along with many other wounded men, among whom is another Darcy, a brother of the hero of the story, who was serving with him in the Foreign legion.

The Darcy who was not made deaf was very badly wounded. When he reached Claridge's he was grief stricken because his brother had been separated from him. That was soon remedied by a doctor, who discovered the missing man in a hospital in Normandy and had him brought to Paris. The meeting of the two was touching and moved the other wounded men to tears.

Everything was done to make the deaf man hear and speak, but to no avail. Then finally, on Christmas day, all the wounded men, gathered together in front of the Christmas tree, let out a collective yell that would have raised the deaf man from the dead. Instead it made him hear—the first sound he had distinguished since the shell exploded. That was the beginning, and now he is slowly getting back his faculties. His brother, too, is recovering from his wounds.

FOR PET DOGS.

Here are a few of the dainty things for the pet dog:

Military brushes, which can be monogrammed in silver.

Collars of leather, studded with brass, or with jewels if one cares for them.

Rubber coats, lined with wool for the sake of warmth, that keep all rain from the dog's back.

Rubber shoes of red flexible leather that pull on like riding boots.

Black rubber shoes that lace up the back.

Straw or leather traveling bags, well ventilated.

Bells of silver or brass to fasten on the small dog's collar.

Enameled sleeping baskets in blue and white.

Umbrellas that are strapped around the dog's body and held erect in this way over its back.

Roses and other artificial flowers to fasten to the dog's collar.

"AN IMAGINARY GRUDGE," IS THE ACCUSATION LEVELED BY FAIR PLAY AGAINST OBSERVER

Editor Evening Times:

To a person who is not interested, the discussion being carried on in The Evening Times between Edward Joslin on the one hand and another who styles himself "Observer," it all may appear as a "joke," but when you look at the matter with the serious consideration due a discussion of this character it does not in reality prove to be so "light" a subject after all.

"Observer" seems to be harboring a deep-seated antipathy towards the First Methodist Episcopal church of this city and in his "tremendous" anxiety to say something unkind about this church and its people, he makes a feeble attempt to "drag" into the discussion the other Methodist Episcopal church and insinuates that there may be some things to tell connected with the advent of the erection of the other church. The writer of this article was a resident of Fulton at the time of the organization of the State street society and knew some of the facts connected therewith. We feel perfectly safe in stating as our honest opinion that there is not a charter member of the State street church today who regrets in any sense of the term the action taken when the decision was made that Fulton should be possessed of two Methodist Episcopal churches and that one should be located at the corner of South 4th and State sts. If there is such a one we wish he or she would come out in the public press and so state over his or her own signature. "Trot" them out, Mr. "Observer."

At this point we offer an apoloby, Mr. Editor, for we are digressing from what appears to be the real target of both Mr. Joslin and "Observer." The latter in his communication of Monday evening says that " in former letters which have been printed in your valued publication, circumstances caused me to be on one side and Mr. Joslin on the the other * * * I am pleased to state, that in this letter, the writer is inclined to stand with our worthy brother and commend him for his attitude toward the First Methodist church."

"NOT A METHODIST" REPLIES TO "OBSERVER"

Mr. Editor:

Observer's article in yesterday's paper is evidently a product from the pen of a man with a bad liver—a very bad liver, I should say. He, or she, writes like a child with a half grown idea.. Does he stop to consider when he says the First M. E. church is ruled by a select few who have no desire for growth?" Surely not! The men and women, or, people we'll say, who really desire to make things better, (either in the First M. E. church or out of it) go to it with their coats off and do little or no talking—and not any sarcastic, pessimistic grumbling.

Let Observer go to it and do his, or her, part in making First church the kind of institution he, or she, can help to make it instead of sitting on the fence and siccing others on or childishly grumbling. There are good and sane people, let Observer observe, who thoroughly approve of Dr. Stockwell's stand. Mr. Anderson was not necessary to the success and welfare to the work of the League.

The workers of the First M. E. church, and I know many of them, are sincere helpful people. I regard them earnest workers, admire and respect them for their devotion to their church.

Turn the searchlight on, Observer. Quit croaking, and try going to church with homage and good will in your heart and you'll find it reflected, I'm sure. It not so much what we get at church as it is what we take there.

Thanking The Fulton Evening Times for any space that may be granted me, I am, Not a Methodist.

You are correct, Mr. "Observer," in stating the above facts. It is very plain that you have an imaginary "grudge" against the First Methodist church and that because of this fact you are grasping at any opportunity to thrust your arrows of sarcasm at this house of worship. Again quoting from your communication, "To one who has attended this church, as a stranger, and received the chilly reception accorded to visitors, the action of the board will not seem strange." Permit us to say that unless you were the person who actually went there and received the so-called "chilly" reception, and know from actual experience whereof you speak, you have no honorable right to make this charge. If you were the person of whom you speak then beyond any question of doubt you had accorded you just what you went after—"a chilly reception."

Again, permit us to admit that "Observer" and Mr. Joslin are both working with what appears to be perfect accord—rush into print with what they both imagine is a deep seated grievance.

In closing allow me to correct the statement that there are two Methodist churches in Fulton and one is large enough to seat every church going Methodist in the city. "Observer" better get posted before making any assertion of this character. There are three Methodist churches in Fulton. If his experience in attending either one of these churches extends only over the one Sunday when he received the "chilly" reception, he better try again. Let him attend either one of the two Methodist Episcopal churches at a Sunday morning service and we believe he will go away deeply convinced that his charge is without foundation. Try attending church once again, Brother "Observer," and go with a heart full of love for your fellow-man and expect a cordial reception.

If you do this we will venture the assertion that you will get just what you are looking for—a most cordial handshake.

ROCKEFELLER SCORED ON COLORADO STRIKE

forced to regulate the coal mining industry as it does transportation.

That the Colorado operators had brusquely refused all arbitration overtures.

That the operators did not combine in restraint of trade by limiting output.

Peonage of miners was not fully proven.

Machine guns, deputies and strikebreakers were imported into Colorado.

Denouncing the system of private mine gaards.

Criticizing Colorado officials for not stopping sales of guns and ammunition

That both sides went to excesses and caused "anarchy' in southern Colorado.

Many men were thrown into jail by the militia and denied civil rights to be heard and tried.

Juries had been packed with deputy sheriffs.

Regarding Rockefeller, the majority report said: "We find citizens of far and distant states financially and otherwise interested in this struggle.

Mr. Rockefeller disclaimed responsibility. Absentee owners or directors cannot escape their moral responsibility for conditions in and about properties in which they are interested.

"Mr. Rockefeller has done a great deal for the uplife of people in other parts of the country and in foreign lands, spending millions of dollars, yet he has not endeavored to improve conditions of the more than 6,000 employes of the company with which he is connected and has not visited the State in more than ten years.

"Mr. Rockefeller said he would not agree to arbitration for the reason that he was fighting for a great principle and would sacrifice all his property for the principle of every man to be free to work for whom he pleases and on such terms as best suits the worker. Mr. Rockefeller should remember that for thirty years there has been the firecest struggle among the workers in the mines of Colorado. He may win a strike by starvation under the false banner of liberty for the workingman, but we did not believe he can maintain peace under such conditions as exist in that State.

"We believe he did not desire to arbitrate and in that way and the strike, and one must conclude he would rather spend the money of the company for guns, pay of detectives and mine guards and starve the strikers into submission.

"On the other hand the miners went beyond the rights of law abiding citizens and committed acts of violence. They always, however, seemed willing to endeavor to settle the dispute by arbitration."

Regarding the militia's actions, the majority declared:

"Some of the militiamen seized the opportunity to engage in lawless acts. In other instances there were acts of an immoral kind unfit for publication. Defenseless women and children did not escape the brutality of some members of the military organization. Many people were thrown into foul and miserable cells and kept there for days without any opportunity to prove their innocense.

"It seemed the militia was on the side of the operators.

"The attack on the Berwin camp was inexcusable.

"Violence became greater until men on either side seemed to have little regard for the taking of human life or the destruction of property. It is impossible to say which side was responsible for starting the trouble in each of these battles."

In conclusion, the majority asserted: "If these strike troubles continue to break forth, it will plainly be necessary to consider seriously whether some measure of regulation shall not be adopted with reference to this business as carried on in interstate commerce, as is now due with reference to the business of transportation."

BAY STATE TOWNS VOTE FOR LICENSES

Boston, Mar. 2.—Returns received today from 178 towns, holding annual elections show that seven changed sides on the liuqor question. Athol, Norfolk, Oxford, Shelburne and Natick went no license. Leominster flopped to license by twerve votes.

Middleton voted license by one of the largest majorities in the history of the town.

Hanover not only turned out the big gest vote in history, but also marshaled 100 women at the town meeting. This display was due to the offer of fifty cents each for every woman present made by Everett Hall of New York and to the offer of $25 for town improvements on condition that 100 women turned out.

SEARCHLIGHTS IN WAR.

How They Are Worked by Distant Control in Land Operations.

In modern warfare the searchlight is invaluable. On dark nights at sea it is the only means of guarding against torpedo boats, which its beams will reveal at a distance of two miles and more.

On shore it is the electric eye of the army. It is carried to all parts of the field of action by motor truck, and the motor that propels the vehicle drives the electric generator that supplies the current for the light.

Most of these field searchlights are not directed by hand, for each instrument is fitted with what is known as the distant control. Two small motors govern the vertical and the horizontal movements of the light. From them an electric cable runs to the station of the operator, who, although he may be several hundred feet away, can send the rays of the light in any direction he pleases.

According to the Navy and Army Illustrated, one advantage of this distant control is that the objects picked up by the beam of light can be sighted more quickly and more definitely, for if the operator stands behind the light and looks along the beam his vision is hampered by a luminous haze. A second advantage is that the light can be placed in an exposed position without endangering the men who run it. Were the operator and officer beside the apparatus they would be certain to receive the fire that is sure to be poured upon a searchlight and would suffer the instant the range was found.

VIRTUE OF AN APPLE.

At One Time the Fruit Was Called the "Food of the Gods."

The apple has become so familiar as the commonest of all fruits that its value as man's greatest friend in the vegetable kingdom may not be fully realised. It was called the "food of the gods" because it was believed to be the magic renewer of youth to which the gods resorted when they felt themselves growing old and feeble.

There have been many mystic traditions about the apple, which has been credited with varied potency. It is the healing fruit of the Arabian tales. Latin chronicles and institutes and early English poems contain many references to it. Scientific analysis of late years has justified all the ancient glorification of this fruit, which has been found to contain albumen, sugar, gum, malic acid, gallic acid, fiber, water and phosphorus.

Malic acid of apples neutralizes the excess of chalky matter caused by too much meat and thereby helps to keep us young. Apples are good for the complexion, as their acids drive out the noxious matters which cause skin eruptions. They are good for the brain, which those same noxious matters, if retained, render sluggish. The acids of the apple diminish the acidity of the stomach that comes with some forms of indigestion.

The phosphorus, of which apples contain a larger per cent than any other fruit or vegetable, renews the essential matter of the brain and spinal column. —Boston Herald.

BANK DEEDS RECEIVERS OF WIRE TO CORPORATION

Syracuse March 2.—In consideration of the payment of $1, and with other due formalities of law, the First National Bank of Syracuse, has sold and delivered to the New York Telephone Company eighteen inches of four-pair, lead covered cable, be the quantity of the same more or less, penetrating the wall of the great cash vault on the ground floor of the bank's new building, South Warren and E. Washington streets.

President A. W. Hudson of the bank, who signed the document under which the transfer is made, explained the transaction yesterday.

The construction of the vault included two cables carrying wires for electric lighting purposes to the interior. A few days ago the bank decded to have a telephone inside the vault. To put additional wires through the heavy steel plates and concrete was out of the question, especially as the route is made intricate for protective purposes. Moreover, one of the requirements of the telephone business, under the Public Service Commission act, is that the telephone company shall own the wires over which service is maintained rirght up to the instrument.

To overcome this difficulty, the bank decided to get along with one set of wires for lighting and deeded the other section of about eighteen inches to the telephone corporation, the ownership to revert t o the bank if the vault station is discontinued.

Two bank employes will be in charge of the cash inside the vault. Summoned outside to answer a 'phone call while handling bills and coin, either would have to lock up the money or count it all over upon his return in orrder to maintain rersponsibility. Hence the innovation of a vault telephone and the unique real estate deal.

C GRAW GETS PITCHER POL

ams In the South Are Down to Mild Work; Sore Joints the Result

Marlin, Tex.—The first move to strengthen the Giants where they were the weakest last season—iu the pitching box—was made today when Pol of the Cardinals, became a member of McGraw's clan. McGraw will give St. Louis several players in return for the pitcher. McGraw again had his men out for a stiff work out today.

Savannah, Ga.—Manager Donovan of the Yankees today devoted his attention to the youngsters on the team and put them through some hard practice. Donovan is letting the veterans work themselves into condition slowly.

San Antonio, Tex.—Rain kept the Cleveland Indians indoors yesterday and the indications this morning are that they won't be able to practice out doors before tomorrow or Friday.

Gulfport, Miss.—Two strenuous workouts for the Tigers left them prety muscle sore. Jennings with his fungo stick kept the fielders chasing fly balls for a couple of hours. Today's program will include some sprinting around the bases and a stiff workout for the pitchers.

Havana.—The St. Louis Federals led by Fielder Jones, held morning and afternoon practice today. They will play a game with the Havana Reds Thursday.

Tampa, Fla.—Therer were 31 players working out on the Chicago Cub team today with the arrival of Zimmerman, Schulte and Lavender. Bresnahan took a turn behind the plate at batting practice to get a line on his thirteen pitchers.

Augusta, Ga.—Tow hours' practice in the warm Southern sunshine was Manager Oakes' program for the Pitts Feds today. Tossing practice will be followed by bunting and a general batting and field drill will wind up the day.

THEOLOGICAL STUDENT SHOT WHILE ROBBING

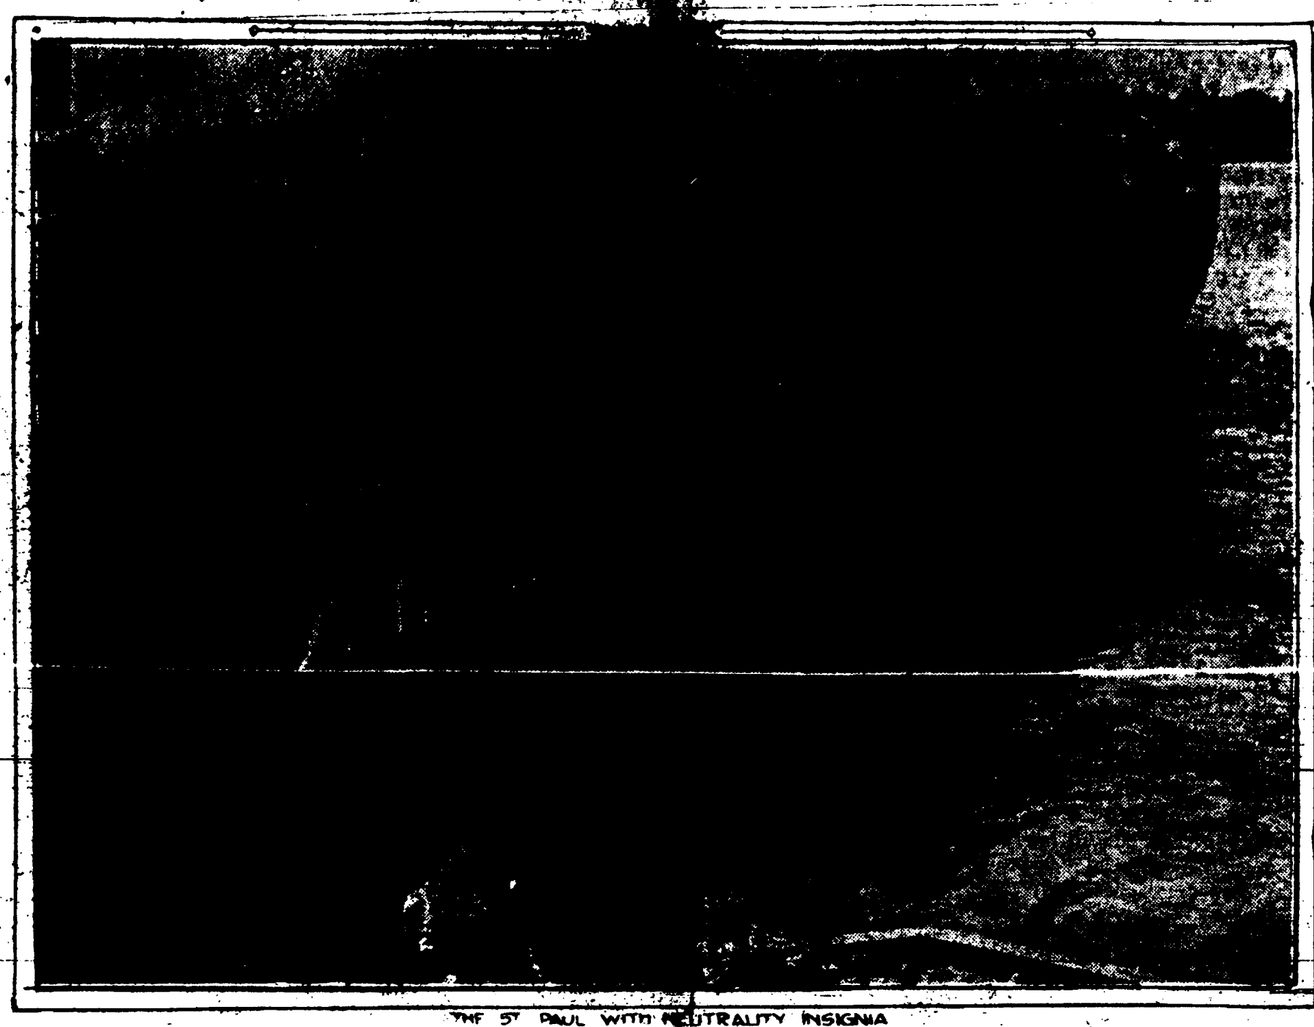
Rochester, N. Y., Mar. 3.—While trying to rob the office safe of the Gonic Manufacturing company at Gonic, a suburb of this city, Walter Marison, 2, a Boston theological student, was shot and probably fatally wounded by Adelbert Lyte, a substitute night watchman at the mills, after a desperate struggle.

Marison, who has been preaching in New Hampshire towns while on his vacation, when told by physicians that he could only live a few hours, confessed he was after money, saying he needed it to pay his Divinity school tuition. He died at 2 o'clock today.

Investigation showed that the drawers in every desk in the office had been rifled and papers were strewn all over the room.

$250,000 FIRE BURNING ON IN JAMESTOWN

Jamestown, N. Y., Mar. 3.—Fire which broke out in the basement of the Famous Clothing store in the Warner block at 10 o'clock this morning, is still raging. At 1 o'clock the damage was estimated at $250,000. Flames spread to adjoining business blocks and are not yet under control. About 40 persons living in furnished rooms in the Warner block made their escape.



ANARCHISTS INDICTED

New Yor, Mar. 3.—Frank Ardano and Charles Carbona, the two anarchists arrested in connection with the plot to blow up St. Patrick's Cathedral, were indicted today. Under the law they can be sentenced to 25 years if found guilty. Other arrests are to be made.

RELIEF STEAMER ASHORE

Norfolk, Va., Mar. 3.—The British steamer St. Helena, with supplies for Belgian war sufferers on board went ashore two miles south of Cutinook life saving station on the North Carolina coast early today. The vessel was coming up the coast from Charleston.

FIRST AMERICAN LINER TO GUARD AGAINST DANGERS OF THE WAR ZONE.

THE ST PAUL WITH NEUTRALITY INSIGNIA

The St. Paul, of the American line, has the distinction of being the first American ship to guard against dangers in the war zone proclaimed by Germany. Bearing the insignia of her neutrality in bold letters on her sides, the liner started for Liverpool with 280 passengers, none of whom anticipate any difficulty in reaching England. Captain F. N. Passow, her skipper, was confident that his vessel would not meet with mishap. "I will take every precaution against the possibility of attack by the German submarines," he said. "When I get off the Irish coast I'm going to light up the St. Paul as though she was a Christmas tree and put on dress parade bunting so that a mole could see her. There isn't going to be any question in anybody's mind about the St. Paul being an American and therefore a neutral steamship." The signs by which the St. Paul will be known to all seafarers alike are her name painted in four foot letters on both sides of the vessel and her bows as well. Arrangements have been made to throw strong light on the lettering at night.

GERMANY'S REPLY GRANTS NEUTRALS 1 STRONG POINT

Washington, Mar. 3.—Hope that the present deadlock in the international situation will soon be broken came to Washington today in the unofficial note from Germany that has been cabled to the United States.

A basis for further negotiations was seen in the German proposals relating to submarines and mines. Germany agrees to discard the one dangerous feature of her war zone proclamation to which all neutral nations took exception—the right of the submarines to blow up merchantmen without warning. She also declares a willingness to such an understanding regarding floating mines and a limitation of zones in which mines are to be placed if Great Britain will abandon her propose blockade and permit foodstuffs to go through to German civilians.

Although it is regarded by officials as practically certain that Great Britain has strengthened her case before the United States by her attitude and it is hoped here that neutral pressure on Great Britain might have a tangible effect in causing her to modify her recent drastic announcement.

It is now understood in official and diplomatic and diplomatic quarters that the United States will not make any representations to Great Britain on the subject of the blockade until the latter replies to the recent American proposals. The fact that Germany already has done so leads officials to believe that Great Britain will hasten her rejoinder. This is expected to be a reply to Germany as well as to the United States.

GERMANY SEEKING TO GET U. S. FRIENDSHIP

Berlin, Mar. 3.—Germany's reply to the American note of Feb. 22, intimating that a suitable basis must be reached by which the naval policies of both England and Germany could be modified has received the entire approval of the Berlin press. It is indicated that Germany has undertaken a diplomatic policy by which she hopes to win the friendship of the United States. The American note contains suggestions as to mine laying for the protection of neutral shipping. On this point the German reply says: "The German government has submitted the American suggestion to tentative examination and believes it can recognize therein an effectively suitable basis for a protocol of the issue. Germany would be prepared to make the suggestive declaration concerning the non-employment of drifting mines and the construction of anchored mines and further agrees to the suggestion to attach a government mitre to any mines which may be laid. German submarines would employ force against mercantile vessels of any flag in so far as it is rrequired for the purpose of carrying out the rights to hold up and search."

CONGRESS WINDS UP SESSION

No Hopes for Amendment of Bond Issue to Establish Rural Credits

Washington, Mar. 3.—The 63d Congress today was on the final lap of the session. Both houses began a long grind to clean the calendar and leaders planned to hold the members for a long session until noon tomorrow when the session will pass into history.

The Senate sat throughout wrestling with the Indian appropriation bill and the nominations of Presient Wilson to the Federal Trade Commission. All of the general supply bills including the much contested rivers and harbors, and the Indian bill, have been passed by each house of Congress. The Indian measure carries $11,000,000 and almost 50 per cent. rewritten from the House version was adopted by the Senate today. The rivers and harbors bill was also passed early today. It carries a lump sum of $25,000,000 to be expended on existing projects under the direction of the War Department. The agricultural bill was amended in the House and Senate to deal with rural credits, but in conference today it was apparent that the amendment provising for the loan of $50,000,000 in bonds to establish the project will be stricken out.

Provided Allies Carry Out Threat to Prevent European Trade

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

LAST SHALL BE FIRST

BILL BUNK was an awkward and old fashioned guy, he wore a snuff suit and a plum colored tie. He had little money to hoard up or spend, his shoulders were round and his legs had a bend. He'd blush when the ladies would hover around, as humble was he, as a worm in the ground. He worked in the daytime and studied at night; the folks often wondered if Bill Bunk was right. Claude Pill was a dashing and up to date sport, his collars were high and his trousers were short. He worked for his father and worked when he would, the people all said that he sure would make good. His features were handsome, his manners were fine; the ladies were charmed by this grand social lion. A promising future awaited Claude Pill, he'd be a choice product from fame's grinding mill. Be that as it may, in a very short while Claude had little use for his dash and his style. His father went bankrupt, and what could Claude do? As helpless was he as a bug in a stew. He took a position at very small pay, he's still selling ribbons to this very day. Bill Bunk kept on working, at night studied law. Bill Bunk was a comer the people soon saw. He rose in their favor and, strange to relate, Bill Bunk was elected the 'Gov' of the State. The moral's as good as a well to a thirst—the first shall be last and the last shall be first.

Opinions

Time for Peace

We dot not want any peace to terminate this European war that is a make shift. When arms are laid down it should be under conditions that will insure, as far as human wisdom can effect it, that they stay down. However, this does not mean that the rest of the world must stand by and say nothing till the warring nations have fought themselves to a finish and quit only because they have to. No nation any longer lives unto itself. Europe cannot live unto herself. Her present condition that excites the horror and the pity of mankind lays heavy burdens on every neutral nation of the globe, and the shadows of the crime that has destroyed Belgium and is wasting other lands falls athwart the threshold of every toiler in America, in China, in the islands of the sea.

What would be the effect if all the neutral countries of the world united in a firm, clear, friendly "note" to the nations at war asserting their conviction that the time had come when every consideration of humanity and every interest of the rest of the world, as well as the highest good of the belligerents themselves demanded peace; and a peace that should include in its terms such provisions as the reduction of monstrous armaments, the wiping out of those rings and vested interests that have fattened upon war through the manufacture and sale of armaments, and respect for the will of the peaceful inhabitants of every province as to their political relations?

Are we sure that the time has not already come for this word to be spoken? As a nation are we true to our high mission in an hour like this by waiting till further months of blood shed and barbaric warfare are added to the history of this awful conflict? The feeling is growing here and elsewhere that all is not being done in this direction that ought to be done.

The Rittman Discoveries.

Three tremendously important factors in the future economic life of this country are concerned in the two chemical discoveries relating to petroleum announced by Mr. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior. These are, in brief:

1.—The free use of the discovery as to gasolene production, as promised by the fact that the patents on the processes are to be dedicated to the whole American people, will do more to establish an equality of competition in the oil refining industry than many of the laws directed against monopoly, price-fixing and restraint of trade.

2.—The general utilization of a process which will enable the so-called independent refiners in this country to increase the output of gasolene from petroleum by 200 per cent. or more will make for a conservation of our petroleum resources and at the same time lower prices to an extent that will broaden the use and stimulate the manufacture of gasolene motors.

3.—The process relating to the production of materials necessary for the dye industry will make the United States independent of the rest of the world in this highly important department. At the present moment, the discovery of this process relative to dyes, and the supplementary one relating to the manufacture of high explosives, are particularly a reason for thankfulness.

It is not a reflection upon the Standard Oil interests that, through the great amount of money at their command, they have been able to employ expert chemists and to discover and develop processes which have given them additional advantage over the independent interests in the production of gasolene. Mr. Lane points out that there are several large corporations without Standard Oil affiliations which have efficient processes for the manufacture of this product; but the independents, generally speaking, have never been able to approach the results obtained by the Standard Oil people.

In considering the discovery of the process for the production of materials necessary for the dye industry, the old truism that "Necessity is the mother of invention" inevitably springs to mind. Germany heretofore has been pre-eminent in the dye industry, and now that Germany is isolated by war and the United States cannot obtain dyestuffs from the usual source, necessity breeds its logical child—an invention which will give the economic freedom so desired.

COMMAND OF THE EARTH

March with her fitful scurrying of snowflakes forms a splendid background for the gay seed catalogue. Spring is tramping close on the heels of the gardner enthusiast and a veritable lord, indeed, is he who owns a plot of ground in the rear of his domicile where he may delve and dig among his cabbages and cosmos.

Unatural and unlearned is the person who has not found the pleasure in this oldest and most valuable of all arts.

Luther Burbank has benefitted man beyond the possibility of calculation. There are not many school children who do now know the name of Luther Burbank along with those o fthe greatest statesmen in the country.

And so for the hoe! Ho, for the man who is at present peering between the gay covers of his favorite seed catalogue! March may rattle at the window panes, but beyond can be seen the shining rows of young cabbages and cosmos.

Ho, for the man who understands the springtime of life, and delves for the secrets of old Mother Earth with his trowel and spade. These are the ones who have command of the earth.

TO SECURE BETTER DEFENSE

Organizations for national defense must be in control of the national authorities. An army reserve unconnected with the army and not under the direction of the War Department is not to be thought of. Therefore the proposed new society, or league, for which Dr. J. E. Hausmann stands as sponser, can scarcely regard itself as an army reserve, or proclaim that its direct purpose is to defend the nation. Even though a nation may lack, through the neglect or inefficiency of its chosen agents, proper means of national defense, it cannot tolerate the existence of a body wholly independent of the Government, formed to provide trained soldiers in case of need.

For these excellent reasons it is fair to assume that the rather flamboyant statement of the purposes of the American Legion in yesterday's newspapers was somewhat misleading. Neither ex-President Roosevelt, who seems to have consented to serve as an adviser of the league, nor Major Gen. Leonard H. Wood could lend his aid to the formation of an extra military body out of the control of State or nation. As a matter of fact, though its formation has been set forth in so extravagant a manner, the new league can be nothing more than a union or association of private citizens who desire to use their collective influence to secure better collective influence to secure better national defenses. Lists of names of able-bodied men competent to do various kinds of military duty might be found useful in an emergency. But in an emergency every patriotic citizen would proffer his services to his Government.

Well-conceived plans for the establishment of an army reserve, a National Guard reserve, a Naval Militia reserve, including men who have served in those branches, have long been in existence. It has been very difficult to get Congressional action upon any plans for the improvement of our defenses. The best work, the only useful work, which the so-called army league, or any similar body, can perform is to try to influence Congressmen to take action in this matter. If every individual citizen who believes that our defenses should be strengthened would say so distinctly to the Congressional representative in his district, the needful legislation would probably be carried through in the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress without any urging from organized bodies of citizens.—N. Y. Times.

LIVE STEAM DEATH TO CATERPILLARS

Pest to Railroad Conquered by Simple Invention of Mechanic.

Hordes of caterpillars proved a serious menace to railroad operation last summer on the McCloud River railroad, in Northern California. Locomotives could not make traction, says "The Scientific American," because of the millions of wriggling crawlers that clogged the rails, forming a slimp mass as the engine passed over them. Sand was of no avail: cresol sprinkled along the rails checked them for only a brief time, and the expedient of placing men on the cowcatcher to sweep off the creatures with a broom was of no value at all. More caterpillars were crushed by the brooms than were brushed clear of the tracks while those that escaped alive promptly crawled back upon the rails before the train had passed.

Apparently the railroad was under the necessity of digging trenches for many miles along both sides of the right of way, a very heavy outlay, but the only effective method so far discovered of holding the creeping hordes in check .This method had been used with success in the lumber camps of that section, which had also been overwhelmed with the pest.

However, this great expense was done away with by an invention of John Kennedy, who devised a system of forcing live steam from the locomotive boiler upon the rails ahead of the cowcatcher. The heat killed the insects, while the force of the jet threw their bodies off the track without crushing them. In this manner the problem was solved with slight expense, as Mr. Kennedy's invention was of extreme simplicity. It consists of a couple of small tubes extending from the boiler to the front of the locomotive and terminating a few inches above each rail. The engineer controls the steam outlet with a simple device. After using this invention for a short period the bodies of countless thousands of caterpillars were banked alongside the track for miles.

A Village Tale

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

It was when Uncle Ebenezer Davidson was postmaster at Hopeville that Silas Thompson and Ben Goodheart met at the postoffice one evening, and as they sat around and whittled and waited for the mail to come in Silas lazily queried:

"Eben, you've been to Cat Hill a hundred times, I reckon, and jest how far do you call it from Hopeville?"

"Jest as far as it is," answered Eben after thinking for about three minutes.

"And that's ten miles?"

"Who said it was?"

"I say so. I carried the mail on that road fur three long years, and I reckon I know the distance purty well. I asked you because some one said you call it only nine and a half miles."

"And that's what I'm sayin' this minit. It's nine miles and a half to an inch."

"Say, Eben, didn't you measure it with a purty short tapeline?" asked Silas as he whittled away.

"It's jest nine and a half," answered Eben in a dogged way.

"It's exactly ten."

"Not an inch over nine and a half!"

"Not an inch under ten miles!"

"Silas, are you crazy or a born fool?" asked Eben as his hair began to curl.

"I ain't a big nuff fool to call it nine miles and a half to Cat Hill," yelled Silas in reply.

They jawed about it half an hour longer, and they parted bad friends. In the course of two or three days Eben put up a sign reading, "Cat Hill—Nine and a Half Miles," and as soon as Silas heard of it he put up another reading, "Cat Hill—Ten Miles." That made things worse, and a half dozen families were mixed up in the quarrel. Almost every night in the year the two men met at the postoffice, and, though they wouldn't notice each other, they had their ways of hurting each other's feelings. Silas would look around to Ezra Billings and giggle and chuckle and say:

"Did you hear that Cat Hill had moved inland a half a mile, Ezra? She used to be ten miles from Hopeville, but she moved up to nine and a half to accommodate sartin smart folks."

Eben would be hurt and want to get even, and he'd look at Jabez White and say:

"Heard about that escaped lunatic, Jabez? They say he's measurin' the road from here to Cat Hill with a tow string and that it keeps him crazy because he can't make but nine and a half miles of it."

The two men never came to blows, but they never met without trying to hurt each other's feelings. If one favored anything the other opposed it, and they were contrary in politics, religion and all public improvements. One day Eben got buried in his well by a cave-in, and though Silas helped to dig him out the chance was one to say:

"Mebbe this narrow escape from death will make him turn to the truth in the future and admit it's ten miles to Cat Hill."

It wasn't four weeks after that when Silas had a saw log roll over him, and as he lay there all flattened out Eben came up and looked on him and said:

"He seems to be a goner, but if the Lord lets him live it will be that he may take half a mile off the distance to Cat Hill and save his soul from perdition."

Folks thought the dispute might wear itself out in a year or two, but it didn't. It kept right on for twenty long years and never grew cold. Eben would have gone to Indiana to live, but he didn't want to leave Silas behind to crow over him, and Silas would not go to Syracuse to run a sawmill for the same reason. At length Eben lay on his dying bed, and just the minute the doctor told him his case was hopeless he sat up and said:

"Then I want you to send for Silas Tompkins. I've got something I want to say to him before I die."

Silas didn't hang back about coming, and after he'd arrived and said he was sorry Eben said to him:

"Silas, how fur is it to Cat Hill?"

"It's jest ten miles, Eben, jest ten."

"But I'm a dyin' man."

"Yes, I know, but it's jest ten miles."

"It's only nine and a half, Silas, and you are as big a fool as you was twenty years ago!"

"Ten miles!"

"Nine and a half!"

Silas went away, and Eben died, and a year later Silas was called to go. When he realized it he said to his wife:

"Martha, don't let anybody bluff you when I'm gone. It's ten miles to Cat Hill, and you stick to it if you have to live on cold taters."

"I'll do it, Silas," she answered.

In a day or two he was dead and buried, and as the usual crowd met at the postoffice in the evening the talk was all about the two men and their lifelong dispute. Some said one was right, and some said the other. There was a stranger present, and by and by he pricked up his ears and asked:

"Was you folks talkin' about the distance to Cat Hill?"

"We was," says Moses Campbell, and he goes on to explain about Eben and Silas.

"Why, they were both blamed fools!" says the stranger when he had the facts in hand. "Do the men who quarrel and [illegible]

THE RUBY STONE

SOMEWHERE in one of his essays Emerson refers to the fact that the ruby stone is formed by a process requiring millions of years—a period of time in which the Andes and the Alps, by comparison, come and go like the rainbow.

Character is like the ruby stone. Each of us is a builder; a builder of habits, a builder of ideas, ideals, ambitions, hopes, fancies and a builder of character. Character is a composite of many things; it is the unit or the norm of the individual. Character is developed through experience. It represents the individual after having gone through the crucible of experiments, tests and temptations.

The ideas and ideals we hold each day are molding our character into positive form. Character represents the best in man after it has gone through a long and determined process of refinement. The fact that we have certain beautiful aspirations, the fact that we hold certain beautiful ideals, is gradually transforming each of us into the very thing to which we work and aspire.

The process of character-building is the most tedious, yet the most beautiful thing in the life of the individual—a still more highly refined process than that which forms the ruby stone.

The average man goes into business, not so much to make money as he does to expand, to grow, to evolve. The business man is a builder. He is restless, prompted by a desire to do, to act, to work, to be on his way. The man who is dishonest in business gives us an example of energy run amuck.

We know a man by the kind of shop, store, factory or place of business he runs. His character shines out through his business affairs. It is written in the way he keeps his desk, in the attitude of mind he holds toward his employes, in what he desires to do for his customers, in the integrity he observes in all his business transactions with other men.

Character building is building for all time. Men die and pass away. But character is like the ruby stone. It is the most precious, the most beautiful, and the most to be desired of all things.

Mind you well the little things—watch you with care the tendencies which spring up mushroomlike here and there in your everyday conduct to destroy character. Remember, you are a builder; character is all you have, all that you can leave that will not pass away.

Character is the monument you leave for those who follow after you. It is the measure of what you have been, of what you have said and believed; the measure of the truths you have discovered and made a part of you and your conduct. Character is the measure of your sincerity, the measure of the company you have been to yourself; and we know a man by the kind of company he keeps—when he is alone.

Character is the monument you make and mold through having worked and lived. It is the ruby stone of your beautiful fancies, of your divine moments, the ruby stone of your better self.

"RIGHTS OF THE CHILD"

Religious Education Convention In Buffalo

Buffalo, N. Y., Mar. 3.—The twelfth annual convention of the Religious Education Association began here today. The thirty different meetings of the convention will focus attention on the topic of "The Rights of the Child."

There will be about one hundred papers and addresses discussing the places of the child in the family, the churches, the state, the schools and the civic life, and the plans for properly fitting the child for the needs of modern life.

The speakers include leading representatives of practically all the different religious communions and of the different types of schools and colleges. The organization is international in its membership of the field, but the war prevents many foreign speakers from being in attendance.

Some of the notable persons who will participate are: Bishop Charles D. Williams, Bishop F. J. McConnell, John T. Finley, Mrs. Anna Garlin Spencer, Dr. Walter Rauschenbusch, Charles T. Stelzle, Philander P. Claxton, Rabbi Abram Simon, Mrs. Ella Lyman Cabot, Graham Taylor and Charles F. Thwing.

The association recently adopted recently adopted the policy of alternating types of convention, the one held last year was of the "specialized type," consisting of reports and conferences on higher education; the one here will be of the "popular type" with large public meetings in addition to the many conferences and reports of special commission.

The meetings will last five days.

FACTORY LAWS SAID TO BE TOO STRINGENT

The Watertown Standard says that many of that city's manufacturing concerns will be compelled to discharge a large percentage of their present employes if the present state factory laws are to be complied with to the letter. So serious is the situation that a joint meeting of the manufacturers' committee of the chamber of commerce and a number of factory managers was held Saturday night. As the result of the meeting a communication was sent to Senator Elon R. Brown at Albany Monday, citing specific instances in which a compliance with the law will materially effect local industries, and requesting him to seek certain changes in the law to the end that properly equipped factories may be exempt.

The chamber of commerce takes the attitude that while the local concerns are breaking the law at the present time, that the safey first conditions which have been installed in the buildings do not necessitate the manufacturers from [illegible] solely for congested manufacturing sections of the larger cities and that the law should be so changed that it will not retard the industries of such cities as Watertown.

In several cities throughout this country they are starting what they call "Help Your Fellow-Man Societies." The requirements for membership is that your hair is gray. The idea is not one of charity. All the members ask is an equal show. The plan has helped many a man up the hill.

SIN WILL FOLLOW ALL MEN TO ENDS OF EARTH

BILLY SUNDAY SERMON

Billy Sunday's Sunday evening sermon was on the theme, "Be Sure your Sins will Find you Out." He said:

Your sins, not mine. Mine won't find you out, and yours won't find me out. Sin is the one thing in the universe which can permanently damage a man and eternally damn him. Disappointment may worry him, grief may sadden him, diversity may bring him hardships and heartaches, but the only thing that can permanently leave its stamp on a man's character, and eternally damn him in hell is sin. No man or woman can escape from his or her sins. Every sin you have ever committed or ever will committ will bring you to account, you will have to pay for it, and you never will sin that you won't have to pay for it. Nobody ever sinned that wasn't a loser by it. Nobody ever committed a sin that ever paid. The most stupendous, gigantic folly that ever entered the mind of a man or woman is the supposition that it pays to do wrong.

There may be those here tonight who are planning some sin, and your presence here is only that many hours nearer the time, the hour and the place you will committ that sin. In fact, your presence here might be for the purpose of eluding people, and you are here simply for the purpose of warding off suspicion, and you can scarcely wait until my message is over and you can creep off in the darkness and propagate your iniquity. That won't pay. I won't see it, the people here won't see it, but the eye of the Lord runs through the earth, and there is no blackness that can hide your iniquities away from God.

There are some things in life about which there are degrees of uncertainty. You are not certain that you will die. Jesus Christ may burst on the world and judge it beforre the clock will strike 12 at midnight. Therefore millions may reach heaven without death. You are not sure that the sun will rise tomorrow. We suppose it will. It has risen ever since God put it in the sky, and it has swung with perfect precision and never deviated one bit. I presume it will rise tomorrow—I would be disappointed if it didn't—but I haven't anything in the word of God to assure me that the sun will rise. Therefore, I am sure that my sins will find me out.

Pounding Brains Out in Cells

You need not come here to find if that is true. You need not read the Bible to find out if that is true. All you need to do is to read the newspapers, go to the penitentaries and the jails, go to the haunts of sin. Go see them pounding their brains out in padde cells in the insane asylum. It will prove it there. You may commit a sin and there may be a recompense attache to it, but not without remorse. You will have to pay for it, and if you are bount to sin you will have to suffer for it. If you put your hand in the fire and thus violate a law of nature you will have to suffer for it. You may escape the law, but you will not escape the consequence of sin. If a man breaks the law he may not have to account for the violation of it before a human court, but he will have to pay for the sin he committed.

Your sins will find you out in a good many ways.

First, in human law. Of course, the execution of all human law will be more or less imperfect. A man who breaks the law may elude consequence possibly for a day, a week or years. Not all the criminals have been captured. Not all the men who have committed murder have had to suffer for it. You may escape the human law, but you will not escape God's law. And you'd be dumfounded to know how few criminals escape. You may be congrartulating yourself that they know not what you are or what you have done, but that is the greatest folly that ever found entrace into your brain, for your sin will find you out.

Over in Illinois some years ago a rich farmer went to town, drew several hundred dollarrs from the bank, drank freely of liquor, and along about dark he was seen to enter his carriage and start for home, seven miles in the country, but he never reached there. His family waited for him until midnight and after, but he didn't come, and in the morning they found his team, tired and jaded, standing at the gate waiting for kind hands to open it. They saw no evidence of a struggle in the carriage. The whip was in the socket and the lines wrapped around it. Everything seemed to be in order. Not a drop of blood could be found. They knew not what to do.

Skeleton in Middle of Pond

They hired the best detectives that money could buy. Finally a man was arrested on suspicion but he easily and readily proved an abili. Shortly after his release he sold his farm and went away. Years rolled on. On the farm of the man who had been arrested charged with the crime was a pond, fed by springs which had never been known to be dry, but there was a long drought throrugh July and August and into September. It didn't rain and the sun's rays sucked that pond dry, and in the middle of it they found a human skeleton, around which was a log chain, and on the log chain was carved the initials of the man they had suspected, and they readily identified the skelton as that of the missing farmer because of a defect—the absence of two fingers on his left hand. They searched all over, and out on the Pacific coast they found this man whom they had arested. There on his deathbed, and a few hours before he died, he confessed that he had murdered the man for his money and had carried his body out in the dead of night, fastened the chain on it and dropped it into the middle of the pond. But God let the sun suck that old pond dry, that the grinning skeleton might stand at that man's bier and point his finger and hiss at him before he slid into hell.

I say again, that sin is the only thing that damns and curses a man. And my warrfare in Philadelphia is against sin, not against your manhood or your womanhood. I'm fighting the things that threaten to put you in hell. In the name of God, I'm your friend.

Disease is the result of certain sins just as naturally as that water will seek its level or that fire will burn. There is an intimate connection between morality and health. We all know that morality is conducive to longevity and we all know that immorality is conducive to a shorrtness of days.

Live Longer Without 'Booze'

"The wicked will not live out all their days." The man that loves God will live longer than the booze-fighter. The pure man will live longer than the libertine. The honest man will live longer than the thief. "The wicked shall not live out all their days," and if you put it purely on the basis of longevity, it pays for a man to do right and cut sin out of his life and out of his heart. All sins have physical consequences. The man that drinks has to suffer physically. The man that commits adultery has to suffer physically. There is no sin you can commit that does not have physical consequences. Why are there so many broken bodies in our land today? Sin, Why so many shattered intellects? Sin.

Take anger. Prof. Edmund Gates, of Washington, has crystallized from secretions of the human body when that person was in anger forty-two deadly poisons. He has crystallized also from secretions of the human body when that person was in a state of happiness and peace of mind forty-two health giving qualities, proving that anger, my friends, is the worst thing you can have; proving that evenness of temper is conducive to longevity. It doesn't pay to do wrong.

If you will start out and eliminate from the world all diseases which are caused by sin, you will be dumfounded to find out how little disease will remain. I will grant you the disease may be hereditary. You may have some physical defect not because you broke any moral law, but because your father or your mother or your grandfather or your great-grandfather did, and "God visits the iniquities of the parents unto the third and fourth generations of them that hate Him." I agree with you that it may be the result of accident. Lots of people have to bear some physical defect or disease as the result of accident. I have known of cancer to be brought on by accident. I have known people to be afflicted because of hereditary transmission, because it will go down from generation to generation, yet after all is said, if you will eliminate from the world all disease and suffering which are the result of sin, you would be dumfounded to find out how little disease would remain, and if people would only quit sinning and go to serving God, you could eliminate two-thirds of the disease in the world.

Sin Breeds Ulcer in Character

But that is not all. Something else has to suffer. That is your good name. Otharsr might call it your character. Sin will breed an ulcer in your character. I don't think a rotten body is half as bad as a rotten character. I would rather have my body a mass of corruption, with a good, clean name than to stand up with a perfect physical body and a rotten name and character. So you have to suffer in your name, in your character, for it.

A lip poisons your moral blood. A man can't cheat another man in business that he doesn't pay for it. Wrong a man in his wages and you will have to suffer for it. Wrong a man with his wife and you will have to suffer for it. Wrong a woman with her husband and you will have to suffer for it. You can't read an impure book that you don't suffer for it, and I have made it a rule never to read a book that is impure. It is a fight and a struggle all the way through.

There's always a gang around ready to send boys and girls in school vile literature and pictures. It is alleged that in every community there's a gang of miserable hell's harpies who give boys and girls heroin. Once they get in the grip of it, they become easy prey for the God-forsaken, black-hearted panderers up and down the land. Every one of that bunch ought to be shot.

At the age of sixty-seven, Edison is "coming back" again. His capacity for long hours and hard work they have called genius. There are plenty of men in this country with equal capacity, with just as much genius; but they don't prove it.

NAKED EYE CAN COUNT 3,000 STARS

No More Visible at Night from Any One Place on Earth.

Did you ever try to count all the stars you could see? Or, thinking this a hopeless task, did it ever occur to you that 5,000 would be a generous estimate of their number? This is true. The stars of the sky, visible from any one place, may be counted in a few hours under ordinary circumstances, if the night is clear, says "The Wisconsin Bulletin." They do not exceed 2,000 or 3,000, the exact number depending upon atmospheric conditions and the keenness of the individual eye.

Yet, however many are seen, there is always the vague impression of more just beyond the limit of visibility. In fact, much more than half of what we call starlight comes from stars that are, separately, too small to be seen, but whose number is so great as to more than make up for their individual faintness. The Milky Way is just such a cloud of faint stars, and through the telescope breaks up into shining points each an independent star.

These faint stars, which are found in every part of the sky, as well as in the Milky Way, are usually called telescopic, in recognition of the fact that they can be seen only in the telescope, while the other brighter ones are known as lucid stars.

Nearly nineteen centuries ago St. Paul noted that "one star differeth from another star in glory," and no more apt words can be found to mark the difference of brightenss which the stars present. Even prior to St. Paul's day the ancient Greek astronomers had divided the stars in respect of brightness into six groups, which the modern astronomers still use, calling each group a magnitude.

Thus a few of the brightest stars are said to be of the first magnitude, the great mass of faint ones which are just visible to the unaided eye are said to be of the sixth magnitude, and intermediate degree of brilliancy are represented by the intermediate magnitudes, second, third, fourth and fifth. The telescopic stars show among themselves an even greater range of brightness than do the lucid ones, and the system of magnitudes has been extended to include them, the faintest [illegible] telescope of the present time being of the twentieth or twenty-first magnitude.

The word magnitude has no reference to the size of the stars, but only to their brightness. Some stars do not remain always of the same magnitude, but change their brightness from time to time, and this not on account of cloud or mist in the atmosphere, but from something in the star itself. These are called variable stars and to their number we must also add certain extraordinary stars that flash up unexpectedly where nothing had been seen before, abide for a time and then die away. These are called new or temporary stars.

"SANITO" COOKING UTENSILS

are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

DON'T THROW AWAY GOOD WILL

SEVERAL PUBLICITY EXPERTS RECENTLY GAVE THEIR OPINIONS ON PRESENT ADVERTISING CONDITIONS.

J. B. Shelffield, advertising director of Gimbel Brothers, New York city, in discussing the temptation to discontinue advertising, has the following to say:

"Probably more money is wasted in advertising by running consistently in a publication for a long time, and then suddenly dropping it, than in any other way.

"It amounts to deliberately throwing away the good will which the readers of that publication have built up for the advertiser's name and product.

"It is better to advertise moderately, but regularly, than to use larger copy spasmodically."

H. K. McCann, the well known advertising agent, says that persistent advertising pays, because:

"Advertising is friendly. It persaudes. Slowly but inevitably, it creates the attitude of good will and confidence. It brings customers—who stay. A business built up in this way is built on a firm foundation. It's the kind of success that lasts. But it cannot be done in a day—or a month. Nothing but persistent advertising will accomplish this sort of success."

SCHOOL PROBLEM DISCUSSED AGAIN

Concensus of Opinion Among Business Men and City Officials Is That Seminary Site Is Best

Last night in the Chamber of Commerce Council a meeting was held at the call of Mayor F. E. Fox for the purpose of gathering information and data for which a feasible plan could be devised for procuring a high school site.

Those present were the members of the Common Council, Superintendent of Schools, President of Chamber of Commerce, L. W. Emerick, J. R. Sullivan, D. C. Case, Dr. E. A. Gladman, Attorney A. T. Jennings, Irving Galusha, Fire Commissioner John White and a large number of people anxious to get some light on this vexing question.

Mayor Fox, in opening the meeting, ~~school had been called to his attention~~ school had been called to his attention more than once and the progressive citizens of this city are clamoring louder and louder for a real high school which will be not only a credit to the city but also will be the means of giving efficient training to our young men and young women thereby fitting them to cope with graduates of high schools from other cities far less prosperous or progressive.

Dr. Fox went on to say that the lease for the four rooms in the Falley Seminary now used by the Department of Education for high school purposes would expire on July 1 of this year, and the option held by the city of Fulton had already expired and that he understood an option for $18,000 had been secured by an outside party for the purchase of the Falley Seminary property, which is in excess of the option formerly held by the city. Dr. Fox said that something must be done soon relative to this question, so he invited the Common Council and many public spirited citizens to meet that a full, free and calm exchange of views on this most urgent subject might be had.

The Mayor then asked Professor Fairgrieve for any information he could furnish on the subject. The reply was that through the efforts of his department the option for the purchase of the Falley Seminary for $16,000 which had expired, had again been renewed and continued by the heirs of the Falley estate until July 1st, when the city's lease of the property talso erpires; he explained that four rooms now rented by the city for high school purposes at $1,000 per year were but a makeshift and within two years this would not be ample room were this city to attempt to keep up to the standard set by the State Department of Education which this city and every other city under state jurisdiction in matters of education are compelled to live up to.

The interchanging of class rooms several times a day necessitated by lack of room is a shameful waste of time and upsets the orderly routine of a day's work. "Each year it gets more difficult," said the Professor, "and within two years it will be impossible to cope with at all."

The State Department of Education has as yet made no official complaint of these conitions, but any day might bring forth an official notification that unless the city of Fulton takes better care to provide its children with the proper accommodations for high school purposes a withdrawal of public moneys will be the penalty.

Temporary Quarters

"Some people suggested temporary schools in churches, but," said the Professor, "this would lead to no end of prejudice and discussion and leave the classes scattered all over the city, a thing in itself not to be tolerated."

The Falley Seminary site Prof. Fairgrieve stated was an ideal location and with some slight alterations could be made safe and roomy enough for a few years until the city was in a better position to erect a modern structure.

E. J. Penfield, President of Chamber of Commerce, stated that a committe consisting of a member from each ward took up this site question and made a thorough investigation of the Nelson, Falley, Dr. Lake's and Livingston properties and that he would be glad to furnish this report for the Mayor and his board should they desire it.

Mr. Penfield said he would feel grieved indeed if this progressive city should fail to equip its young men and women with the same training secured elsewhere, and in offering his support and the support and assistance of the Chamber of Commerce urged an awakening of public sentiment through publicity.

L. J. Emerick, President of the First National Bank, stated that in his opinion $16,000 was a low price for the Falley Seminary property and he knew that $18,000 had been offered the heirs for it, but that it had been refused because they desired the city to own this plot and had been most tolerant with the city in still offering it after it had been twice rejected by election.

Mr. Emerick believes that this site is the most desirable one obtainable and it is near enough for all to reach conveniently. He also emphatically warned all present that the State Department of Education will step in and say what must be done in the near future.

Attorney Jennings urged quick action and felt that as two-thirds of the population resided on the east side the high school should be located there. The Nelson sight is a desirable one if the noise of passing cars were not objectionable, this site might be obtained by condemnation proceedings.

Proper Information

John R. Sullivan believes that the Falley Seminary site is offered at a reasonable price and in his opinion would be suitable to all, after the people had been properly informed concerning the conditions under which the city is now renting it and by what terms it could be purchased.

"We must get a site soon or build a new school, and were these conditions clearly explained to the taxpayers the Falley site would be chosen," said Mr. Sullivan.

D. C. Case stated that he regrets the rivalry between the East and West side, but felt that the time for a high school on the West Side had passed, and urged that a clear and plain statement of the merits of the Falley Seminary proposition be put before the public thus leaving no chance for prejudice to enter when the matter comes up for a vote.

Dr. Gladman said that when the Falley Seminary proposition was up before it was simply buffeted about upon the waves of prejudice worked up in the minds of those who were not familiar either with the availability of the site or the conditions under which it could be purchased. He urged that the proposition be presented on its merits by opening up a full public discussion on all of the conditions surrounding the matter. Dr. Gladman firmly believes that after the matter is properly presented by the prss, another election would result in the selection of the Falley Seminary site.

Publicity Desired

Mayor Fox closed the meeting by thanking all present for their views and urged the press to give full publicity to the attitude of the city officials and leading business men on the purchasing of this high school site. The meeting was the first real open discussion on this most important subject. The city must have a properly equipped high school or the State Department of Education will take drastic measures to force such action. The children of our citizens should be equipped with the same efficient training received elsewhere; prejudice in selection of a proper site must be buried for the general good. The Falley Seminary site is reasonable, can be purchased on easy terms, is by the concensus of opinion of both city officials and leading business men of both sides of the river available and with but slight alterations could be made to serve for several years to come or until such time when the city is in a position to erect more modern structure. Let the East and West Side lay aside their differences and unite in bringing about the selection of this Falley Seminary site because it is the best of all the sites presented and without questoin the most reasonable.

HELPFUL HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES

New Gas Range Designed to Econimize Fuel.

Making two gas burners do the work of five, with a resulting saving in fuel, is the feature of a new gas range that has just been brought out. The top of the range consists of two detachable sections, each heated independently by one burner, and each section has two stove holes, with lids like those of an ordinary stove. Each burner is at the front of the stove and heats the lid over it by the direct action of the flame. The hot gases, instead of escaping as in an ordinary stove, then pass through a shallow flue to an outlet at the rear, heating the remainder of the section.—Popular Mechanics.

Baked Sausage With Dressing.

For this do not use very fat sausage. Make a dressing with three cups of dry bread soaked in cold water. Press out the water and season highly with pepper, salt and sage or grated onion. Some housekeepers like both sage and onion. Pile up the dressing in the middle of the frying pan and curl the sausage around it. Cook without a cover basting often. Take out the meat and dressing on a platter and pour off some of the surplus fat. Add one pint of hot water and a thickening made of two tablespoonfuls of flour rubbed smooth in a little cold milk. Have the gravy thick, smooth and a fich brown. Pour the gravy over the meat and dressing on the platter or serve separately.

Fried Chicken, Southern Style.

Fry a dozen slices, sliced thin, of fat salted pork. Add thereto a medium sized onion, also cut in slices, which remove when cooked a delicate brown. Cut into six or seven pieces a young chicken, which season with a hint of pepper and salt and dredge with flour. Fry them in the hot fat until they attain a rich brown tint. Then, if done, take them up, drain and place them on a dish that can be kept hot. Add to the pork fat, if any remains, a cupful of rich milk thickened with flour, a piece of butter the size of an egg, and the fried onions. Let it come to a boil, and when done pour over the chicken.

Stewed Carrots.

Scrape and wash young carrots, then boil quite rapidly in enough water to cover, with cover partially or entirely off. When nearly done add salt. When tender drain, cut into strips, return to stewpan with a generous amount of butter, seasoning and cream. Let come to a boil and serve hot. For a change in place of the cream use some meat or chicken broth. For variety use three parts carrots to one part sliced onions, cook and serve as above

Pea Soup.

Split dried peas, one-half pound; water, three pints; onion, one; carrot, one; turnip, one small slice; flour, one tablespoonful; butter, one ounce; herbs, one small bunch; salt and pepper to taste. Boil peas, vegetables and herbs in the water until the peas are quite soft, then rub through the sieve. Mix the flour and butter smoothly together and add the soup gradually, so as not to lump; boil for three minutes, season and serve.

Banana Fritters.

Beat three or four bananas to a cream. Add one egg, one cupful of flour, one teaspoonful of baking powder, a little salt, one-fourth cupful of milk, one teaspoonful of sugar and one tablespoonful of lemon juice. Beat until thoroughly mixed. Have the fat heated as for doughnuts. Dip a spoon in the fat and use it to shape the fritters. Fry until brown. Sprinkle with powdered sugar or serve with lemon juice.

Breadcrumb Omelet.

A pleasing variation of a plain omelet may be made as follows: First take a cup of breadcrumbs and pour over them three-fourths of a cup of hot milk and set this aside to cool. When this is cold add it to the beaten yolks of three eggs. After these are thoroughly blended fold in the well beaten whites and cook in the usual manner.

Airing the Sickroom.

Cover the patient over while airing the sickroom. Let down the window at the top and swing door rapidly, but quickly, for a few minutes backward and forward. This will pump the bad air out and draw in the fresh air from the window.

Baking Powder.

Pass a half pound of bicarbonate of soda and six ounces of tartaric acid through a sieve, mix with a quarter of a pound of rice flour and sift all together two or three times. Store in tin and keep in a dry place.

Washing Silk Stockings.

Silk stockings should never be ironed. Wash them in soapsuds (made with good white soap and lukewarm water) and rinse in clear water of the same temperature. Rough dry.

WAGES PAID ON CANADIAN FARMS

Average Value of Land Held for Agricultural Purposes, Including Buildings, Is $38.41 Per Acre

Ottawa.—The following bulletin has been issued by the Census and Statistics Office:

"For the whole of Canada the average value of farm land for agricultural purposes, whether improved or unimproved, and including the value of dwelling houses, farms, stables and other farm buildings, is returned as $38.41 per acre, which is about equal to that of the last similar inquiry in 1910, when the value was given as $38.45 per acre. In 1911 the average was returned by the census as $30.41, but this value was based upon returns from all occupiers, including farms, only recently settled and therefore of less value. By Provinces the average values of 1914 range from $21 per acre in Alberta to $150 per acre in British Columbia. In this Province, however, the high value is due to orcharding, ordinary agriculture being subsidiary to fruit culture.

"In recent years the wages of farm help have increased considerably, and they reached their highest point during the bumper harvest of 1913. But in 1914 the pendulum swayed back, less labor being required on farms owing to lighter crops. Since August the war has had for one of its effects an increase in the supply of farm labor and consequently a fall in the wages. The demand for labor this winter has also decreased because of the increased cost of board. For the Dominion the average wages per month during the summer, including board, were $35.55 for male and $18.81 for female help. For the year, including board, the average wages were $323.30 for males and $189.35 for females, while the average cost of board per month works out to $14.27 for males and $11.20 for females, as compared with $12.49 and $6.53 in 1910.

"Average wages per month in 1914 were lowest in Prince Edward Island, viz., $24.71 for males and $14.48 for females; in Nova Scotia they were $31.20 and $14.80 and in New Brunswick $31.93 and $15.00. In Quebec the averages were $33.56 and $15.65, and in Ontario $32.09 and $16.67. In the western Provinces they were for males $39.13 in Manitoba, $40.51 in Saskatchewan and $40.26 in Alberta, females receiving $22.35 in Manitoba, $22.96 in Saskatchewan and $23.63 in Alberta. The highest wages were paid in British Columbia, viz., $47.85 for males and $31.18 for females, these averrages being substantially less than in 1910 when males received $57.40 and females $38.

"Values are well maintained so far as comparison with the three years ended 1910 is concerned; but during 1914 there has been a substantial reduction in the value both of horses and of swine. It is a cause of general complaint that the demand for horses other than for military purposes has fallen off, and that prices are less by from 25 to 40 or 50 per cent. than they were in 1913.

"Owing to the high price of grain the keeping of swine in the West is said to be no longer a paying proposition. Hogs have been sold for what they will fetch—frequently for as little as 3½c. per pound—and many have been marketed in an unfinished condition."

OBSERVER" REPLIES TO "FAIR PLAY"

AND "NOT A METHODIST"; HE ENDEAVORS TO PUT THEM IN RIGHT

itor Evening Times:

I was privileged to read the letters in your issue of last evening, of which is signed "Fair Play" and the other, "Not a Methodist." the writer is a firm believer in fair play at all times and under all rcumstances, I will endeavor to answer this one first.

In the first place, we would suggest that "Fair Play" will make his business to read the letters that were written last summer by dward Joslin and "Observer." He will get at the bottom of bserver's so-called imaginary grudge to begin with and possibly arn a few other things that at the present time, he no doubt is unaware of. Some may have regarded the controversy as a joke, on account of the clean manner in which it was conducted; but, withal could be found deep voiced thoughts that are worthy of consideration.

The casual mention of the other church seems to have cut something loose in "Fair Play," as we note he devotes quite a little space to the subject. We will not dispute your statement, Brother; we do not believe that any of the charter members, or any who have joined recently, have regretted their action. In fact, they seem—a lot of hem—to carry the idea that State street church and Rev. Holmes are all there is to Methodism in Fulton, and, possibly they are right—we do not intende to dispute them. The writer does not intend to try and start anything between these two bodies—attend both places of worship and decide which is best suited to your requirements—is our advice.

Now, Mr. "Fair Play," when you make the statement that "Observer" has an imaginary grudge against the First Methodist church, you are decidedly in gross error and you are not what your signature means to imply—a lover of justice and fair play. When you call plain and well founded facts, "arrows of sarcasm thurst at this house of worship" you are again in error. The Good Book says, "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," and if you had read and remembered the letters of last Summer, you would have learned that "Observer" is a dyed-in-the-wool Methodist, and it is only the manner in which present day Methodists have digressed from the teachings of their fathers, that causes the writer to deal out the facts as he has.

As the writer has before stated in a former letter, "Observer" has attended services at the First M. E. church—with no malice aforethought, and not through curosity. Dear friends of ours—people who would not misstate facts, have also attended—as visitors and strangers. We were all accorded the same sort of welcome—namely, such as you would get in an icehouse. Members in good standing of this church have agreed that this statement is true—and we are informed, upon good authority, that Dr. Stockwell in one of his sermons admonished the members of this particular church to be cordial. Possibly, since the last revival, things have changed; the Lord knows they needed changing. "Fair Play" advises "Observer" to get posted—take that advice yourself, Brother.

The answer to the so-called letter by the one who styles himself "Not a Methodist" must necessarily be short. Really, such an attempt to be humorous and witty at the expense of some one who has done nothing but present facts, shows beyond doubt that the one who seems anxious for us to know he is not a Methodist, does not write even as well as a "child with a half grown idea." We consider his remarks do not constitute an answer to our former letter; and, further, the tone of his letter borders closely on vituperation.

"OBSERVER."

HOLSTEIN-FRIESIAN CATTLE CATTLE HAVE DISEASE

Valuable Herd to Be Slaughtered Because of Hoof and Mouth Disease.

In a herd of 140 registered Holstein-Friesian cattle on the farm of James Male of Solvay has been found the first case of the foot and mouth disease. All of the cattle will be slaughtered at once.

The cattle are all very valuable, one being a bull for which Mr. Male received an offer of $10,000 recently. The cattle will be appraised by government inspectors before they are slaughtered. The State pays one-half and the government one-half of the cattle's value.

The disease was discovered by Dr. E. E. Dooling, and he immediately notified the authorities at Albany by long distance telephone. A. J. Faulder, a government inspector, who has been working throughout the state in an effort to stop the spread of the disease, was sent to this city and he at once placed a strict quarantine on the farm.

Efforts will be made to learn the source of the disease. Mr. Male said last night that he was at a loss to explain where it came from, as he has not had a shipment of cattle in some time. Although all the cows are infected they will have to be killed.

Authorities have taken every precaution against the spread of the disease, but whether a quarantine against the shipment of cattle will be placed on the county could not be learned last night.

The Selig Polyscope Company has contracted with Frank Gotch, the world's champion wrestler, for his appearance before a motion-picture camera in three wrestling bouts, the honorarium for which will approximate $100,000.

The wrestling contests to be pictured on the screen are but a small part of the comprehensive plan for athletic productions as contemplated by the Selig concern. The plan embraces, among other interesting and blood stirring events, a complete course of lessons in physical culture. Negotiations are now pending with such athletic exponents as Muldoon, Sandow, Bernard McFadden, Alois Swoboda, Sylvester J. Simon, and others, each of whom, if satisfactory arrangements are made, will show upon the screen a course of simple yet effective exercise which the world accepts as being constructive to longevity. Each one of the lessons will be complete in itself to be followed by others until the entire series have been pictured.

Arrangements are bing made for winners in the great six-day bicycle race to appear before Selig cameras and engage in contests which will be unique, inasmuch as dials will be placed in plain view of the audience so that the progress of each rider will be plainly shown. Billiard players will demonstrate skill and ability by playing of match games, which will be a part of this series.

The world's champion boxers will also make their appearance before cameras.

This new series, which will be called the Selig Physical Culture Series, will be ready for release within a short time, the first public showing to be made the first week in April.

Mr. Mastbaum Speaks

An enthusiast of the enthusiasts regarding the future of the motion picture drama and the photo-play is Stanley V. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company, and director-in-charge of the Stanley theatre.

"It is conceded by all," says Mr. Mastbaum, "that the photo-play has reached a wonderful stage of development, and is now a legitimate rival of the spoken drama and comedy, with the most select classes. Thus some appear inclined to think is a modern miracle, and marks the climax and zenith of motion picture development. I cannot agree with them. The film play has merely taken its first great stride forward. It is but a beginning and other strides, the nature of which we cannot even imagine, will surely follow. I do not think these subsequent strides will be in the direction of reproduction of famous plays and players, for we have well night, if not quite reached the perfect stage there already, and can simultaneously present the plays and stars perfectly in a hundred lands and a thousand cities. But, eventually, the motion picture camera will be made to work automatically. It will figure as does the dictograph as a detector of crime and an unimpeachable witness. It will automatically take the pictures showing the full horrors of war and will become the greatest agent in all the world. It will make daily records of the travels and explorers in the Arctice, the Antarctic and the far-off and vast places of the earth, will even tell the tales of their sufferings and perhaps death as even spoken words of their could not do if they survived. It will invade and lay bare the mysteries of such forbiden lands as China and Thibet, and those of the unexplored jungles of South America and of Africa. In fact its possibilities as an educational and civilizing force are absolutely unlimited. Not far fetched, these predictions, when you consider the developments of the telegraph, the telephone, the wireless telegraph, the aeroplane, submarine and other modern day wonders. The motion picture camera is the greatest of them all."

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany March 3.—Senator George W. Simpson, the introducer of the bill to put an end to fortune telling, is making a determined stand to have his measure passed and signed. The measure in question which prescribes that fortune telling shall be deemed disorderrly conduct was early introduced this yar.

From many charitable and reform organizations have come letters of commendation and promises that aid would be forthcoming toward making the Simpson bill alaw. Plain statements pointing out the evils which have resulted from the tolerance of fortune telling are made in some of the letters and telegrams which Senator Simpson has received. Many of the communications have particular refereince to conditions following visits to fortune tellers which have resulted in the city of New York.

Considerable comment, favorable in nature, was made when the Simpson bill was introduced, and now the interest in the measure is being revived as the session approaches its end and the bill has still been retained in the Senate Codes committee to which it was referred after its introduction.

William McAdoo, chief magistrrate of Greater New York holds that the fortune telling evil is great and far reaching, largely affecting the poor. "The victims of swindles by these rogues, whose lives are blighted and misdirected by so-called forcasters of the future, make the present system of putting them under bond is of no use, "writes Magistrate McAdoo, to Senator Simpson.

O. F. Cutts, representing the International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations, says that it is time that people were made to realize that fortune telling is not a joke but a really serious evil and should be treated as such and the public protected from fakirs.

"The magistrate of New York city and the charitable societies have constant evidence of pemicious activities of fortune tellersr and their regulation through this legislation is important," says Porter R. Lee, reprersenting the New York School of Philanthropu.

That ignorant and supertitious people who are easy victims of fortune tellers should be protected from them is the belief of Federick D.Greene, representing the Hospital and Sunday Association of New York City. "I come in contact with so many ignorant and supertitious people," says Mr. Greene, " that I am convinced that they have not enough intelligence to keep out of the clutches of fortune tellers of various kinds; that society ought to protect such people by law is my belief."

The comment of F. J. Bruno, superintendent of the Charirty Organization Society of the city of New York is worthy of consideration. "The uncontrolled and unsupervised work of the fortune tellers is not only a drain on the resources of the people known to us," he says, "but a fruitful recruiting possibility for all sorts of disreputable work. The whole business is so thoroughly disgraceful that I am sure most everyone is eager to see it supervised.

Shelby M. Harrison of the Russell Sage Foundation; H. Clark Barber of the Society for the Prevention of Crime; B. L. Brace of the Children's Aid Society; Joshan Strong of the American Institute of Social Service; C. H. Sears of the New York Baptist Mission Society; W. Frank Persons of the Charity Organization Society; Bailey B. Burritt, acting general director of the New York Asociation for Improving the Condition of the Poor; R. W. Wheeler of the Playground and Recreation Association of America and others have signified their intention of advocating the Simpson bill.

BIPLANE AT ITHACA MAKES HIGH ALTITUDES

Many Military Machines to be Tried Out at Head of Lake Cayuga

Ithaca, March 3.—The recent successful demonstrations by the Thomas Brothers Aeroplane company of their military tractor has hown, from the interest taken in the flights by residents of the city and students of Cornell University, that Ithaca will be the destination of many automobilists and sightseers during the coming months.

Flights were made from the ice at the head of Cayuga lake, an altitude of 4,000 feet being reached in ten minutes. This was done to show the machine would meet the requirements laid down by the authorities of the United States army and navy. This requirement has been met with the machine carryring two people and 250 pounds of gasoline.

The military tractor is capable of reaching an altitude of 20,000 feet, and with a gasoline capacity of forty gallons can make a 300-mile trip. The machine is of the biplane type, and a land machine, its engine is in front of the pilot and a little below the level of his seat.

During the demonstrations the machine glided from an altitude of 3,000 feet for a distance of two miles to the ice at the head of the lake. It has ben shown that under proper conditions the tractor will glide a distance equal to eight times the height from which its power has been shut off.

Besides the controlling levers of the machine, the apartment in which the driver is seated is equipped with various indicators. Among them are an air speed indicator, an altitude indicator, a pressure gauge and an inclinometer, which shows the angle at which the machine is flying.

During the summer visitors will have an opportunity to take trips in flying water boats for two or three miles on the lake. The keel of such a machine is now laid, and it is expected that within two months flights will be made. It is of a new model and capable of carrying three persons.

Since 1910 the Thomas company has been trarining aviators, and it now has six students. Frank H. Burnside, holder of the 1913 altitude record, is in instructor, and was in charge of the recent demonstrations.

THE WINTER LEAGUE

Double-Headers Played by Millionaires Saturday Afternoons

By Frank G. Menke

Winter league baseball is being played in New York, not behind the old base burner, nor in the cigar stores and billiard rooms, but out in the open on a real ball field no matter what kind of weather affects or blesses the community.

The league, known as the New York Interclub League, is a very exclusive organization. It is made up of six clubs and the roster of each looks like a part of "Who's Who In America." Bankers, brokers, judges, lawyers and other business and professional men belong to the different clubs. The majority of the players can sign their checks for $1,000,000 and more.

The games are played on the "million dollar" field at Fifth avenue and Seventy-first street. The games are played with an indoor baseball because of the smallness of the field. The regulation game is seven innings.

The season for the crowd of winter leaguers opened December 5th and it will close May 15th. Two games are played every Saturday afternoon. Such a little matter as zero weather or a blizzard never causes a postponement of games.

The league was started in the winter of 1912. A grandstand in the field holds about 250 persons—and it is nearly always crowded with fur covered men and women spectators. Admission to the game is by invitation only.

"There's all the more fun in it for us when the weather is bad," said C. P. Duval, president of the league. "You kno its easier for a fellow to make a fadeaway slide when there's a lot of ice to slide on.

Those games get us out into the open once a week at least and the exercise we get is a wonderful help for ones general health. It puts new life and a new zip into use."

Ad Wolgast is called "The unluckiest pugilist in ring history," but it seems to us that Ad isn't such an unlucky gink after all. True, Ad has suffered more physical injuries than any other fighter in the game, but despite the handicap of injuries and illness on the eve of important bouts he has amassed a fortune almost equal to that of any man who ever entered the fighting business.

Wolgast, in his eight years as a fighter, has gathered in about $250,000 and about 15 sets of injuries most of which have mended since then. Wouldn't you suffer a cauliflower ear and a half dozen busted bones for a quarter of a million dollars?

About $60,000 of Wolgast's fortune was made on the stage. The rest of it was made in the ring. And Wolgast has all that he ever made—and the interest too.

Here is a list of the most serious injuries that Wolgast has suffered since he began fighting in 1906:.

1907—Right ear scrambled.

1908—Bones in both hands broken and one knuckle knocked out of joint.

1909—Bridge of nose broken and surgical operation necessary.

1911—Stricken with appendicitis on eve of bout with "Freddie" Welsh, and "Willie" Ritchie substituted for him, getting a chance that finally him the title from Wolgast.

1912—Bones of both hands broken again.

1913—Suffered serious attack of ptomaine poisoning; ribs cracked in bout with sparring partner.

HOT LINERS

By Frank G. Menke

Back to the minors again
Back to the one horse park,
Far from the crowd with a head that is bowed
And a future exceedingly dark;
Back to the minors again,
Far from the big town's glare,
Back to the gloom of a rented room
And a grand stand that's usually bare.

Fake interviews:

"I will report at the training camp with the first squad."—Ty Cobb.

"Willie Ritchie is confident that he will beat Freddie Welsh." says a head line.

Some day an aspirant for pugilistic honors will say that he does not thing he has a chance to win. But that day is a million years off.

The great divide:

Tommy Leach has lost his value as a ball player—Roger Bresnahan of the Cubs, who fired him.

Tommy Leach will be of great value to my club—Charlesy Heroz of the Reds who hired him.

THE HELPING HAND.

Only those who have extended a helping hand to those in distress know the quiet joy that is born of such good works. The secret of happiness, at least of the most assured and tranquil happiness that is possible in this life, is to be absorbed in the affairs of others and particularly in their troubles. The man who can be so absorbed is sure not to be miserable, because he will never be aware of his own misfortunes. For them he will substitute the misfortunes of others.

Real Success.

There are laws in the spiritual world no less than in the physical. All real and lasting success comes from working in harmony with them. To try to work without them—or against them—means failure always. The laws for success in business are honesty, faithfulness, perseverance and courage. To try to get along without honesty means moral disaster; without faithfulness you get inefficiency; without perseverance you waste your time; if you leave out courage there's a weak place that will mean a breakdown in some sudden emergency. The man who tries to break these laws gets broken by them.—Youth's Companion.

THE MUNICIPAL POWER PLANTS

Good Judgment Requisite in Selecting Equipment.

SUPPLY ELECTRIC CURRENT

Current Is Generated Chiefly by Steam, Oil, Gas or Water Power—Of These Methods Steam Is Most Widely Used — Local Conditions Determine Best Source.

Municipal ownership of public utilities is becoming more and more general in the United States, and a large number of cities already have their own power plants, which is, of course, one of the most important members of a group of public utilities.

Such plants are used for furnishing electric current for city traction, street and municipal building lighting and power purposes, while in the cases of many cities current is sold to private consumers.

Municipal power plants should be designed to supply the current required under existing conditions and to be capable of ready extension when made necessary by subsequent demands for additional current, but at the same time, in order to insure financially successful results, great care should be taken not to make the plant larger than necessary, since interest and sinking fund charges on idle equipment or on too large an equipment will make the city's current unduly expensive.

MUNICIPAL POWER PLANT AT TIVOLI, ITALY, WHICH SUPPLIES ROME, TWENTY MILES DISTANT.

In the selection of the equipment also the greatest judgment is requisite, since the most expensive equipment is by no means necessarily productive of the most efficient results.

In the designing of a plant advantage must be taken of the latest advances in engineering, and especially so in order to obtain the greatest degree of economy in operation.

Electric current for municipal purposes is generated chiefly by steam, oil, gas or water power. Of the four methods steam is the most widely in use, but local conditions are the determining factor in the selection of the best source. A city, for example, in which coal is expensive and in which a water power is at hand will, of course, choose a water power plant unless the overhead charges will outweigh the advantages of the water power.

The current if used for lighting only should be converted from alternating into direct, and, while this is a somewhat more expensive system, it gives steadier light than if such conversion is not made. If the current is used simultaneously for local and suburban railway systems, in order to avoid the installation of different kinds of apparatus, alternating current is also used for lighting, but in such case the cycle chosen should be not less than twenty-five per second in order that fluctuations of the light may be avoided. While fifteen cycles per second is considered desirable for traction and sixty cycles for lighting, yet when the current is needed for both purposes a medium number should be chosen. Some cities have a cycle frequency of thirty-two and one-half and forty-two.

Within the past few years many plants are utilizing the exhaust steam from the engines for steam heating of buildings in entire districts in winter and for icemaking in summer, the ice being sold to the public at a lower price than it could be sold by other producers. Thus the plant is made much more profitable.

It will be seen that no little technical experience is required in selecting the best form of equipment for any particular installation, owing to the various conditions to be met.

Many cities are fortunately in position to take advantage of water powers, but in order successfully to utilize such powers it is necessary to give the subject an exhaustive preliminary study and investigation to ascertain particularly the volume of water which may be available during the whole year. Thorough investigation should also be made as regards the financial aspect of the development.

The Mocking Bird Girl

By F. A. MITCHEL

One afternoon in April while on a visit to Washington I was sitting on a bench in one of the parks. The leaves were half blown, and among them birds were twittering. One little songster in a tree above my head was now and again giving two melodious notes, the first higher than the second. Then suddenly just behind me these notes were repeated by a human voice, followed by a girl's laugh. I cannot say which was the more musical, the imitation of the bird's piping or the laugh. I turned and saw three girls, all with their backs toward me, moving away.

Cupid has many arrows in his quiver, but there is one, called fancy, that he uses more than all the others. At any rate he had let drive at me with such an arrow and pierced my heart. I had been caught by the trifling incident that I have mentioned and was enamored of the girl who had mocked a bird and laughed. I fancied her the embodiment of feminine mischief; her smile between dimples was doubtless expressive of that melodious laugh, and her eyes laughed as well as her lips and her voice.

Had I been a trifle less fanciful and more practical I would have arisen and hurried after the girls to get a view of the one who had bewitched me. But by the time I became aroused to the situation it was too late. I went after them, but the park was full of people, and they were lost in the crowd.

A few evenings later I was attending a reception at the White House. I was standing near the opening to the conservatory with a married lady to whom I was indebted for invitations. Suddenly from within the conservatory I heard the musical laugh that had charmed me. But unfortunately high growing plants were between me and the person who laughed, and I could not see her.

I would have given all I possessed if I could have left my companion and hurried around what screened the girl I longed to see. But no. Conventionality held me. To leave a woman standing alone at a function would be unpardonable. And what excuse could I make for such an act? Could I say "Madame, pardon me. There is a mocking bird girl behind those palms with whom I am enthralled. I must leave you to go to her?" Such a course would be to commit social suicide, for I have observed that of all the women in society the most sensitive to the attention shown them are those who have husbands. I remained at my post, but heaven knows what it cost me to do so. Later I would have tried to find her, but how could I do so never having seen her face?

The next time I heard my mocking bird laugh I was at the capitol, up in a gallery under the dome. Directly below me walked a man, a woman and a girl. I could see the tops of their heads and shoulders, but nothing more. Then up came the laugh. It was the same I had heard twice before. I would know it among a thousand.

I was tempted to jump down fifty or a hundred feet and land before my charmer. Instead, I turned and ran down the stairs so fast that I fell and when I tried to rise found it impossible to do so. I had broken my leg.

I cursed my fate for many reasons, but the principal one was that I must give up hope of ever finding my charmer—that is, if she was a stranger in Washington. If not, I would remain there as long as I lived in order to find her.

I did not get the use of my leg again till July, and then it was too hot to remain in one of the hottest cities in America. I would have done so, but I didn't believe the girl I was looking for would be there. With a heavy heart I went northward.

In October I returned to prosecute my search. I accepted all the invitations I received, hoping to meet my mocking bird girl. I was doomed to disappointment. Everywhere I went I listened and never heard a girl laugh that I did not feel a pang because it was not the one I longed to hear. I was introduced to many girls, but none of them could fill the gap in my heart.

One evening I was assigned to take a certain young lady out to dinner. She was very pretty. Her eye was liquid, her smile flanked by dimples. I passed a delightful period chatting with her, for there was between us that wireless something which tells two persons that they like each other. I parted with her under the impression that she might make me forget my laugh girl.

I met this young lady again and asked permission to call. It was granted, and during the first evening I spent at her home I made a discovery. She began to play the piano, and this set a canary bird in another room to singing.

"I once heard a girl," I remarked, "imitate a bird to perfection."

"I can do that," she said and straightway reproduced some of the canary's notes. Whether it was the expression on my face or what it was I know not, but she laughed.

I sprang toward her and took both her hands in mine.

"I've been hunting you since last April!" I exclaimed. "I heard you imitate a bird in the park and laugh. That laugh made me your slave forever."

And I spoke the realistic truth. We have been married ten years, and I have never yet had my way in a single instance.

COULD YOU LIVE ON $3.75 A WEEK?

Gotham-Knickerbocker Finds People Who Do It

New York, Mar. 3.—"Instead of making women workers dance when they do not want to dance, and showing them how to save money when the poor things have to make the pennies stretch to buy food, why don't the uplifters do something that really will help them?

"Instead of preaching about why girls go wrong and telling them how to be saved, why not remedy the underlying cause of evil—wages?

"Some people say they would like to try to live on $6.00 a week and show the girls how absurdly easy it is, but they only are experimenting, and not suffering the real thing with no square meal at the end of the experiment."

Those were some of the outspoken sentiments expressed at a "Women and Wages" mass meeting at Cooper Union. They showed the feelings of the working women, and had some of the "uplifters" been there, they might not have liked all they heard.

The opinion of the working women of New York, as expressed by themselves, is that they do not care a straw for the theories and platitudes of the "uplifters." They do not want to know how to prepare dainty 6-cent lunches; they do not care to be taugh how to make their own clothes and hats. What they want is better wages, compensation more nearly what they think they earn. They want an organization recognized by the employers. They are not greatly concerned with having their working conditions, their living rooms and their rooms improved; if they can get more money for their work, they will do their own improving.

So said the speakers at the Cooper Union meeting. The first two of the foregoing questions were asked by Miss Rose Schneiderman and the last by Miss Schneiderman and the last by Miss Dorothy Miller. Miss Schneiderman is a worker herself and Miss Miller is a department store clerk.

"I started out at $5.00 a week myself," said Miss Miller, and I'm not rich yet. I lived in Brooklyn then, and my carfare to and from the store amounted to $1.20 a week. My lunches cost 90 cents a week and I gave $2.50 at home. That left me 40 cents a week for clothing and general expenses. But remember I only gave $2.50 at home, while most girls must pay at least $3.50 a week if they live with their parents or if they have to board elsewhere. If I had had to do that I would have had to walk to and from the Brooklyn bridge every day and cut my lunch money from 15 cents a day to 6 cents.

Finally I got six dollars a week, but not before I spent a long time at $5, and then at $5.50. At the most a girl can't have but a few cents left over, for she has to clothe herself respectably and has to have some kind of diversion. And you can bet those six cent lunches in the stores get tiresome—3 cents for something they call coffee and three cents for rolls.

"The average wages of a girl clerk is $6.00 a week. It doesn't matter what the reports say about it. I know, I was a cashier and I have handled in one day as much as $2,000, and sometimes we were so busy I couldn't get relief, and so I had to go without my six-cent lunch. I tell you it's a hard proposition to live that way. WHY, the Retail Clerks' Union isn't growing as fast as it should, because the poor girl can't spare 25 cents a month for dues.

"After all the only ones who are going to help us are ourselves. It's easy for uplifters to say they could live on $3.00 a week if they had to. But they don't have to, and if they try the experiment for a week they can keep a stiff upper lip thinking about that big square meal waiting for them when the experiment is over. It's no expiriment with us. There's no square meal waiting at the end like a happy awakening after a bad dream."

Prof. Howard Woolston, head of the wage investigation made for the New York State Factory Commission, said:

"The average wage of women who make candy," he said, "is $3.75 a week, and if all the candy workers in New York State were raised to $8.00 a week it would mean an additional cost to the ultimate sonsumer of only 18 cents for every 100 pounds sold.

"Out of 55,000 women workers investigated 1,500 get less than $3.00 a week, 11,000 less than $5, 19,000 less than $6, 27,000 less than $7, and 37,000 less than $8. Yet, authorities say it requires from $8 to $18 a week for a worker to like like a human being.

"It's not the work itself that causes low wages, but the mobs waiting outside the gate for jobs. That puts the level wages down, for the employer can have his choice. He can recruit a new and more underpaid workers from the grammar schools and tenement houses. Twice as many women are hired and fired than hold a job a full year, showing that many lose many weeks and months by having to drift from job to job."

SEARCHLIGHTS IN WAR.

How They Are Worked by Distant Control in Land Operations.

In modern warfare the searchlight is invaluable. On dark nights at sea it is the only means of guarding against torpedo boats, which its beams will reveal at a distance of two miles and more.

On shore it is the electric eye of the army. It is carried to all parts of the field of action by motor truck, and the motor that propels the vehicle drives the electric generator that supplies the current for the light.

Most of these field searchlights are not directed by hand, for each instrument is fitted with what is known as the distant control. Two small motors govern the vertical and the horizontal movements of the light. From them an electric cable runs to the station of the operator, who, although he may be several hundred feet away, can send the rays of the light in any direction he pleases.

According to the Navy and Army Illustrated, one advantage of this distant control is that the objects picked up by the beam of light can be sighted more quickly and more definitely, for if the operator stands behind the light and looks along the beam his vision is hampered by a luminous haze. A second advantage is that the light can be placed in an exposed position without endangering the men who run it. Were the operator and officer beside the apparatus they would be certain to receive the fire that is sure to be poured upon a searchlight and would suffer the instant the range was found.

Bad Taste as Seen in Japan.

Dr. Aston, the scholarly Japanese secretary to the British legation in Tokyo, summarized what Kenko, the fourteenth century writer of "Tsuresure Gusa," considered to be "bad taste," thus:

Too much furniture in one's living room.

Too many pens in a stand.

Too many Buddhas in a private shrine.

Too many rocks, trees and herbs in a garden.

Too many words when men meet.

Too many books in a bookcase there can never be, nor can there be too much litter in a dust heap.—London Saturday Review.

He was born in 1826, became a mail carrier at the age of 12 years and, for a number of years, he never missed a trip, going to Syracuse one day and returnig to Fulton the next, making the trip on horseback. Stops were made at Little Utica, Geddes, Baldwinsville and a number of other small hamlets. At that time the road was nothing but a trail with woods on either side and an occasional glimpse of the river and perhaps a bark canoe filled with Indians. In winter the mail never stalled as badly as in later years with the canal and railroads in operation. When about 20 years of age he opened a tailor shop in Hannibal and did a flourishing business for thirty-five years. His wife died nine years ago, and he has since resided with his daughter, besides this daughter, he is survived by one son, William, who is in the west, and one daughter, Mrs. Viola Hunn, of Dexterville. The menu was of the best and served by six high school girls in charge of Mrs. B. L. Welling, former teacher of domestic science.

An entertainment and oyster supper will be given at Maccabee hall, Hannibal, Thursday evening, March 4th. A drama entitled "Murder Will Out," will be given under the auspices of our local lodge.

The leaders are doing good work getting new members and fine programs are rendered by both sides. Now all you loyal Grangers, come out. Get busy! Go after the other fellows and help boost your side.

It's a long way to North Hannibal,
But you don't have to go
To find the very best programs,
And the prettiest girls you know;
And you mustn't miss the great contest,
You'll be sorry if you do.
It is not far to Golden Sheaf Grange hall,
Please, may we count on you?

Anne's Great Discovery

A Call That Made Her Sure About Her Own Heart.

By EMILY HODGES.

"You're very foolish and very headstrong, Maisie, and you're going to be sorry some day," Anne said severely.

She was sitting before the glass, putting cold cream on her face, and Maisie was watching her from the bed.

It was to pretty Maisie a very funny performance—Anne's nightly comforting of her complexion with cold cream. She wondered if she would do the same when she was thirty-six and unmarried. But she would not be unmarried at thirty-six. Of course not. There was Dick, and she was determined to marry Dick, no matter what Anne or Aunt Hannah said. It was about Dick that Anne was talking now.

"You know as well as I do," Anne went on, "that you are too young even to think of marrying, and, anyway, Dick Launt isn't a person you should consider for one moment." Anne closed the cold cream box with a sigh. "When you do marry I want you to have some one who is worthy of you."

"Is that the reason you've never married?" Maisie asked innocently.

Anne flushed under the cold cream.

"That was the reason," she returned steadily.

"Haven't you ever been sorry?" Maisie persisted. She wished Anne had not hidden her face by turning out the gas—the voice, Anne's voice, told so little.

"I—I don't know that I have been. Good night, dear." And Maisie had nothing to do but answer obediently, "Good night, Anne."

But long after Maisie was asleep Anne lay awake thinking.

Sixteen years—what a long time that was! She was twenty that summer, just out of school, and she had a pink dress afloat with ruffles. One day when she had been wearing that dress she had met Dwight Marshall. He was a good deal like Dick Launt—big, clear eyed, ready to laugh. Like Dick, too, he was a plain workingman and had come from a long way off to find work in Hassell. It did not take Dwight long to fall in love with the pink dress and her, and it did not take her long to see it. He was her first beau, and straightway the world was made over for her.

But her mother was watch and ward. She had had to make many sacrifices in order to educate Anne, and she was worthy of the best. Mrs. Hall did not by any means consider Dwight Marshall the best, and she was determined that he should not have Anne. She appealed to Anne's pride and reason and after a time had the satisfaction of seeing her arguments prevail. Anne gave up her lover. He was hurt, disappointed, bitterly angry.

"This is your mother's doings," he said.

"No," Anne lied proudly, "it's mine. You aren't good enough for me."

"You'll be sorry for this some day," he returned. And that was his last word to her. She had never seen or heard from him since. She probably never would again. And now here was Maisie in the same boat in which she herself had been. But Maisie's heart would not be broken. Hers had not been. There had been times, indeed, when she was glad that she had not married Dwight. Maisie would come to feel the same way about Dick.

Anne scarcely slept all night.

"That cold cream makes you pale," Maisie said next morning. "What makes you use it, Anne? Are you afraid of wrinkles?" Anne winced, and Maisie went on wickedly. "Mrs. Warne says it doesn't make any difference how a woman looks if she isn't married or doesn't intend to be."

Mrs. Warne was the young matron who lived across the street. Because she and Maisie were very friendly and she was known openly to sympathize with Maisie's love affair Anne and her mother had not called upon her, though she had lived in the town almost a year. Now of a sudden Anne felt almost hatred for the gay little woman who seemed so happy in her married life and obviously had no need of cold cream or any other preparation for her charming face.

Anne was out of sorts all day. Her plotting class did badly, her head ached, and she tore her walking skirt by stepping upon it in her hurry to take a car. Tired and utterly forlorn, she was sitting in her room trying to repair the skirt when Maisie came running upstairs and entered panting with her haste.

"Oh, Anne," she gasped, "there's a man in the parlor waiting to see you! I told him you'd be right down."

A man in the parlor to see Anne was almost an unheard of thing. Yet she took three stitches deliberately.

"Aren't you going to fix your hair or—or anything?" Maisie demanded.

"Why should I?" Anne said. "It is only some one to see about lessons probably."

The parlor door was open, and she went in softly. The man was waiting with his expectant face turned toward her. She gave him one glance and turned as white as her linen collar.

"Dwight—Dwight Marshall!" she said. Then she seemed to remember nothing more until she found herself on the sofa, with him close beside her.

"You never expected to see me again, did you?" he demanded. "And I didn't expect you would, but ever since my little cousin, Maud Warne, has lived here she and Dave have been teasing me to come and make them a visit. So I made up my mind I'd come. And here I am. You don't know Maud, do you?"

"No," Anne said feebly, wishing she did.

"Maud told me you hadn't acted very neighborly. You should know Maud. She's one of the best little women that ever lived."

He had been talking rapidly. Now he stopped and drew a long breath.

"Do you remember the last time we saw each other? I was right mad that day. It had never occurred to me that I wasn't the equal of the best girl living—and you were that, too—until you said what you did. So I swore I'd make myself good enough—and make you sorry. But now that I've seen you I only want to make you glad, Anne. You see, I like you just as well as I ever did, though I didn't expect to. And if you like me"—

"Oh, Dwight," Anne sobbed, "it's I who am not good enough! I'm homely and old and soured and—and disagreeable and narrow minded—and you're worthy of some one better."

Maisie had been in bed three hours when Anne came up and woke her with a kiss.

"Why, Anne, you look real pretty," Maisie said, yawning. "But your hair is mussed up awfully."

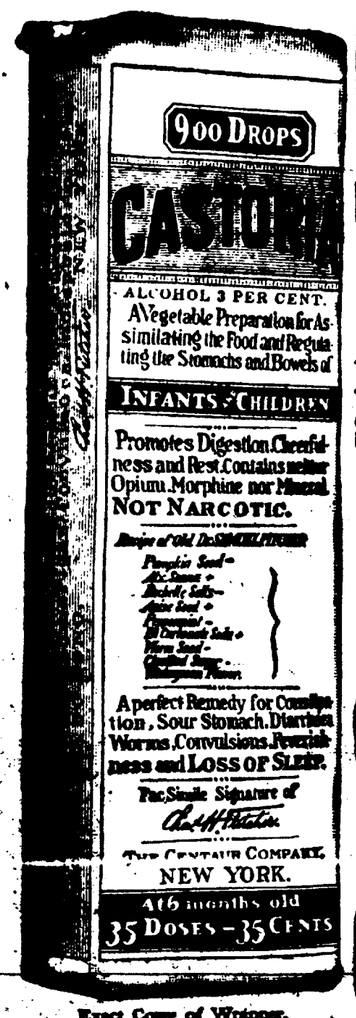
"Maisie," Anne said solemnly, sitting down upon the edge of the bed and taking hold of Maisie's hand in a most unusual way—"Maisie, I want to tell you something. I've been a fool for years and never found it out until tonight. And I don't mean you shall be the same kind of fool. That man who came tonight was the one I might have married sixteen years ago—and didn't. But I'm going to marry him now.

"And—and, Maisie, I've been talking to mother, and you can have Dick any time you are ready. Dick's all right. He—Dwight knows him; they come from the same place.

"I thought I could forget," Anne went on gently after Maisie's ecstasy of surprise and joy had somewhat subsided, "and I've tried hard for sixteen years, but when you really love there's no forgetting in this world. I've been loving Dwight right straight along, and the minute I saw him tonight I knew it. I've missed a good many years of happiness, and I meant to make you miss a good many years of happiness in the same way. It wasn't because I was wicked, dear, but because I didn't know. I do know now."

Maisie smiled wisely.

"I knew all the while," she said.



Flowers Once in Fifty-five Years.

Certain species of bamboos flower only once in about fifty-five years, and, strangely enough, all the trees in a locality flower about the same time. Those in Burma began flowering last year, and now they are all in blossom. The last time this species flowered was in 1859-60. They will now die, and those that spring from the seeds born of this flowering will take their places and will not flower until about 1970. They may flower sporadically at other times, but the seed does not mature, for the bamboo cannot fertilize itself.—New York World.

CRUMBLED TURKISH FORTS MADE GOOD

Repaired Walls Now Ready to Frown Upon Attacking Allies' Gunners

London, Mar. 3.—The conflict between the Turks and Anglo-French fleet for the possession of the Dardanelles may develop into a three-cornered fight, according to a report here, consisting of six Austro-German submarines, several torpedoboats and destroyers have left the Austrian naval base at Pola for the Aegean sea.

Ships in the Aegean sea reported by wireless to Salonika that heavy gunfire could be heard and it is believed that the bombardment of the Turkish forts on the inner side of the Dardanelles has been renewed by the international fleet.

The fleet is reported to have been divided into three parts. One of these is operating in the Dardanelles; another is stationed in the Gulf of Saros, throwing shells across the peninsula of Gallipoli and the third is standing off the entrance of the Dardanelles in the Aegean sea.

In addition to the 100,000 Turkish troops being massed for the defense of Constantinople all the available heavy guns have been rushed to the remaining forts. It is even said that some of the 11-inch guns were taken from the cruiser Goeben for use against the allied fleet. Guns have also been moved southward from the forts around Adrianople and from the Tohatalja forts.

The lull in the bombardment, caused by storms, has been utilized by the Turks, who are working feverishly to strengthen in every way the forts that remain intact.

The town of Yeni-Cheir has been set on fire by shells and destroyed.

A news agency dispatch from Athens states that the batteries of Kalid Bahr and Fort Sultania, guarding the narrowest part of the Dardanelles, have been silenced, but this is not officially confirmed.

It is said that the losses of the British and French in killed and wounded are less than 600, despite the fierceness of the fire to which the allied fleet was subjected.

A Constantinople dispatch denies that the success of the allied fleet in enforcing an entrance to the Dardanelles has compelled a retirement of the Turkish army of invasion.

FRENCH AND ENGLISH GUNS VIE WITH KRUPPS

By Franklin P. Merrick

Paris, Mar. 3.—A stubborn battle is raging over a thirty-mile front in the Champagne district, where the French and Germans are struggling for the possession of strategic positions. Both sides have lost heavily in that region and at some points both sides claim victory. The French official dispatches state that the French troops have captured a number of German artillery supports as well as trenches and varricades constructed of fallen trees and bags of earth.

The feature of the fighting along the north end of the battle is the heavy artillery fire. The French and British are now on equal terms with the Germans in the matter of big guns and the German artillery is kept on the move from position to position avoiding the accurate fire of the allies' cannon.

Stormy weather continues and at some points the soldiers are lying in trenches that are nearly half full of water. This has led to a great increase in the cases of rheumatism and pneumonia in the hospitals.

A severe snow storm is raging over the Vosges. At some places the snow is so thick that the soldiers fight without seeing each other.

COSSACKS IN RELENTLESS PURSUIT OF GERMAN TROOPS

By Francis Lavelle Murray

Petrograd, Mar. 3.—A formidable bombardment of the Polish city of Ossodiec has been commenced by Field Marshal Von Hindenburg's army lying on the Bobr river. According to semi-official advices the Germans are expending a vast amount of shells in cannonading at Ossowiec in revenge for their defeat by the Russians at Przasnysz.

In the Carpathians the attmept of the Austrian forces to pierce the Russian front near Lupkow and thus relieve Przemyl, has ended in failure. The Austrians have suffered severe losses in that region and part of the army has been compelled to retire. Semi-official information relating to operations in Galicia says: "The defeat of the Austrian attacks in the Carpathians was the result of the inferior fighting quality of the Austrian troops. The Austrians are incapable o fattacking in open order and have tried to break our lines by advancing in solid masses which were mowed down. In Eastern Galicia the situation is developing in accordance with our plans and anticipations."

The German forces that were defeated at Przasnysz are still retreating, hotly pursued by the Russian Cossacks. The Russians are inflicting heavy losses upon the German rear guard by cutting off and annihilating detachments of soldiers. The German transportation system broke down frequently despite the ostentations preparations they had made. The Germans lost morep risoners in the Przanysz battle than in any other engagement on the Russian front. The German defeat there will probably compel a retirement along a great part of the line. Already the Germans are on the defensive along most of the front.

The Russians are carrying on a vigorous offensive between the niemen and Vistula rivers.

NO ADDITION TO BUILDING TO BE MADE

W. H. Spanswick makes a statement contradictory of published reports, which were in effect that, in order to care for increased business an addition to the knitting mills plant in Erie st. is proposed. The Evening Times is informed by Mr. Spanswick that the mill property is not all utilized; that sufficient space remains to take care of a lot more business than is at present manufactured; and further, that instead of building an addition to provide room for a bleaching department, it is the intent of the firm to continue sending to establishments out of this city all material for bleaching, for the reason that it is cheaper to follow this policy than to undertake to perform the work in Fulton.

YOURSELF

By Dr. Frank Crane

Your greatest enemy is yourself.

The only person who can drag you down into drunkenness, thievery, or uncleanness is yourself.

It is the fashion to talk much maudlin self-pity, and to blame environment, heredity, temperament, fate, and our fellow creatures for the evils that happen to you.

No real calamity ever crushed you that did not enter the door you unlocked yourself.

All hell could not make you despair, except yourself joined in.

Every stone in the edifice of your character was laid by your own hands.

A Patriotic Movement

The organizers of the American Legion are doing a genuinely patriotic work. They are getting together a volunteer body of first reserves for national defence. The country sadly needs a real army reserve. The one it now has consists of sixteen men. Representative Gardner, after much searching, has just laid hands on eight of them and invited them to a dinner in Washington.

How are we to get adequate army reserves? President Wilson takes no interest in measures to overcome our military deficiencies. He adhered in his mesage to Congress last December to the old take-it-easy doctrine that our chief dependence in war must be on a "citizenry trained and accustomed to arms." That means, appartently on citizens who in their youth used to shoot game birds and small animals with fowling pieces. In the earlier days they might have shot with rifles at big game or Indians. But, as Secretary Garrison has justly pointed out, modern war allows no time for improvising mere citizenry into an army. Six months at least are required to train men for fighting under modern conditions, and in cases of invasion the maximum of harm which a foreign army could do to the United States would probably be done before any of our raw levies could be brought into action.

Mr. Wilson's laissez faire attitude has made impossible in this Congress any legislation strengthening the national defence. Even the modest requests of Secretary Garrison for a stronger first line have been ignored. So far as aid from this administration is concerned, the country is doomed to get along without an adequate mobile force, without a reserve of regulars and without satisfactory provision for supplying an army called into existence in an emergency.

Until Mr. Wilson goes out of office we must look largely to patriotic zeal in private life to better our military situation. The American Legion will bring into its organization 250,000 men who are either former soldiers or have been trained in civil occupations which fit them to serve in various auxiliary corps of an army. It will be a volunteer reserve maintained at its own cost—an invaluable free-will contribution to the cause of national defence. It is lucky for the country that private spirit is willing to assume a duty which the government shamefully neglects.—Tribune, N. Y.

RICE & HUTCHINS BUILDING BURNED

Boston, Mar. 3.—One fireman was injured by falling from a ladder today when fire destroped the old Rice and Hutchins building. The loss was $250,000.

So great was the flood of water poured into the building that for a time it was feared that the filling about the walsl about the completed section of the new Summer street subway would be washed out. Extra gangs of men built dams about the openings to keep out the water.

DIED TO SAVE HIS COMRADES

Heroic Act of a Soldier to Retrieve a Failure.

When the Spanish-American war came on I hadn't seen any fighting since the big scuffle that ended in 1865. I raised a company to go to Cuba, and fortunately my regiment wasn't left behind when the fighting force went to Santiago.

At our first fight in Cuba nearly all the enlisted men in my company were raw recruits. There was a good deal of wavering, and some of the boys—they were mostly nothing more than boys—got away to the rear in spite of my efforts to hold them. Knowing that I was watching them, they all tried to stand up to the racket, but it was pretty hard for some of them, and they dropped out one by one. There was one young fellow, Raymond—he couldn't have been more than nineteen—a refined, delicately made chap, more like a musician, an artist or a poet than a soldier—who, it was plain, had more trouble to keep his legs from carrying him away than the rest. He stood his ground till after the skulkers had been weeded out, when a volley fired directly in our faces was too much for him, and he fled ingloriously.

After awhile most of those who had dropped out returned to the ranks, among the first Raymond. But by this time the fighting was about over and they had no opportunity to retrieve themselves. I was easy with them, knowing that they had been taking their initiation and would do better next time. I noticed that Raymond was very badly cut up at his failure and, taking occasion to speak to him about something, spoke with especial kindliness. But as time passed, while the others did not seem to feel their disgrace very keenly, Raymond grew more morbid over his. I was sure at the next fight he would redeem himself and feel better about it.

We happened to miss the fighting for some time, being held in reserve, but the next time we were called on we got into a terrible hole. My company was sent one night to reconnoiter, and the first thing we knew we found ourselves cut off. I called for volunteers to go in different directions and find from which direction the enemy were coming to attack us, at the same time looking out for an avenue of escape. Among the first to step to the front was Raymond. I sent him out with five others, all in different directions. We were lying low in some bushes, and I whispered their instructions. They were expected to crawl on their hands and knees and if they met an enemy were to give us warning if possible.

I waited ten or fifteen minutes—it seemed two hours—and, not hearing anything from my scouts, started out myself to investigate. Feeling solicitude in the matter of the direction Raymond had gone, distrusting his courage and regarding his route the most probable on which to find the enemy, I went after him. I half expected to find him hiding within a short distance from us, but I crawled a hundred yards without seeing or hearing anything of him or anybody else. There was a dead silence, a silence that made me creep. I would much rather have heard the tramp of men coming for us, for I knew they were around us and that they expected to bag us. Were they waiting to fill some gap or did they not know exactly where we were?

Give me plenty of noise and I am in my element. But I never liked silence, especially in the dark, and silence in the dark, with an enemy feeling for you, is hard on most men. But I was in command of a company of men, and the responsibility of getting them out of a trap saved me. I dreaded every moment to hear a turmoil behind me and know that my men were being butchered. Nevertheless, I felt more interest in the boy I was following than the company. I was afraid he would get hurt. Singular, isn't it, that I should have had my sympathies concentrated on one human of nearly a hundred? Perhaps if he had been a brawny fellow I wouldn't have thought anything about him.

Well, I kept on, pausing now and again to listen, straining my ears to catch the slightest sound, but everything was still. Once I fancied I heard the click of a rifle, but it was only an insect. I did hear the rumble of a caisson, but it was in the distance. Then there was a faint indication as if some animal was passing through a bit of long grass a short distance ahead of me. I heard a click—it was a sure enough click this time—followed by a scuffle, at the end of which came the words in Spanish, "Make the slightest noise and you are a dead man!"

A moment—rather an eternity—passed; then I heard Raymond's voice ring out, "They're coming!"

A shot, a groan, then the Spaniards dashed forward. I had a matter of eighty yards the start of them, and when I reached my men found them in retreat. One of the scouts had come in, having found a path the Spaniards had neglected to close, and we got safely into our lines.

Do you call that the courage of a brute? I call it the courage of a divine instinct. It was the triumph of the spiritual over the animal. I don't consider it a sacrifice. It wasn't that; it was pride—the pride of a soldier. The man who possessed it was of that fine type which cannot brook disgrace. He was his own critic, his own judge, and he would rather kill himself by running the Guarding Against Colds.

If you find that you catch cold very easily when you are tired or a bit run down you should take extra care of yourself at such times. Do not recklessly expose yourself when you are fatigued. It is far wiser to relinquish any engagements you have made for the evening if you come home all tired out. It is better to give up everything, take a hot bath and go to bed early for a long night's sleep when you are feeling physically exhausted. Going out for a good time when you are in this condition only leaves you open to infection or to chill.

TWO TERM PRESIDENTS.

Only Six Served the Full Time Twice in Succession.

The presidents who served two consecutive terms were George Washington of Virginia, Thomas Jefferson of Virginia, James Madison of Virginia, James Monroe of Virginia, Andrew Jackson of Tennessee and Ulysses S. Grant of Illinois.

The presidents of the United States who have been elected twice in succession, but who did not complete their second term because of assassination, were Abraham Lincoln of Illinois and William McKinley of Ohio.

The president who was twice elected, but not in immediate succession, was Grover Cleveland of New York.

The presidents who have been candidates to succeed themselves, but who failed of re-election, were John Adams of Massachusetts, John Quincy Adams of Massachusetts, Martin Van Buren of New York, Benjamin Harrison of Indiana, Theodore Roosevelt of New York and William Howard Taft of Ohio. Several single term presidents not among those already named have desired to succeed themselves, but failed of nomination.

Among the double term presidents who, before entering the presidential office or during their first term either inveighed or argued or remonstrated against a second term, but who accepted such term, were George Washington, Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson. Madison and Monroe avowed their willingness, or their desire, for a second term, and the same may be said of Lincoln, Grant, Harrison, Cleveland, McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft. —Washington Star.

Renewing a Rose.

To renew the charms of a shabby artificial rose, trim all the edges of the petals with sharp scissors, and if there are green leaves, trim those as well.

Then straighten bent wires, press the fresh heart of the rose open so that it has a full blown look and place the flower at the left bust of a low evening bodice in some thin material.

Now, the corsage rose costs from $2.50 up to anything, but with careful pruning a twenty-five cent bargain may burst upon the eye like nature's own.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE CAMPAIGN

Conducted by J. H. BRADDOCK

J. H. Braddock, field secretary of the American City Bureau of New York, has arrived in Fulton to begin work with the officers and directors of the Chamber of Commerce for enlarging the facilities of this organization. Arrangements were at once made by A. W. Wiltsie, of the special membership committee, for offices in the part of the Telephone Building formerly occupied by the First National Bank. J. R. Sullivan installed furniture, L. R. Owens provided a telephone, John J. Jordan furnished luminous Mazda lights; and activity now reigns at the new offices of the Chamber.

When asked his first impressions of Fulton, Mr. Braddock was loud in his praise of the apearance of the business part of the city. He was especially impressed with the foresight of our city fathers in acquiring the water front along First street and providing for a beautiful expansion of the business section.

Knowing Fulton

"The first impression," he said, "is that Fulton has attractions as a city in which to live and do business that would be the envy of many a larger city if these attarctions were but known to the world at large. The great handicap thus far, I believe, lies in the lack of publicity relative to the advantages which Fulton possesses.

"Take my own case for example. For a number of years I have been engaged, first as a staff member of the New York Bureau of Municipal Research and now as an officer of the American City Bureau, in visiting the cities of the United States and studying their civic advantages and administrative needs. Yet I never had brought to my attention the physical attractiveness of Fulton as indicated in the little section which I have thus far been able to visit.

"You see," continued Mr. Braddock, "most cities require not only the building up of a Chamber of Commerce, but after that there remains the more important task of putting the city upon such a plane of attractiveness that the public at large, in speaking or writing about the city, discuss it primarily from the standpoint of these advantanges.

"Now in Fulton the problem is simpler; it is only half a problem. As soon as the Chamber of Commerce has its membership enlarged and a sufficient income assured, with a program of work and adequate committees, it will be possible to plunge directly into the work of publicizing Fulton as a city high in attainments civic, industrial, financial and economic."

Speakers of Reputation

E. J. Penfield, president of the Chamber of Commerce, is one of those who sees perhaps most clearly the possibilities for Fulton through the enlarged organization. He looks not only for the physical improvement of the city, but for an increasing respect upon the part of our citizens toward matters of public welfare; and he foresees a wholesome effect upon those who, through the present movement, grasp the significance of whole-hearted co-operation for everything pertainging to the progress of the city.

When asked to outline some of the definite ways in which it is hoped to carry out the present undertaking, President Penefield said:

"The movement for enlarging the facilities of the Chamber of Commerce will be divorced from the usual hoorah, rah-rah booster and revival methods whose impetus lasts only with its emotional enthusiasm, whose death is certain when the emotional cause is removed, and which, when dead, is dead past resurrecting.

"Luncheons and meetings will be held for local business and professional men, upon which occasions speakers of national reputation will point out the opportunities for Fulton to attain her rightful place among the cities of the world.

"A scientific study is being made as to individuals and firms who ought to be members of the Chamber of Commerce. When this study is completed a systematic effort will be made to bring before each of these the opportunities of membership. In accomplishing this, invaluable work will be done by the present members of the Chamber.

Will Want Suggestions

"Back of every detail will be a special membership committee, man of weight and influence, possessed of skill, strategy, knowledge of salesmenship, human nature, and of the prospective members.

"Through the newspapers and meetings an opportunity will be given to answer two questions: First, what do you suggest as an immediate step to be taken by the Chamber of Commerce for the benefit of your line of business? Second, what do you suggest as the most important work to be undertaken at once for the good of the city at large?

"When the campaign is over the answers to these questions will be tabulated and those popularly demanded will be made into a program of work. This program will express the intelligent collective wish of the membership and will serve as a comprehensive platform to which committees, directors and executive staff can be held accountable.

"The entire campaign will be an example of effective co-operation. Members of the Chamber of Commerce will work together to obtain through complete team work the membership which the city of Fulton deserves. Throughout the campaign the membership committee will have the benefit of the best present day practices in securing new members. But primarily the campaign will succeed only to the extent to which the present membership pulls together as one great force for upbuilding the organization and securing the benefit of a well financed Chamber of Commerce."

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Berlin, via Amsterdam, Mar. 4—All theatres in Berlin will be closed April 1 by the government. Many theatrical managers have protested.

Paris, Mar. 4.—Counter attacks made by the Germans in the Champagne region were repulsed in an official statement issued by the war office this afternoon. The statement says that the Germans captured a trench and also that the German bombardment of Rheims continues.

Copenhagen, Mar. 4.—German military and naval critics in Berlin consider the attempt of the allied British-French fleet to penetrate the Dardanelles impossible of success, according to dispatches from the German capital today.

Petrograd, Mar. 4.—The twenty-sixth Austrian division has been routed in the region of Stanislau, it is officially announced today.

Berlin, via Amsterdam, Mar. 4.—Major General Ludwig Von Estorf was killed in Russia while at the head of his brigade.

Cettinje, Mar. 4.—Two Austrian aeroplanes flew over the Montenegrin port of Antibari yesterday and threw six bombs. Four of them fell near the villa belonging to the Crown Prince.

POWERS EXPECTED TO MODIFY ORDERS RESPECTING MINES

Washington Believes Their Use Will Be Confined to Waters of Warring Countries

Washington, Mar. 4.—Restriction of the use of machines to those in the waters of a belligerent purely for purposes of defense, today confidently was expected by administration officials to result from the negotiations in connection with Germany's war zone decree.

The official text of the latest note from Germany was much more pleasing to official Washington than any recent document, for it had a tone of acquiescence in it.

As a consequence the administration was more optimistic than ever so far as Germany is concerned and today it was looking to Great Britain for the next move. There was high hope in various quarters that with Germany's conciliatory note in hand the British government might be induced to make concessions also. It was the view of a number of administration officials that England's drastic action in declaring, in effect a complete blockade of Germany, was determined upon at a time when no other measure appeared to be available, and that the British government now might be willing to modify the order provided some arrangement might be reached with Germany through the United States concerning the submarine warfare. The matter of the use of foreign flags by merchant ships is by no means settled, it was stated. Germany's last communication makes a specific exception of merchant ships flying fictitious flags. In her promises to refrain from submarines attacks on vessels she lays stress on the flying of their nations' flags.

APPROPRIATION BILLS SIGNED

Congress Adjourned at Noon Today; Agricultural Bill Is Signed By President

Washington, Mar. 4.—The 63d Congress is at an end. The Senate adjourned at 12.04 today after disposing of all appropriation bilsl except that of the postoffice department, and after passing a wide variety of minor legislation in the last hours of the session. The house adjourned at 12.20 after following an unsuccessful attempt to adopt the conference report of the Indian appropriation bill. Prior to this the House had passed a resolution continuing the Indian and postoffice bills or last year in anicipation of the failure of the regular supply bill. Prior to the adoption of the continuing resolution for the postoffice and Indian bills today's work in the Senate was devoted to the Indian bill filibuster on the part of Senator Gronnad of North Dakota, and the confirmation both in open Senate and a brief executive session of a number of nominations. The feature of the postoffice continuing resolution was for protecting the pay of the rural mail carriers. Senator Gallinger presented the usual thanks of the Senate to which Mr. Marshall responded briefly before the Senate adjourned.

MAIL CARRIERS GET INCREASED SALARIES

Washington, Ma. 4.—Anticipating the failure of the postoffice and Indian bills in the Senate, the House adopted joint resolutions continuing for another fiscal year the current appropriations for the postoffice department and the Indian bureau. This action was necessary to prevent the calling an extra session for the supply bills.

The resolution continuing the postoffice bill containing two legislative provisions, one for the protection from demotion of city carriers and the other fixing the rate of pay of rural mail carriers at $1200 and less, according to routes.

GAS KILLED 4 PERSONS

Church Member Says He Is Reminded of a Story of a Yellow Dog

That interest in the contest of endurance between "Observer" on the one hand, "Fair Play," et al, on the other, may not lag, one of the welcome committeemen of the accused city church has the following statement to make:

Editor Times:

I suppose you are aware that it doesn't pay to keep stirring up a pole cat, but your "Observer" man does. As Old Uncle Abe Lincoln used to say, he reminds me of a story.

A circuit court judge in traveling over his circuit, used to stop at a certain hotel. At the dinner table a young lawyer, of great assurance, would occasionally brow-beat the judge with questions and criticisms as to his methods.

One day, after the young lawyer had left the diningroom, a waiter turned to the judge and said, "Judge, why don't you squelch that little whipper-snapper of a lawyer? The judge told him that a widow down his way had a little yellow dog that would sit on the front porch, look up at the moon, and bark, bark, bark, all night long; but the moon kept right on.

Half Hundred Heaviest Ships Comprise Squadron About to Reduce Ottoman Forts in Dardanelles

By Herbert Temple

London, Mar. 4.—Great Britain has landed her first troops for the land attack upon Constantinople. The military expedition not only relieves the sailors and marines who were previously put ashore to aid the warships in their campaign against the Dardanelles forts, but provides a mobile force for the actual land operations by which the taking of Turkey in Europe from the Sultan is expected to be accomplished.

The new force comprises French troops from Morocco, Canadians, Senigalese, native Egyptian trops in small quantity and Australians. It is presumed that the major portion of this force was quickly transferred from gypt when the danger of a Turkish invasion by way of the Suez canal vanished.

The lighthouse keeper at Cape Matapan reports that he saw ten gray, two-masted, single funnelled steamers, undobtedly transports, proceeding eastward. This is supposed to be a second body of invading rtoops.

With the arrival of the land forces it is expected that th advance in the straits will be pushed more rapidly. It was obviously impossible for the fleet to make any material progress until the land forces had been disposed to meet the Turks, who had been mobilized in great strength.

The military forces are being placed in osition on both sides of the straits, the first landing having been made on the Asiatic side.

A dispatch from Athens says that the allies have a total of 52 warships on the scene. Five of them have entered the straits this movement was going on four battleships began bombarding the Turkish positions fronting on the Gulf of Saros, which is separated from the Dardanelles by the Gallipoli peninsula.

The forts of Dardanus, Hamadieh and Chemerlik, on the Asiatic side of the inside Dardanelles, have been silenced by the guns of the fleet.

The British battleships are completely outranging the forts, the guns of which are unable to reply effectively to the fire of the warships' guns.

A Constantinople dispatch says that the further advance of the fleet seems to be impossible owing to the chain of mines and the forts. The Turks are welcoming an attack by land, says the dispatch, and have gathered a strong army composed of their best troops.

It is reported that three submarines which Turkey received overland from Germany have not as yet been put together. The Turkish fleet has not cut any figure in the operations as yet and is not expected to do so because of the vast difference in the range and power of the guns carried by the Sultan's ships and those carried by the allies.

PRESIDENT SIGNS NEUTRALITY BILL

Resolution Passed In Closing Hours Gives Executive Power to Act As Necessity Demands

Washington, Mar. 4.—President Wilson today in the presence of the members of his cabinet and a large group of Senators affixed his signature to the neutrality resolution giving him increased power in handling the war situation during the recess of Congress.

The President also signed a large number of routine measures. He signed all the appropriation bills before him, with the exception of the Indian and postoffice bills.

Washington.—The Senate passed the revised reports on the Indian bill today.

Washington.—The Senate at 12.04 adjourned sine die and the House took similar action at 12.20.

ALLIES TAKING COURAGE, IS THEIR ADMISSION

Paris, Mar. 4.—Severe fighting continues today between the Germans and the allies in the Argonne. After months of fighting in that region the allies now believe, according to official statements issued by the War Office, have now gained the ascendency and are ready to take the offensive against the invaders who have been worn out. Artillery duels continue unabated from the coast to the Aisne and it appears the Germans are preparing to again bombard Rheims. In the Champagne district the allies are making good progress, holding their own and in some instances making gains.

"JITNEYS"

All of a sudden, "jitneys!"—a new word to match a new phenomenon.

The word began to reach Eastern readers late in January. We read in Commerce and Finance that the word "jitney" comes from the slang of the street Arab, who has a name for every coin. A "meg" is a cent, a "jit," or "jitney," is a nickel, a "dimmo" a dime, and a "cute" a quarter. So Jitney primarily means five cents. In current usage it means a motor car that travels a regular route, and that in competition with the street cars carries passengers for five cents.

Jitneys have been a first-page topic in Western newspapers for some time. It seems that a Kansas City man went to Texas, and got back home on January 17th. The next day the Kansas City Star printed his report that in Texas cities--Fort Worth, Dallas, Houston, Galveston, and others —motor cars were running in competition with the street cars. That seemed to Kansas City a good idea, and jitneys immediately appeared in the town.

To start a jitney, all you have to do is to have a motor car, know how to run it, get a license to carry passengers, and have a route assigned you. On January 26th, there was 115 jitneys running nimbly in Kansas City, and there were loud cries for more. In the rush hours big vans were running crowded in the longer routes.

This gives an idea of the speed at which this interesting movement is going. It has spread up and down the Pacific coast. In San Francisco last month there were 300 jitneys, in the trans-bay cities 450, in Los Angeles 1,050, in Portland, Oregon, 75, in Seattle 500. In those five centres there were altogether 2,375; they were taking in $19,000 a day, and their number was increasing.

San Francisco expects a large and prompt accession of two-story motor busses. The prediction is made that the jitneys, having demonstrated the ability of motor cars to beat street cars in their business, will presently disappear, and the street cars with them, and be succeeded by motor express cars built especially for city passenger traffic.

That may be, but for the moment the jitneys have the field. Whether they can afford in the long run to do what they are doing at the rate they charge is still to be discovered; but for the moment they are doing it with a vim; doing it on "the coast," in Texas, Missouri, Iowa, and elsewhere in the constituency in this state, by the and will be doing it, no doubt, everywhere in less time than it takes to count the days.

The world seems to pattern more and more after the imagined world of Mr. H. G. Wells. Of course the motor car is still an infant, but an infant that is getting pretty well known. Its future is unmeasured and immeasurable. In the use of motor busses our cities are far behind the cities of Europe, which have never taken so kindly to trolley cars as we have.

BIG MEN

By J. H. BRADDOCK

A hustling, conservative citizenship is bound to make a city leap forward. No city moves simply because it is a city. The power of propulsion depends upon the genius of her people. If there is an effective get-together spirit, if behind that get-together spirit, there is abundant energy and abundant enterprise, that city is bound to progress.

But community progress is two-sided in its causes. The public agencies, as represented by the municipal government, form one side; the people at large are the other side. The moment effective team-work is established between those parts, splendid results are certain. In proportion to the absence of that necessary team-work, so will be the degree of sluggishness in the city development.

That is why every community should pray for big men. That is why the community should listen to its big men. Element, small in mental calibre, are the only ones who labor to prevent this team-work. Elements, on the other hand, large in calibre, are the ones who strive to make the team-work a reality. The question is: Which shall prevail? Is the city to be clogged by its little men, or is it to be advanced and improved by its big men?

Much depends upon the attitude of the public. If the people want the city authorities to produce splendid results, the people at large must get behind the city authorities. It is a difficult task to push the city forward if a portion of the citizenship tries to block the progress. Co-operation in municipal matters is just as important as money.

Frogs vs. Frogs' Legs

And why should not the bullfrog be protected, like the rest of our songsters? Representative Tuttle of Caribou, Me., is making a modest, if timely, request in asking the Legislature of his state to save the marshes of Aroostook from the brooding silence that oppresses the explorer in northern latitudes. He would conserve for the continued glory of his famous county that spring chorus which interprets the moonlight or the soft nocturnal shower, which mocks the bleak Canadian winds with its promise of may-flowers and blueberries and a plentiful potato crop. Mr. Tuttle has the soul of an artist, the heart of a nature lover, the brain of an advanced thinker.

He is also a true sportsman. The frog though possessing with the thrush and the wren a common reptilian ancestry, has neither wings nor a distrustful disposition. It may be scooped up in dip nets for the metropolitan market. Mr. Tuttle, used as a tousleheaded, begallussed boy to the alder pole and the hook and bit of red flannel, resents the introduction of wholesale slaughter. And every boy who has ever leaned over a shady run in the heat of midday to tickle with his dangling flannel bait the inviting green nose of a bandylegged "bull" will side with him.

Yes, by the shades of Aristophanes, let us preserve our vernal concerts and the "day of real sport."—Tribune, N. Y.

Elihu Root, Statesman

Elihu Root's term in the United States Senate ends today. His retirement will be deeply regretted by the Senate and by the country. The public service too rarely attracts men of Mr. Root's calibre. In his career in Washington he has stood out from the mass of politicians, legislators and administrators. In every post which he has held he has demonstrated superior capacity and judgment.

As Secretary of War, under President McKinley, he reorganized the army and brought our military system into touch with modern ideas. As Secretary of State under President Roosevelt he conducted the country's foreign relations with the utmost suavity and distinction. In the Senate, fortified by his valuable experience in the Cabinet, he became at once a natural leader. Colonel Roosevelt said of him some years ago that he was the ablest man then in public life. In his aptitude and experience he recalls the practised statesman of the early days of the republic—the stateman of the type of James Madison, Albert Gallatin and John Quincy Adams.

Congress and the country lose much in the retirement of such a man from national politics. His own state also suffers in so far as the maintenance of its influence in national affairs is concerned. But New Yorkers have the consolation that Mr. Root will continue to give them his invaluable services in the field of state politics. He will have the leading part in the remaking of the state constitution next summer. There may be other tasks which he will accept before he rounds out his political career. At any rate, New Yorkers can always count on him as a disinterested adviser, ready to give them the benefit of his mellowed experience and ripened statesmanship. May we long enjoy the privilege!—Tribune, N. Y.

TAX RAISING IN POOR BELGIUM

Thousands Live on Half-Rations and Food Is Doled Out Sparingly

By LEONARD SPRAY

On the Dutch Frontier, Mar. 4.—"It is next door to hell." That is a strong phrase, but it came from the lips of an American congressman. He used it to sum up the condition of things "over there"—in the stricken land of Belgium. He has spent ten days in the towns and villages of Belgium and northern France.

"There are more people hungry in Belgium," he continued, "than the charitable world knows of.

"I believe there are nearly 2,000,000 people in Belgium who are absolutely dependent upon the bounty of the outside world. The people in the larger cities are receiving enough food to keep body and soul together. It is in the smaller and out-of-the-way places that the suffering and want are more acute. There are hamlets where hunger reigns.

"Here is a case, typical of many, of one family in a little Belgian village. They owned a bit of land. In places where the shells had fallen there were what we call, in Kansas, "hog wallows." The farmhouse had been demolished and the stables and other out-buildings levelled to the ground. The father got together a few boards and made a sort of roof over what had been the cellar of the farmhouse. In this cave the whole family lives. A baby has been born there. Their whole means of livlihood are gone, and for food they have to depend on gifts that come their way."

"Here is how a Dutchman just returned from an errand of mercy put it to me:

'You cannot actually say that such-and-such a man, woman or child has died of starvation. But that is what it comes to in the effect. For months hundreds of thousands have not been able to earn anything. They are dependent on charity. Sometimes they get food, and then they have to go without for a spell or else live on half-rations. It is not starvation, but very often semi-statvation. What that means is that gradually their strength is sapped; then their vitally dwindles, and they fall an easy prey to the first disease that comes their way."

It must be remembered that charitable or publicity administered food relief generally and inevitably takes the forms of bread and soup. These served well in the earlier days, when the population was strong and vigorous. But a prolonged course of such a diet does little more than keep body and soul together. It lacks other elements that are necessary to the maintenance of health.

"There is a little village called Sarinnes, not far from Dinant. My informant went there a few days ago, and found Sarinnes nothing but blackened ruins.

What had become of the five or six hundred inhabitants? Well, he discovered them all living in the chateau and adjoining outhouses. This residence had been spared, and its owners, titled gentlemen, had gathered together the little flocks of homeless people. There they are, crowded together, most of them, of course, with no bed to sleep on. Occasionally a relief ship comes up the Meuse, but when another may arrive is uncertain, and so the food has to be doled out as sparingly as in a besieged fortress.

Ghent is being drained of its money by the fines imposed by the Germans. Moreover, it had to loan gold from its resources to other municipalities, whose coffers were empty, in order that they might pay the enormous war levies.

Ordinary taxes have risen terribly, and others have had to be invented. The latest resources is a heavy tax on bachelors. Another new form of revenue-raising is a tax on furniture.

The complexion of the M. W. A. membership contest changed last night, Hyde's team getting seven against Middleton's ten new members. This result makes a total to date of 30 to 29 in favor of Captain Middleton, and a grand total of new members secured by the lodge of 59.

In the pool contest Ives gained last night 28 points. The standing follows: John Goss 50 vs. Jay Guile 16; Rube Parise 44 vs. G. Gradala 50.

REPLIES TO OBSERVER

ANOTHER LETTER

Dear Observer:

The Evening Times is supplying a long felt want in aiding us (the dear public) to exchange opinions of opposite nature. This will either make or break us, as far as our opinions are concerned, won't it?

Now in reply to yours of yesterday: You resented my whacking you upon your most vulnerable spot, pride, by saying you commented as "a child with a half-grown idea." You evidently didn't understand. To explain:

It has come under my observation that the person who attends divine worship for the exclusive reason that he wishes to get a message straight from the pulpit that he himself may go forth to be of greater service to his fellow creatures, is so busy getting that inspiration that he expects no demonstration on his presence in the church. Self immolation is the first step in real service to humanity. It is to be remembered Christ, the most perfect type of citizen, was not appreciated for his presence in the holy temples yet He complained not, but continued in His good works.

Better far, good brother, that you attend divine worship in spite of "chills," and, in the glow of your own compassion for humanity, do also the good works of which you have learned.

In other words, the primal service of the church is to aid in spiritual growth, and not to magnify man's shortcomings. And, although every member of the congregation failed, except you, to receive the message of good will, you and your works alone would compensate richly for the building of several churches and [illegible] past, present or further [illegible] anyone has received or may [illegible]

Shall I have the pleasure of exchanging further ideas with you on this topic?

CARROLL PUT IT ALL OVER EVANS

Caused Steve's Arrest on Charge of Stealing An Automobile

By FRANK G. MENKE

"I'll get even with that guy Steve Evans if it takes me ten years."

The articulator is Dick Carroll, business manager of the Brooklyn Federals and the giant referred to is Steve Evans, outfielder of the Brooklyn Feds, one time of the St. Louis Cardinals, and now as in the past, the greatest comedian in baseball.

"What's the latest Evans stunt?" we inquired.

"Why, that boob had me pinched in Cleveland and I came near to spending a night in jail," answered Carroll. "As it was I missed a train and an important business appointment."

"Arrested? On what charge?"

"Stealing my own automobile," answered Carroll.

"Sounds interesting. Trot out the details, please," we asked.

"Well, Evans and I both live in Cleveland during the winter but my automobile is licensed in New York. The number, 'New York 5817D.' Some weeks ago I had to go to New York and started for the railroad station in my car with my wife. As we neared the business section I was held up by a traffic blockade. While stalled a policeman came up, squinted at the number on my car, consulted a little note book he had and placing his hand on my shoulder said:

"'I got yez at last, hey.' "What for?" I asked, as soon as I had recovered from my first surprise."

"'For stealing that car,' was the answer.

"I tried to tell him that I owned the car but he wouldn't listen.

"'Yez can tell that to the desk sergant,' he said, climbing aboard. 'Drive your car to the station house.'

"There being nothing else to do I drove the car—and the policeman—to the jail.

"This policeman accuses me of having a stolen auto in my possession. He has made an error. I told the desk sergeant. "This auto never was stolen.' It's mine."

"'Is that so,' said the sergeant, with infinite sarcasm.

"Never stolen, hey? We'll take a squint.' He pushed the records at me and they showed that a 'Mr. Carroll of Buffalo, owning car N.Y. 5817D' had reported that his car was stolen and probably taken to Cleveland.

"Guess I'll have to lock you up,' said the sergeant, whereupon the policeman grabbed my arm and started to lead me to the bullpen.

"Just as the doors to the corridor leading to the bullpen were being opened I saw one of the police court reporters that I knew passing through the hall. I yelled at him.

"The reporter heard me, turned around and bustled toward us to see what it was all about.

"Hey, what's the matter, Dick?" he asked. When he called me Dick the policeman who was leading me into the cell halted. The desk sergeant looked interested.

"'Do you know that fellow?' asked the sergeant, pointing at me.

"Sure; I used to play ball with him eight or ten years ago. He's Dick Carroll."

"'Officer release the gentleman,' ordered the sergeant and the cop let loose.

"'How did you happen to get this report of a stolen auto?" I asked the sergeant after the reporter had introduced us and full explanation had been made.

"Fellow phoned in the other night," said the sergeant, consulting the records. Said he was 'Mr. Carrol from Buffalo' and that his automobile had been stolen. He described your car in detail and also gave us the number.

"And later," we asked.

"Well, later, I discovered that the 'Mr. Carroll of Buffalo who did the telephoning was none other than Steve Evans. And you can take it from me now that Mister Steve Evans is going to suffer for that little joke of his that made me miss a train and a business appointment and nearly landed me in a bull-pen."

About Sports Generally

By Frank G. Menke

The distance of the eight-oared varsity races in the college regattas will not be shortened. It stands at four miles and will continue to stand at four miles because a lot of bull headed rowing euthorities are against the plan to reduce the course to three miles.

There is an agitation on now among the sane and humane element in the rowing world to cut the distance from four to three miles. But nothing will come of it. Such agitations have been started annually for the past twenty years and each year they have languished and died. The rowing world is dominated by the four-mile-row faction and no change ever will be made until that faction is in minority, or until the four-mile-pace kills a few oarsmen.

Those who favor the three-mile course state that the reduction of one mile in the distance of the race would save the members of the crews from the utter collapse that usually comes at the end of the four-mile race. They say that a three mile race will satisfy all the desires of the spectator, detract nothing from the excitement and thrill of the race and enable the men to finish in fairly good condition, bacuse it would mean only about 15 minutes' work at the oars against 20 minutes now.

Those who cling to the four mile plan say that if the race were shortened it would inflict even a more terrific strain on the oarsmen. They state that under the present four-mile system the men just row at an easy stroke during the first three miles and spurt only in the last mile, whereas, if the course were shortened to three miles the oarsmen would spurt all the way.

Such an argument is silly. The oarsmen wouldn't spurt all the way. They wouldn't hit up a really fast stroke until they reached the last mile or last half-mile, whether the course was two miles, three miles, or four miles long.

Having learned a lesson from the farce decision of last June, the folks in charge of the Yale-Harvard regatta will have professional judges at the finish line of the boat races this year.

The decision of the amateur judges last year was that Yale beat Harvard by two or three feet, but the judges were alone in their decision. Newspaper men who have "covered" boat races for years were at that finish line and every one of the dozen gave the race to Harvard.

Pitted against the unanimous verdict of those experienced and cool-headed newspaper men was the verdict of these inexperienced and excited judges. And because the judges, "green" though they were in such work, were in an official capacity, their verdict went on the records—a Yale victory and a Harvard defeat.

One of the judges of the race was the postmaster of New London, Conn. Another was a student of Yale and the third was a student of Harvard. None of the trio ever before had officiated at such an event, and yet, in the hands of these three men was placed the power to decide an event on which at least $500,000 had been wagered.

The men who will act as judges for the Yale-Harvard boat race this year—and for years to come—will be selected from men who have acted as judges for horse races, athletic meets or similar events where an unerring eye and cool judgments are absolute necessities.

Up to the present time no college has asked to take the place in the Poughkeepsie regatta that has been made vacant by the withdrawal of Wisconsin. It looks just now as if the race will be among five crews only: Cornell, Columbia, Pennsylvania, Syracuse and Washington.

WATERTOWN ONCE WAS ARRAYED AS FULTON

President of Watertown Common Council Heard Conversation on Our School Problem.

H. C. Kinne, President of the Common Council of Watertown in passing through Fulton yesterday overheard a discussion on the high school site. He said that the North and South side of Watertown were once arrayed against each other on such a school question and consequently did nothing. Then the State Department of Education stepped in and to the great humiliation of the citizens of Watertown forced action under various penalties.

"The deep interests of a community in the future welfare of its children," said Mr. Kinne, "should always come first; let the factional or sectional struggles come after."

FIGHT TO RETAIN NAME OF HOUSE

New Yorkers Would Have Jumel Mansion Called by Another Name

JUMEL MANSION

New York, March 4.—And now they want to change the name of the Jumel Mansion, one of the famous landmarks of the American Revolution.

Cabot Ward, park commissioner has asked the board of alderman to rename the historic house in Washington Heights, overlooking the Harlem River and call it Washington's Headquarters. He urges it would be more fitting to name the ancient mansion, which is one hundred and fifty years old this year, after the man who made it famous, rather than the Santa Domingo coffee planter who once owned it.

During a part of the war of the Revolution, the building was the headquarters of Gen. George Washington, and that is why the City of New York now owns the house and grounds and keeps it open as a show place.

There is a bitter fight on in the Board of Alderman over the proposed change of name, and Frank J. Dowling, Tammany minority leader, is the champion of Jumel. He declares the mansion would lose its identity, if called by a name other than that by which it has been known so long.

For more than one hundred years the old house has been identified with the name of Jumel. Roger Norris, a lieutenant-colonel in the English service and a comrade of George Washington in colonial warfare, built the mansion in 1765. It was his home for a little more than ten years. Then Norris threw in his lot with the Tories and after the Revolution moved to England, his home being confiscated along with those of other Loyalists.

In 1777, the first year of the Revolution, Washington used the place as headquarters, and it is in connection with his occupancy the house is most historical. It is on this ground that the Park Commissioner suggests the change of name.

In 1794 the house was used as a tavern and Washington and his officers often dined there. Early in the nineteenth century Stephen Jumel, a wealthy coffee planter, came to New York, after a negro uprising and massacre of whites in the French colony of Santa Domingo. He became a wine merchant and married Eliza Bowen, who became the famous Mme. Jumel.

In 1810 they bought and restored the Morris place and named it the Jumel Mansion. One hundred years ago this year, both went to France to invite Napoleon Bonaparte to visit America.

Mme. Jumel returned to this country in 1821 and re-opened the mansion. There she entertained lavishly, among her guests being some of the famous men of the country, until 1828, when Jumel returned to New York.

He died in 1832 and in 1833 Mme. Jumel married Aaron Burr, whofought the dual with Alexander Hamilton. Mme. Jumel, as she was still known after her second marriage, did not get along well with Mr. Burr. Financial matters caused an estrangement, as Burr had little means of his own.

Burr died three years after the wedding. Mme. Jumel survived him nearly twenty years, dying in 1865 at the age of ninety-six years.

"After the historic old mansion has been known as the Jumel Mansion for more than 100 years, I don't see why it should be changed now," said Alderman Dowling. "A score of villages and cities have a 'Washington Headquarters,' but there is only one Jumel Mansion. The mansion is on Washington Heights, the name which commemorates the fighting and the generalship of the revolutionary Commander-in-Chief in the campaign in which he was compelled to evacuate New York. The Jumels, husband and wife, were characterful people, with initiative and force, and the name Jumel carries with it association and personnel that are identified with American history from Revolutionary das to Civil War times. Weshington's fame is too great to be increased by the changing of the name of the old mansion.

"Another change of name which I shall oppose is that involved in designating Varick street, South Seventh Avenue, Varick street was named for Gen. Varick, one of the American revolutionists who gave his fortune to help Robert Morris finance the fight for liberty. He was also instrumental in raising a loan in France. If the name Varick street helps to perpetuate his name and fame he's certainly entitled to it.

By FERDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, March 4.—If Senator Robert R. Lawson is successful in having enacted into law his anti-solicitation bill, candidates for election will greet him with eclat. The measure in question makes it a misdemeanor to solicit contributions through the sale of tickets for balls, outings, entertainments or any other form of amusement for which an admission charge is made, when such requests are made of candidates.

Rich harvests have been gathered around election time by those who have an eye directed toward the benefit they may receive by appearing as an asset to a candidate. The candidate is notified that "the boys would appreciate it" if he would take a few tickets for this or that function. Although having no desire or intention of attending the function in question, the candidates who are approached take into consideration the fact that the association or society giving the affair, whatever it may be, doubtless has a considerable number of members and he takes a certain number of tickets. The appreciation of the "boys" is usually based upon the amount abstracted.

Senator Lawson has come to the conclusion that this form of soliciting should be eliminated and his bill is so drawn that it includes within its scope tickets which are sent out by mail to candidates. A penalty of two hundred and fifty dollars is prescribed for each offense. This amount the candidate who receives by mail or is button-holed and thus is informed of a forthcoming soiree, may bring action to collect.

There may be significance in the bill introduced Asemblyman Francis bill introduced by Assemblyman F. R. Stoddard, Jr., which permits men of forty-five years of age and over to enlist in the National Guard of the State. The existing Military law which refers to enlistments in the militia sets forth the fact that forty-four years of age is the pinnacle of youth and in concise diction makes it plain that all above that time of life are regarded as civilian Methuselehs.

Under the provisions of the Stoddard bill a man who has been honorably discharged from the service after having served for at least three years in another State or in the District of Columbia or in the regular army or marine corps, may join the citizen soldiery of the Empire State.

It is believed by some that Assemblyman Stoddard has in his own way tsarted out to make it possible to add experienced soldiers to the national guard and at the same time to increase its strength. The number of young men who at one time were prone to join the national guard because of the social attractions in connection with military duty, has fallen off materially because of the curtaining of many of the one-time gaieties.

The establishment of safety or danger zones on streets in cities of the first and second class, is provided for in a bill offered by Assemblyman J. Leslie Kincaid and its provisions appear to be worthy of considerable. The bill provides that the safety zones shall be so established as to enable pedestrians to cross busy thoroughfares in comparative safety. Each zone is to be in width twenty feet from the building line to each intersection of streets or roads and of the same width at right angles to the building line of any other part of any street or road which may be designated as a safety zone.

In case of an accident or fatality, the driver or owner of a vehicle causing it shall be presumed to be in fault and to have been guilty of negligence or contributory negligence, unless it is be proved to the contrary.

EMPIRE UNITED MAKES IMPORTANT TIME CHANGE

At the request of a number of Sycuse-Oswego Division patrons, the Empire United Railways has announced a slight change of time to become effective Sunday, March 7 when Train No. 14 will run earlier than under the present schedule.

The new schedule adopted a month ago provided for the arrival of this train in Syracuse at 8.03 a.m. Many patrons who used this train who wished to connect with the 8 a. m. Lackawanna train from Syracuse for Cortland or Binghamton had to telephone ahead to have the D. L. & W. train held. The Empire United management agreed to set this train ahead to make it arrive in Syracuse at 7:44 a. m., and thus allow ample time to make the transfer. Under the new schedule No. 14 will leave Oswego at 6 a. m. and Fulton at 6:32 a. m.

MAGEE'S COLLAR BONE UNBROKEN

Gist of News From Camps Tells of Slight Injury to Sherwood's Shoulder

Macon, Ga., Mar. 4.—The injury to Sherwood Magee is not so serious as was at first believed and the champion Braves are breathing easier. While working out yesterday Magee negotiated a fall and it was feared his collar bone had been broken. Examination showed that he escaped with a bruised shoulder and will be able to resume practice in a few days.

Marlin, Tex. Mar. 4.—Rumors are floating around that the Federal leaguers will raid the Giants because the latter have signed up Pol Perritt and also taken back Rube Marquard. The players, however, say they are satisfied with their contracts with the Giants. McGraw had his men out today, but the condition of the grounds, due to yesterday's rain made the work light.

Boston, Mar. 4.—Manager Bill Carrigan of the Red Sox, with a party of scouts left here this morning for training camp at Hot Springs, Ark. A number of players will be picked up en route. The others will go to Hot Springs directly from their homes. Carrigan and his party will reach Hot Springs Saturday morning.

Dayton, Fla., Mar. 4.—Fungo hitting and easy work by the batteries made up the Dodgers' practice today. Manager Robinson is slowly putting his men through the conditioning process.

Savannah, Ga., Mar. 4.—Manager Donovan is devoting most of his time to Walter Pipp in the hope that he may make that player one of the best first sackers in the country and fill the gap in the Yankees' infield. All the players were out again early today.

Gulfport, Miss., Mar. 4.—Cold, chilly weather interfered with outdoor work for the Tigers yesterday, but Manager Jennings had all the men in camp working in the shed for a couple of hours. It is milder today and regular field work will be resumed. The veterans are due to begin showing up tonight when Captain Moriarty will get into town. By Monday most of the squad will be at work.

Havana, Cuba, Mar. 4.—Batting and infield practice was the order of the day for the St. Louis Feerals. Plank and Davenport did most of the pitching. The veteran of the Mackmen was in mid-season form.

Armando De Marsens today played centerfield for the Federals.

Hot Wells, Tex., Mar. 4.—The park was too wet to permit the St. Louis Cardinals doing any work today.

Charlottesville, Va., Mar. 4.—Balmy sunny weather is favoring the Senators and they are getting morning and afternoon workouts, an unusual procedure for training camps so early in the season. Ray Morgan, Griffith's second sackerfi is reducing weight five pounds a day by means of a heroic sweating process.

San Antonio, Tex., Mar. 4.—The sun beamed on the Indians long enough for two hours' workout yesterday. An all night rain made the grounds heavy and the going bad, but Manager Birmingham would not forego an opportunity to put his men into action, so they jogged out to the ball park from the hotel.

Present plans call for twice-a-day workouts and today will witness the first real work of the Indians, if the weather permits.

Augusta, Ga., Mar. 4.—Soccer football was introduced by Manager Oakes of the Pittfeds today as a training measure and 15 minutes of this work soon had veterans and recruits puffing. There were two workouts today, two hours this morning and two hours this afternoon. Fungo hitting and infield pratice and some bunting took up the most of the time. Big crowds of natives turned out to watch the Rebels work.

Los Angeles, Cal., Mar. 4.—The Chicago White Sox will meet the Los Angeles team today in the first of two exhibition games. The Sox had a stiff worout during the forenoon with Pitchers Benz and Keliher excused on account of sore arms. The second Sox team will play the Oakland, Coast League team, in Oakland today.

Tampa, Fla., Mar. 4.—The Cubs, faithfully obeying Manager Barnahan's rule against cigarettes, practiced two hours during the forenoon and will drill again later in the day. Two extra exhibition games with the Phillies in St. Petersburg were arranged. Raymond Murphy, the Fordham college recruit, was out of the practice with a spiked knee.

BRIEFLETS

The merry little war in baseball is rivaling the European conflict. The Federals are threatening to raid organized baseball again because pitchers Perritt and Marquard have jumped back.

GILMORE WILL FIGHT TO GET BACK PERRITT

Chicago, Mar. 4.—President Gilmore of the Federal League, was quoted today:

"Polly Perritt figures in our bill of complaint before Judge Landis, but in face of this McGraw goes ahead and signs him for the Giants.

"Now we are going to stand pat on our policy of non-interference while the case is before Judge Landis, but after that look out. It will be war such as organized baseball has never dreamed of.

"We've got $100,000 to spend right now."

CZAR'S 1,000,000 MEN HARRASS ONE DIVISION

Russians Capture Important Army Orders, Revealing Designs of Their Enemy

By Francis Lavelle Murray

Petrograd, Mar. 4.—The complete rout of the 26th Austrian division in the region of Stanislau, eastern Galicia, was officially announced by the Rusian general staff today. It was also announced that the German bombardment of Sosowiec has been lessened owing to the Russian counter attacks. In the Grodno district the Germans are confining themselves to holding the Russian offensive, but the Czar's trops are advancing along the whole line north of that place.

The official report follows:

"On the Narew front (in northern Poland) we captured German army orders which state that prisoners must be taken at all costs in order that information may be obtained regarding the grouping of the Russians. The use of traps in concealed pits is recommended in order to increase the number of prisoners. The Germans have been ordered to make requisition for everything, especially foodstuffs, which they do not need and send them to the commissiriat. Some maneuvers of the Germans are explained by the fact that they were searching for potatoes.

"In the region of Stanislau (ineastern Galicia) we completely routed the Tewnty-sixth Austrian division. We captured an ambulance, six doctors and a number of ambulance and troop trains.

"In the district of Grodna oppostie the East Prussian frontier) we continue daily to capture prisoners and machine guns. The Germans confine themselves to holding our offensive.

"In the region of Ossowiec the Germans attacks which began on March 1 continue. Vigorous counter attacks on our part caused the Germans to desist in their attacks and they have lessened the intensity of their bombardment."

In military circles it was announced that the Russians are advancing all along the whole line north of Grodno, despite the stubborn resistance of the Germans. Another German force is lingering in the forest of Augustowo where the Twentieth Russian corps is still holding out.

It is estimated that the Russian army operating in Galicia consists of 1,000000 men. The Russians are operating nearer their base of supplies than the German-Austrian troops, the latter being almost cut off from their lines of communication by the high mountains. All transport is being done by mules and heavy guns have to be left behind.

RUSSIAN REPORTS DIVERT ATTENTION, SAY GERMANS

By Frederick Werner

Berlin, Mar. 4.—by wireless.—Admitting that the situation after the capture of Przasnysz was critical for the German troops, the German general staff issued an official reporte today stating that the retreat from that city was orderly and that the Russians were not able to disturb the retirement. The statement says that he Russian victory is wothout the slightest importance and that he Czar's troops have suffered heavily.

The report of the general staff follows:

"After the capture of a strong point of support on the outskirts of Przasnysz by one of our army corps, the situation was very critical for an entire day. During this time three Russian corps attacked the German wing from the east, southeast and south. Our corps, while withdrawing, kept pace with the superior force.

"A portion of our troops was fiercely engaged. A large number of wounded who were taken to neighboring villages were not brought back into our lines. The Russians were unable to disturb our orderly retreat and lost touch with the German corps.

"Obviously the Russians suffered heavily. Our position has since been maintained by the arrival of German reinfrocements. The Russian victory is without the slightest importance and does not bear comparison with the German storming of Przasnysz where we took 10,000 prisoners and much war material.

"Russian incredible reports are intended to divert attention from their severe defeats about the Mazurian lakes region."

GERMAN SUCCESSES IN CHAMPAGNE REGION

Berlin, by wireless, Mar. 4.—The capture of 1500 yards of trenches by the Germans in the vicinity of Laurette, Lille and Arras, and the taking of eight officers and 358 French as prisoners, as well as six machine guns, is announced in an official statement issued by the General Staff this afternoon. The statement says that all the coutner attacks in that region as well as in the Champagne region were repulsed. The Russian attacks near Grotno have failed, the statement adds.

MINIATURE STEAM SHOVEL AT LINEN SHOWER

Mrs. George Hanna of Oneida st., entertained last evening in honor of Miss Edith Albin, whose approaching marriage to A. Holmes has been announced. A feature of the entertainment was a linen shower.

There were eleven guests present and upon arriving each was given a bit of sewing for the prospective bride. Later all were ushered into the dining room. Here a miniature steam shovel hung suspended with emblematical significance of the engineering pursuits of the groom to be.

After the clever arrangement had been viewed by all one of the guests was bidden to unfasten a string attached to the shovel. In doing so the shovel unloaded and a shower of dainty linen was "dumped" upon the table.

Later a dainty luncheon, of which the color scheme was pink and white, was enjoyed by the guests.

"OFFICER 666"

Most theatergoers are familiar with the theme of "Officer 666," which appears tonight at The Quirk, but for those who are not, the story runs in this way:

"Travers Gladwin," a young millionaire, returns incognito from abroad with his Jap servant, "Bateato," after cabling his chum, "Whitney Barnes," to meet him that evening at the "Gladwin" mansion.

"Al Wilson," a picture thief, arrives from Europe that same afternoon. He has obtained keys to the "Gladwin" mansion from a dismissed servant of "Gladwin's" and, parading under the other's name, wins the love of romantic "Helen Burton," with whom he plans to elope at 10:30 that night.

"Bateato" goes to the mansion at once and excites the suspicion of "Phelan," "Officer 666," whom he finally satisfies as to his identity. A few minutes after "Whitney Barnes" reaches the home, followed shortly after by "Travers." This visit is interrupted by the arrival of "Helen Burton" and her friend, "Sadie Small," and "Helen" explains that she intends to elope with her sweetheart, "Travers Gladwin." Amazed at first, "Travers" scents trouble and then pretends an intimate friendship with "Gladwin." "Barnes," under the influence of a brilliant idea, takes "Sadie" aside and advises that she tell her aunt of the proposed elopement. Both girls leave promising to return at 10:30. "Gladwin" at once determines upon a plan, brings in "Officer 666," borrows his uniform and sending "Phelan" to the kitchen with "Bateato," goes into the street, where he purchases a false mustache and returns. From that on the story gets more mytifying and hilarious, making all in all one of the most interesting and enjoyable photoplays ever screened.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE CAMPAIGN

"BURY THE HATCHET—EVERYBODY'S DOING IT"

WILSON TO REACH FULTON TUESDAY

To Build Strong Chamber of Commerce---Braddock to Address Citizens Tonight

J. H. Braddock, field secretary of the American City Bureau and formerly staff member of the New York Bureau of Municipal Research, will speak informally at the Citizens' club this evening on the subject, "Some Cities I Have Visited."

Word was received this morning at the office of the Chamber of Commerce that Lucius E. Wilson, field director of the American City Bureau, will arrive in Fulton next Tuesday morning to take up his part of the campaign to enlarge the facilities of the Fulton Chamber of Commerce.

Shortly after the arrival of Mr. Wilson, a general chairman for the campaign will be selected. This chairman, in co-operation with President Penfield and Messrs. Braddock and Wilson, will act as spokesman for the special membership committee which formulated plans for the present movement. There will also be appointed a general membership committee to confer with the leaders in the campaign and to assist actively in the work.

These committees, together with the directors and chairmen of standing committees of the Chamber, will meet for a noon luncheon next Wednesday. There will also be present a group of business and professional men to whom invitations will be mailed tomorrow. Mine Host McQuade, of the Hotel Clark, has offered to do everything within his power to help make this movement a success, and as an evidence will serve next Wednesday's luncheon at his hotel. This will be a chicken dinner.

Meanwhile plans for the upbuilding of a vigorous Chamber of Commerce are being definitized. An indexed list of names, including every business and professional man in Fulton who should be a member of the Chamber, is being compiled. This list when completed will furnish a basis for the entire new organization.

Enthusiasm, according to those who are most familiar with the working plans, means everything during this formative period, and with co-operation on the part of all present members of the Chamber, there is no doubt as to the ultimate success of the undertaking. The membership at large is anticipating the biggest awakening of civic interest ever known to Fulton, and all are enthusiastic over the bright prospects.

In an interview with a representative of The Evening Times, George B. Fairman, vice-president of the Chamber of Commerce, last night said:

"One point upon which all agree, is that it is necessary to have the strong central civic and commercial organization of the city, the Chamber of Commerce, representative of the best business and professional interests as well as the citizenship at large.

"The business man who imagines that he can live indepentently of the activities of his fellow-citizens, is engaging in costly deception. Every civilized man is dependent upon others. The retailer needs customers; the lawyer, clients; the doctor, patients; the manufacturer, labor; the workman, employment. Even the thief needs victims: the snob, the gaping crowd; the miser, an opportunity to hoard money and pinch his spirit. Absolute 'independence' is a thing about which men may boast—but it does not exist.

"The owner of real estate owes much to the community. He may be slow in acknowledging the debt—he may never admit the obligation until the Chamber of Commerce drives the truth home. The value of city real estate is made by the community, not by the owner. Every enterprising man in the city is directly or indirectly enhancing the value of real estate. The largest operators in America arrive at the value of leaseholds by counting the people who pass along the sidewalks in front of the property. The value of business property is thus calculated in terms of footsteps on the sidewalk in front of it. It is the community which gives the property its value. The wise landowner is he who encourages or induces enterprise among his fellow citizens.

"Every citizen owes something to the home community. It is doing something for each—furnishing business or employment; providing friends and entertainment, schools and churches, drives and parks, and means of contact with the world. Most of these things come along in such a matter-of-fact way that the public is almost unconscious of them. Yet each requires the co-operation of many men for its complete accomplishment and is better done as the art of co-operation is more nearly mastered by the community.

"The Chamber of Commerce is a Thing. It is a Force. It creates an atmosphere of enterprise. It establishes confidence in the future of the city. And confidence is the foundation upon which all business is built.

"True co-operation is not simply 'giving.' It is giving in a way that enables all to work together in the accomplishment of a common purpose. The modern Chamber of Commerce scientifically organized and directed is the medium through which genuine co-operation is made possible. Through the enlarged facilities of our Chamber, everything is possible."

EARTHQUAKE SHOCKS AGAIN VISIT ITALY

Florence, Italy, Mar. 5.—A severe earthquake occurred last night throughout Tuscany and slight tremors are being felt today. The most severe shock was felt at 8 o'clock last evening. It was undulatory in character. No material damage was caused in Florence, but it is feared that the damage was serious and that possible loss of life resulted in the Apennine mountain towns of eastern and northeastern Tuscany.

BOILER BLEW UP; BUILDING WRECKED

New York, Mar. 5.—With a roar like a volcano, a two-ton boiler in the basement of 373 West street, blew up today, demolishing the entire first floor of the building which is occupied by a restaurant and severely scalding one man and injuring two others. Tewenty boarders in their rooms in the upper floors made hurrie exits by way of the fire escapes.

BEATS SWIMMING RECORD

Chicago, Mar. 5.—Arthur C. Raithel ofthe Illinois A. C. today holds the world's swimming record for 40 yds. He covered the distance in 18 4-5 seconds; 1-5 of a second better than the old mark.

Jacksonville, Fla., Mar. 5.—The Athletics welcomed the rain which cut short their practice, but Connie Mack had his men out early today to make up for the time lost when the weather man interfered. Old Larry Lajoie is cavorting around like a youngster.

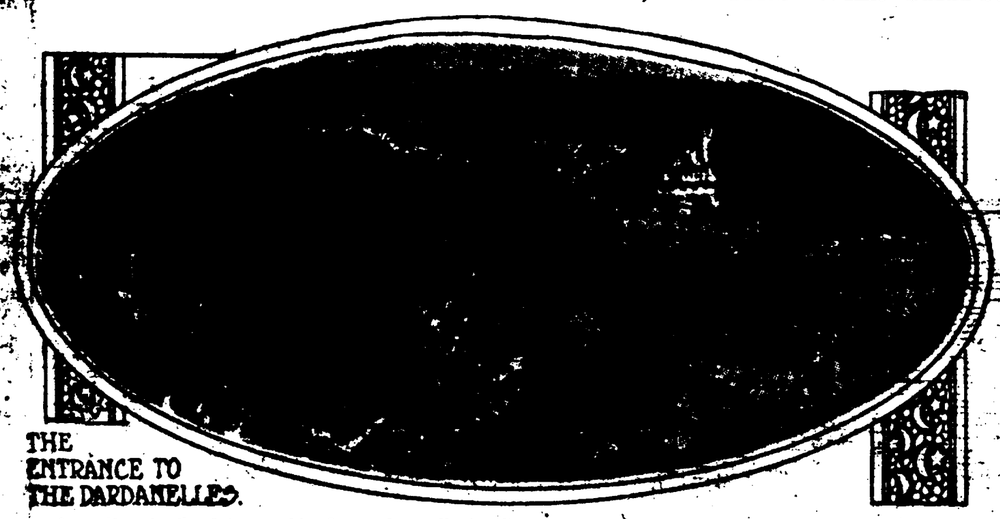
St. Petersburg, Fla., Mar. 5.—Two more strenuous sessions were on the boards for the hPillies when they took the field for practice today. The men are being rounded into shape for the exhibition game with the Cubs next Monday.

* * *

Gulfport, Miss., Mar. 5.—Even the oldest inhabitant fails to remember when Gulfport has expereienced a rain like that of yesterday when it was impossible for the Tigers to get to the grounds, much less to practice. Today will be devoted to hunting and handball in the sheds.



WEATHER FORECAST

Tonight, snow and warmer. Saturday, snow and rain and warmer, with strong northwest winds.

INVESTIGATORS RAP SYSTEM

Albany, Mar. 5.—State Comptroller Travis today recommended as a result of his probe into the State Labor Department that $207,569.98 be cut out of the appropriation. He also recommended the abolition of the bureau of printing and engraving, and the system of paying lump sums in lieu of expenses is sharply wrapped by the investigators. Deputy Somptroller Reusswig who conducted the probe says that a duplication of the work of the Labor Department and that of the Workmen's Compensation commission could be made. He also recommended that the New York offices be removed to Albany so that there can be more economy. He declares that it is not intended to convey the impression that the present commission is not charged with the responsibility for all that is shown herein. He points out that for every dollar spent in 1910 there was expended for the department in 1914 the sum of 03.09 and that there is a schedule for the year 1915 of the sum of $4.96. He declares that no special advantage came to the State by the employment of special investigators in the bureau of Industrial Hygiene at salaries of $2,000 a year. He said this whole bureau has been an item of unnecessary expense. The unusual cost of the bureau for six months was $6000.

ENTRANCE TO DARDANELLES FORCED BY ALLIES' WAR SHIPS.

THE ENTRANCE TO THE DARDANELLES.

According to the latest cable despatches, all the forts at the entrance of the Dardanelles have been reduced and the greatest fleet of war ships ever seen in action is attempting to pound a way through to Constantinople and the Bosphorus. After reducing the fortifications at the entrance to the strait the allied Franco-British force cleared the waters of mines and worked its way fourteen miles toward the Ottoman capital, and the forts at the narrow portion of the straits—the strongest of Constantinople's protective chain—probably are by now under a terrific bombardment.

DARDANELLES FORTS CRUMBLING BEFORE MIGHTY ARTILLERY

But the Turkish Officers Minimize Conditions; That Some Works Are Antiquated Structures

By Herbert Temple

London, Mar. 5.—The gigantic naval action by which the Anglo-French fleet is trying to force the Dardanelles and open up the way to Constantinople, has been extended until now the engagement stretches along the coast of Asia Minor and the coast of the peninsula of Gallipoli, fronting on the Aegean sea. A dispatch from Athens states thot the French cruiser D'Entrecasteaux, which bombarded Arsus in the Gulf of Alexandretta, and the battleship Jauregiberry, which cannonaded Sidon, both did extensive damage.

While the warships inside of the Dardanelles were pounding away at the inner forts the British warship Dublin shelled and destroyed a Turkish observation station on the peninsula of Gallipoli and the warship Sapphire bombarded a Turkish concentration camp inland from the Gulf of Adramyti, putting troops to flight. French battleships attacked the Bulair forts and destroyed a bridge over the Kavac river, preventing troop movements in that vicinity.

A reign of panic is reported in Constantinople and it is said that the Sultan had already left the city for the interior of Asia Minor. An uprising is threatened against the leaders of the Young Turk party, who are held responsible for Turkey's advent into the war.

The warships bombarded the inner Turkish forts all day Thursday, concentrated their fire against the forts at Niagara and Kalid Bahr. Vice-Admiral Sackville H. Carden, commander of the international fleet reports in official dispatches that at least forty big Turkish guns were destroyed by the cannonade of the war fleet.

France and England are marshalling an army, estimated at 100,000 men on the Dardanelles littoral and this force will be commanded by General D'Amade, former commander of the French forces in Morocco. General D'Amade was in command of the French

RUSSIANS HALT GERMANS NEAR POLISH RIVERS

Two Towns of Strategic Importance Lost By Austro-German Troops

By Francis Lavelle Murray

Petrograd, Mar. 5.—That the German armies have succeeded in extricating themselves from a perilous predicament along the Niemen and Bobr rivers in Poland was officially admitted here today. The weather has again become bitterly cold, in some sections being twenty below zero, and the swamps and streams are frozen over, permitting the Germans to bring up the artillery which had been held back.

Along the seven mile front from Simno to Sereje, west of the second class fortress of Olita on the Niemen the Germans are massing for an attack, apparently in an attempt to cross the Niemen and advance along the railway to Vilna. To prevent the success of this movement Russian reinforcements have been hurried to Olita and are there opening a strong offensive.

On the Bobr, though the Russians have succedded in forcing their way across that river at Wizna, the Germans have returned to the assault upon Ossowiec. The fall of this fortress and a German advance toward Villa would render Grodno vulnerable to attacks from two sides, but it is asserted at the war office that neither of these objectives can be attained by the Germans.

Maintaining their offensive in the Przasnysz region, the Russians have driven the Germans twelve miles beyond that town to the front between Mlawa and Chorzele. There the Germans have rallied and are at bay in the trenches which they have been constructing for months. On Wednesday the Russians attempted to take Mlawa by storm, but were repulsed, though they succeeded in taking up positions close to the German field works.

In Galicia and Bukowina, according to official reports from the front, the Russian operations are proceeding with complete success. These assert that the capture of Stanislau, Kolomea and Czernowitz marked the high tide of the Austro-German success and that the Teutonic allies are now being steadily pressed back.

The retaking of Stanislau and Kolomea has again made the Russians masters of the railroads running through southeastern Galicia and Bukowina, thus permitting the rapid transportation of troops from one theater of fighting to another.

ANOTHER GERMAN SUBMARINE SUNK BY MERCHANTMAN

West Hartlepool, Eng., Mar. 5.—Another German submarine has been sunk, according to information given out here today. The owners of the British steamer Alston announce that the captain of a ship reported to them that he had sunk a German submarine in the English Channel last Saturday. If the report of the captain is true this makes the second German submarine sunk by a merchant ship; the British Admiralty having accepted the claims of the captain of the Thordis that his vessel rammed and sank a submarine in the Channel.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

London.—The British admiralty today officially accepted the claim of Captain Belle of the steamer Thordis that his vessel sank a German submarine on February 28. The following statement was issued by the government press bureau:

"The admiralty announces that the steamship Thordis has been examined and placed in drydock. The injuries to her keel and propeller confirm the evidence of Captain Belle and the crew that the vessel rammed and probably sank a German submarine on Feb. 28.

Dover, Eng.—Twenty-nine officers and men of the German submarine U-8 were landed here by British destroyers this morning. They state the boat was sunk at 9 o'clock last night by British destrowers in the Channel off Dover. Until the arrival of the submarine's crew here it was supposed she was sunk by a French vessel as the first news was given out in Paris.

Paris.—Today's official statement says that the French troops have recaptured the greater part of the advanced trenches belonging to the Germans north of Ripont; that the French troops are now masters of the center of Hill 196 in the Argonne region, and that the Germans are again bombarding the Cathedral at Rheims.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

WORRY

If people who worry would wake up and hurry, their troubles would vanish in smoke, for ev'ry man's fire will leap a bit higher if fed with a little more coke. Like helpless lambs bleating they keep on repeating, "Now what in the world will I do?" They don't think of trying, but sobbing and sighing, they work themselves up in a knot! I know of some wailers, some chronic old failers, who whine at the least hint of fate. They warded the attack of life's golden chances, and now, hapless day! it's too late. If some luckless sailor, a hand on a whaler, is caught in a dangerous gale, he don't stop to holler—this sea learned scholar just makes for a port without fail. Oh! listen to reason, it's naught but self-treason to sigh when the wind bloweth wrong. Just banish your sorrow and hope for to-morrow and somehow you'll sure get along. For worry, by golly! is nothing but folly—a cinder that clogs the machine. Oh! be a hard hitter and not a weak quitter, and trouble will sift through the screen. The man who will hustle and plunge in the bustle will sift through reverses like lime. The man that will grumble will slip up and tumble and stay in the rear every time. There's no use in fretting, but be up and getting—just cling to "I will," like a leech. Just dig low and bury this useless old worry, and keep it far down beyond reach. Don't be pessimistic, but be optimistic and turn tearful gloom into song. Now try all the harder and fatten the larder—to holler and worry is wrong.

Opinions

Schoolbofs and Potatoes

Dr. John H. Finley is a true socialist. He has had before him for his inspection at the State Education Building exhibits of potatoes, apples and other farm products raised by country schoolboys. But transcending his interest in what boys can do to farm products is his interest in what these potatoes, apples and the like make of the boys. This attitude toward industry is at the root of all socialism. It seems particularly appropriate when assumed toward industry among schoolboys.

"I happen to know," Dr. Finley says, "of one seemingly worthless boy who has been made into a promising man by a flock of white chickens." And many of us have known of boys, encouraged early in gainful avocations, who have turned later into narrow usurers or unsrupulous promoters. It does not follow that because a boy raises splendid potatoes the potatoes are raising a splendid boy. —Times, N. Y.

Right to Buy Ships

For 125 years the United States has maintained the right to purchase interned merchantmen of belligerent nations. England has upheld the same position. Recently, however, the ministry has reversed the practice of the country, for it is to her interest to do so.

In the regular course of events, if the United States, or any of her citizens should buy a German ship, a British prize court would determine the case. If the court went against precedent and decided in favor of the ministry, the matter would become subject to diplomatic correspondence. If that failed to bring about an agreement, the case would be submitted to arbitration, under our treaties with England. It doesn't appear, therefore, that we would get into trouble had the shipping bill been passed. The talk about our being straightway plunged into war if the shipping bill went through was an argument of no weight, even if German ships were purchased, and was stirred up for political effect.—Utica, Observer.

A Woman Would

A [illegible] Chicago Judge told a woman [illegible] before him several years ago [illegible] only chance for [illegible] was to throw herself into the lake. With a brutal frankness worthy of the [illegible] dry sociologists, who know to the last decimal place all that the books can tell, are confounded by a regenerative miracle. For their minute and shrewd analysis leaves out the fighting soul. The final word has not been said till the soul makes answer—and this woman's soul has said, "I will."—Public Ledger.

THE GOOD THINGS

The things that make for good—that bring out the best in individuals—are the real things. Throughout the ages the homes of the intelligent have been marked in adornment by that which stimulates the finer sense of man.

In the growing commercialism of the world the pendulum of material worth had swung to its farthest reach. Today the pendulum is returning to its starting point, and man lifting his eyes from the circumference of the dollar beholds upon the threshold of his home the wision of the real things.

Again man is substracting from his business world time to look upon a picture, and to listen to the master musician's production. The home may be the city, the picture a bit of parkland with a gleaming shaft or two amid the shrubbery, and the music that from a public pavilion where the city's people play, and laugh and learn.

These are the things that are real, and whose circumference is greater than that of the dollar. With the rest of the progressive cities Fulton is seeking her place in the real world. The Chamber of Commerce campaign being launched by that most able body, The American Bureau Association, cannot fail to bring into close co-operation all those elements of our city which will make ultimately for a happier, and so a more prosperous Fulton.

THE ONE WHO DECIDES

Men may be of one mind, but decisions must have a point of origin and seek a particular executant to give them voice. The temptation often comes to take a roundabout way when we know that the direct route might lead to trouble, and if we came out into the open we might be captured. So we skulk and defer and teeter, atop of the fence, till the hour for striking while the iron is hot has passed irrevocably.

One thinks with longing of some valley of no decision, where no question is suddenly put up for immediate answer. There are experts in sidestepping as there are in dancing. They manage to go by on the other side when there is pain or sorrow or any dire catastrophe requiring a man's hand and presence. But those who take that track count for nothing. Their lives are of no use, except to the census taker. Those who always say "I can't" or "I won't," whatever the reason, must be content to let the great round world roll on its way in the sun without them. They had the chance. They refused. Very well then, the community of toiling hands and thinking minds must make shift to get along with present and punctual shelpers.

You cannot expest your life to make much difference if you follow the line of least resistance and perpetual negation. It is easy to sit back and "wish it on" to somebody else. Young people often fall into a fair way of expecting things to go jogging on in the same comfortable rut conducted by their elders. They expect that the senators will last always, and the grave and venerable and the middle-aged will be counselors and actors in perpetuity. Suddenly they wake to find, in something like consternation, that the mantle has dropped on their own shoulders. Death has overtaken the immortal. The indefatigable were struck down. The hale and hearty at last were prostrated. It is for the feet of the young men to step into the vacant places.

"'Tis man's perdition to be safe
When for the truth he ought to die."

All kinds of warfare clamor for the volunteers, and sometimes a shut-in with a prayer outruns the fleetest. Do not say just because the physical presence fails to come forward that there is an absence of one whose weight and inches in the good cause would tell. The firing line is wider than the "thin red line" of the heroes under fire. But it is the soul's concern of those whose bodies can take them there to go to the front.

There are always good excuses. One never has full reason to think himself ready for the start at sunrise. The object we must strain at ever seems shelved a little too high above our heads. The fruit-laden branches seem to need some kindly wind of a supervising Providence to bend them down to us. But we have to grow up suddenly and surprise ourselves often. "We don't know what we can do till we try." That is an old and a homely and a threadbare sentiment; but it is as true as the light of day or the clean wind off the hills. If you would be decisive you must decide. There are things that take hold upon your soul that demand surrender if you would be the manliest of men. There are some games out of which you cannot stay and keep the faith with your fellows. You must serve bullying old Scotch Judges of the 18th century, he added: "And all of your kind had better follow your example."

"I think the Judge is right," the woman said to the jailer. "The lake is the only place for me. I and all my kind would be better off dead. There is little hope for us."

A woman in this city who took the pledge before Magistrate Carson the other day is of a different way of thinking, and her counselors were of a humaner inclination than to extinguish the last ray of faith and hope in her cloudy firmament. In her earlier days her comely features had realized the ideals of several eminent illustrators whose pens and brushes conferred ananymous fame upon her. Then, unhappily married, at last deserted, her child taken from her, she sought happiness in the wine cup.

In the hope of finding a new life, somehow, somewhere, with her little girl again, she asks the world, "Do you really think there's a chance for a woman like me?

Who dares to answer in the negative? Again and again such as she is now have risen on stepping stones of their dead selves. Repeatedly the

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Diphtheria.

Diphtheria sometimes begins in a very mild way. Nature does not always give a loud warning of danger. Unrecognised nasal diphtheria of a mild type is largely responsible for the outbreaks of this disease in schools, institutions and communities. It is important therefore to be on one's guard at the first sign of a sore throat with fever, especially when the disease is prevalent. Send for a doctor and have him take a culture in throat and nose in season. This means of preventing the growth and spread of diphtheria is usually within easy reach of all. Do not neglect it.

ABOARD A SUBMARINE.

Some of the Difficulties With Which the Captain Is Beset.

The London Times recently described the difficulties that confront the officers and crew of a submarine during actual warfare. The captain of the submarine must lie in wait for his quarry with the nose of his boat pointing in the direction in which he expects the enemy's vessel to pass. Then he has to estimate the speed of the approaching ship and her distance and to fire his torpedo at the point at which he calculates she will have arrived when the torpedo has finished its run. Probably he will discharge another torpedo a few seconds later to make doubly sure.

In the discussion roused by the letter sent to the Times last June by Admiral Sir Percy Scott, Admiral Bacon, himself an expert and experienced handler of submarines, said: "If any of your readers wishes to appreciate some of the difficulties of submarine work let him sit down under a chart of the channel suspended from the ceiling, let him punch a hole through it and above the hole place a piece of looking glass inclined at forty-five degrees. Let him further imagine his chair and glass moving sideways as the effect of tide. Let him occasionally fill the room with steam to represent mist. Let him finally crumple the chart into ridges to represent the waves and then try to carry out some of the maneuvers that look so simple when the chart is spread out on the table and looked down upon in the quiet solitude of a well lit study."

MAMMOTH AERATORS.

How the Water In the Catskill Aqueduct Will Be Purified.

The great Catskill aqueduct of New York city is to have two immense aerators. One is to be at Ashokan, where the water can be purified before it enters the aqueduct, and the other at Kensico, where the water will be purified a second time just before it reaches New York city.

The second aerator will be in the center of a three acre basin, 460 feet long and 240 feet wide in the widest part. Into the floor are set, in row after row, 1,600 nozzles, each of which will throw a jet of water from fifteen to twenty feet high. The jets will strike each other and thus break up the water into clouds of spray and bring every drop into contact with the air and help free it of impurities.

This thorough airing will be especially beneficial in the autumn, when the water from the lakes and ponds is likely to have an unpleasant taste, owing to the presence in it of microscopic vegetation.—Youth's Companion.

Italy's Premier.

Antonio Salandra, premier of Italy, who steers his country in neutral channels despite war pressure in Europe, comes from the southern region of Puglia and has thirty years of parliamentary training to assist him in the undertaking. He is in the prime of life, and his lifelong legal training, his quick sense of humor and a quiet, aristocratic contempt for mental vulgarity and demagogic politics of every kind give him the happy mastery which revealed itself since the first days of his difficult leadership at the chamber of deputies.

Electroplating Mirrors.

A new method of silvering mirrors consists of depositing the metal on the glass by means of a high potential electric current. A plate of metal is placed against the glass; this is laid flat on a table, and the air above it is exhausted to a high degree of vacuum. Then a small quantity of hydrogen gas is introduced, and the current is turned on through a negative pole attached to the metal plate. In thirty seconds the glass has been silvered.

The War In a Nutshell.

You can hardly put a foot outside your own door without finding some one who is sacrificing something. Yesterday to the collecting station organized by the Lyceum club came a woman with a man's overcoat. Put it down. It was a fine coat. "For some man," she said firmly. "It was my son's. And he's been killed." So the soulless widow walked away tearless.—London Chronicle.

Baths Without Water.

To have a bath without water is one of the latest novelties. A thick robe is entwined with wires, and when put on a current of electricity is passed through the wires. The wearer of the robe soon finds his body getting warm or until in a little while he perspires as freely as if he were in a Turkish bath.

COUNTRY SCHOOL DAYS

By I. E. Hyde, Fulton

We were a band of happy kids,
We numbered, say, three score;
We were of Irish, Dutch, and Scotch,
Of Indian, and some more.

Kate Johnson taught that country school;
Or, tried to teach, I'll say.
For, when we all set out for fun—
Miss Johnson—Ah!—Good-day!

That school could boast of four plain walls
Of blackboards, two, I think
We washed at noon upon a bench;
It never knew a sink.

And the center was a stove,
I guess 'twas four by six;
A cupboard, and a desk whereon
Lay two long cherry sticks.

Those sticks, Mon Dieu! how they could bite,
With Johnson at the mast.
And when you felt their jaws close once,
You'd swear it was your last.

Kate Johnson was of Johnson stock;
So what could we expect?
But Johnson's teachings were alright:
Of those, I'll not reflect.

Some kaled three miles to reach that school,
They came from east and west;
A bag for books, a pail for eats,
And then—you know the rest.

We carried water from a spring
Wherein a barrel was sunk.
And if the same two carried twice,
Of course the rest would flunk.

I hope that spring path never tells
All that it heard and knew;
For carrying water from that spring
Was heaven, two by two.

A cow bell rang. The school was called.
Then Johnson—"Now to work;
Let every scholar do their best,
Don't loiter, do not shirk."

And then we'd scramble for our slates,
Our pencils, and our book.
Some one would glance toward Johnson,
And see that far off look.

"Dear children, it's so warm today
We'll close the school at noon."
And then we knew, you bet we knew,
Her beau had come to spoon.

AGGRESSIVE BIGNESS

There is no sense in agreeing with the desirabilities of a bigger and busier Fulton, unless our people are really to be practically patriotic. Littleness in spirit and action should be swept aside, in order that better development of aggressive bigness can take its place. Fulton, as a consequence, will strike a faster pace.

But, the same essences that constituted the war-time patriotism of 1776 will have to make themselves manifest in this year of 1915. Constructive patriotism can never flourish in an atmosphere of selfishness. It can never grow in an atmosphere of petty personal jealousies.

The war-time patriot forgets the little things of human life. He centers his attention upon the action and sacrifices needed to push his cause to a successful fruition.

The constructive, peace-time patriot of Fulton must do the same. If he wants to see his city advance, he must take her fortune in his own hand, and struggle vigorously to force it forward.

No city can progress unless its citizenship is willing to make some sacrifice. No city can progress unless its citizenship is willing to hazard some risk. The patriot of 1776 hazarded everything on the noble desire for independence. And he won. Had he been timid, had be been contented, had he been conservative, he would never have taken so dangerous a chance, and he would never have won so glorious a victory.

Aggressive business and professional men will become members of the enlarged Chamber of Commerce.

CORPSES IN CHURCHES

Syracuse, March 5.—There are altogether too many "corpses" in the churches today, according to Rev. William S. Terrell of Hamilton, who spoke at the celebration of the twenty-sixth anniversary of Delaware Baptist church last evening.

Mr. Terrell, who is a Virginaian by birth, illustrated his point by telling a story of a Negro preacher down South who began a funeral oration by saying: "Dis yere corpse has bin a member of mah church for forty years."

"That is the great trouble with many of our churches," said the speaker. "There are now enough live members. I feel now as if, when I have had more experience, I shall want to write a lecture on 'Corpses in the Church.'

A SUNDAY DINNER

Cucumber Canape
Chestnut Soup, Croutons
Mock Scallops, Tomato Sauce
Roast Stuffed Tenderloins,
Creamed Crones
Currant Jelly, Asparagus au Gratin
Pineapple and Grapefruit Salad
Angel Charlotte Coffee

Slice two cucumbers thin, let them marinate twenty minutes in French dressing to which the juice of an onion has been added, drain and add two tablespoonfuls of Chutney syrup. Spread on toast rounds, garnish with olive rings and one tiny anchovy in the center of each.

Chestnut Soup

Remove the shells from three-quarters of a pound of French chestnuts and put them into warm water. When it becomes too hot to put the fingers into it, remove the chestnuts from the fire and blanche them. Rinse them and put them on the fire in a saucepan containing a quart of white stock. Let them boil until they are very soft, then rub all through a sieve. Add seasoning and a half pint of cream. Keep hot, but do not boil again. Serve croutons with the soup.

Mock Scallops

From good sized codfish steaks one inch thick cut small rounds the size of scallops. Dip them in egg, then in fine crumbs and fry in deep hot fat a delicious brown. Drain, and serve garnished with cress and sliced lemon. Serve in the sauce boat a smooth, highly seasoned tomato dressing.

Roast Stuffed Tenderloins

Split two pork tenderloins and cut the ends square so that they are the same size. Make a savory dressing and add to it the chopped meat ends. Stuff the tenderloins, tie firmly, or skewer together. While they roast baste them with a little melted butter which has salt, pepper, a spoonful of powdered sugar and four cloves in it. When the tenderloins are done place them on a platter and make a sauce of the dish gravy by straining and adding to it a cup of sweet milk, thickened with a little butter and flour mixed to a paste. Serve in a hot gravy boat and garnish the tenderloins with cress and olive rings.

Pare and boil the crones until tender, then cream them in the usual way. The asparagus au gratin may be cooked and served in ramekins.

Pineapple and Grapefruit Salad

For the salad select a ripe pineapple and two heavy grapefruit. Free the grapefruit segments from the white skin, dice the pineapple and squeeze the juice from the heart. Mix the fruit in a white enamel sieve over a bowl, sprinkle with a teaspoonful of powdered sugar and set away to drain and cool. Cut fine a half cup of white celery and mix with the fruit. Put a portion in each green lettuce leaf with a teaspoonful of French dressing. Then on top of each place a tablespoonful of mayonnaise made without mustard, and a green cherry. Crackers and cheese may be served with the salad, or little rye bread and cheese sandwiches.

Angel Charlotte

For the angel charlotte, cut a hole in the centre of the cake appreciably larger than the pan leaves it. Then add one cup of whipped cream, a tablespoonful of finely chopped walunts, a dozen maraschino cherries, chopped with a slice of candied pineapple and a teaspoonful of powdered sugar. Fill the centre of the cake, heaping more whipped cream on top and ornamenting with cherries.

PACKAGE FOOD BEST

Demand for Goods That A9re Clean Has Caused Their Sale.

Foods!A circular issue by the Committee on Food Supply, appointed by Mayor Mitchell of New York city, declares that the prices asked for food in packages are exorbitant, and advises the public to purchase cereals, tea, crackers, bacon, macaroni, fruits, beans, peas, etc., in bulk. The committee says that in package shape certain commodities cost more. It concedes that the package "makes the food more appetizing," and says that "most of the packages are air tight and dust proof and for sanitary reasons a great many people prefer food that is done up in packages." This really settles the matter in favor of the package. The well-known brands of packaged foodstuffs may be relied upon to be clean and wholesome. Many a housewife has bought things in bulk only to find them tainted and unpalatable. The containers of packaged goods keep out the dust, dampness and vermin, and the food they protect is always in good condition. In many households the package is a great convenience. Modern apartments generally offer scant space for the storage of food. The housewife therefore, has to buy in moderate quantities, and she finds the packaged food containers fit into her cupboard readily. When she gives an order for a standard article, a housewife knows just what to expect! It is certain always to be sweet and eatable. As Mr. Sig. Fieux says in Printer's Ink: "The demand for package goods was not created by the manufactures. It was literally forced upon them by the concumers' demand for articles that would reach them in a clean, wholesome manner."—Leslie's.

To lose money ill is indeed often a crime, but to get it ill is a worse one, and to spend it ill is worst of all.—Ruskin.

Good Form

Novel Evening Party.

A family of fun loving girls recently gave an amusing entertainment. It was called a nose and goggle party. Each guest wore a faine nose and goggles. The noses were purchased or made of heavy cardboard covered with chamois and were not removed until after refreshments were served.

As the guests arrived each was given a card perforated with ribbon run through in order to wear the card around the neck so that every one could see it.

The cards had on one side a number by which each guest was known, on the other side a list of figures—1, 2, 3, etc. (as many figures as there were guests)—with a space opposite each figure for a name.

In the course of the evening each person guessed who the others were. Of courte, with intimate friends the familiar voices revealed the personality. In many cases if the voice was disguised this was not easily done, and much amusement and many absurd guesses were made.

As each guess was made the name was placed opposite the number on the card of the guesser corresponding to the number of the person whom he or she was trying to identify. For instance, if some one thought he knew No. 4 he turned his card and wrote the name opposite No. 4, etc. It was voted by all who were present as a most original and amusing way of spending an evening.

Take Off Your Hats, Ladies.

While in these days an audience of women knows hats should be removed when they are likely to obstruct the view of those sitting in the rear, occasionally there is some one who either forgets or is regardless of the rights of others. Then it becomes the unpleasant duty of ushers, perhaps solicited to act as such only for the occasion, to notify the women who have forgotten. Often too often, indeed the request is met with an air of haughty disdain and a distinct refusal.

Always in these cases the ugly note should be avoided, and the saner, pleasanter method of the request in a conciliatory tone will be the more likely to receive prompt and polite response. Sometimes a woman of tact, sitting behind an offender, may accomplish the end by saying in a soft voice and with great courtesy, "Madam, I am so sorry to inconvenience you, but I cannot see the stage and am going to ask you as a great kindness to remove your hat."

Of course, any one can call an attendant and turn the unpleasant job over to him. But this is not always practicable. There may be crowded seats, where it is difficult for him to make his way to the offender's side, and a commotion results.

If the wearer of the hat is a woman of good manners and breeding, but has simply forgotten, she will make an excellent reputation for graciousness by instantly removing the hat, turning slightly and saying, "I am so sorry I have inconvenienced you and hope you will pardon me."

Making Guest Comfortable.

The welfare of the country house guests should always be carefully considered. Their quarters should not only be attractive, but as comfortable as possible.

Much has been said on comforts and conveniences, such as a plentiful supply of clothes hangers and slipper trees in an empty closet, a well appointed sewing basket, an equally well equipped writing desk or table, a stock of various kinds of pins and hatpins and other useful toilet accessories for the guest room. But one thing you must remember which, just at this season, is most important and too often overlooked—a generous supply of water in the rooms where the guest must use an old fashioned washstand.

So many country homes, even quite pretentious homes at that, have still but the one bathroom and no running water in the bedrooms. Is there anything more discouraging after a long trip than to be ushered into such a room if the "skimpy" size of bowl and pitcher warns you not to be extravagant in your ablutions? There is really no excuse, for one of the large tin "fillers," such as chambermaids carry, costs but little, and, painted white or any desired color, is in nowise detrimental to the appearance of a room.

Street Car Manners.

If you are a street car rider don't delude yourself into thinking you ride in a taxicab or your own limousine or brougham. There is nothing to be ashamed of in riding in a street car. The majority of civilized mankind do it when they have the fare. But there is a little code of street car manners that every street car rider should heed. To begin with, act as if you were in a street car. Wear clothes suitable to the car. Remember that the small fare you pay entitles you only to your own place. A baby with sticky fingers or a laborer with muddy feet may sit next to you. Such a condition may, of course, be distasteful to you, but it is quite legitimate. You can ask the baby's mother to keep the baby's fingers from your coat, and you can pull your skirts away from the laborer's boots. But you cannot ask either the laborer or the baby to get out of the car.

most anyone's wardrobe, and that will solve the problem of the dress that goes anywhere and packs in small compass for traveling purposes, or week-end visits.

Victorian Coatees

Colored taffetas make almost as practical, and very pretty frocks especially in the combinations of plain and brocaded or embroidered goods. Some of the most fetching models in the fancy silks with white or light tinted grounds, are made with diminutive Victorian coatees of black taffeta, a rose tucked into its folds and pretty lace used for the tucker and sometimes for the sleeves as well.

A dress of blue taffeta with a flower in black embroidery spotted at quite wide intervals, had a jumper waist of black satin wth strappings in military fashion down the front of the blue silk. The same blue showed in the lining of the up-standing half collar and cuffs. A hem of black satin turned up on the right side finished the bottom of the skirt.

One notices a lot of trimming effects produced by contrasting hems. Frocks of pretty figured cotton and silk mixtures, have up-turned hems of black taffeta finished with the bound scallops that are an insistent note in present styles. Ginghams in stylish plaids have similar bands in the prevailing color at the foot of the skirt, and one sees many costumes that are half voile, half silk which are novel and smart.

Up-to-Date Lines

As the season progresses the complete chance in the modish silhouette becomes more strikingly evident. Every tendency toward uoppy slouchiness has disappeared and only when an erect, military poise is secured, does the new spring suit set as its designer intended. A careful study of points shown in the new models of Warner's rust proof corsets, just launched, will repay anyone who wants to secure the best effect for the coming seasons.

Without any sacrifice of comfort or wear, these models bring every type of figure into line with present requirements.

Quiet tones prevail for street costumes and more models are seen in single matching tones than for a long time back. Silent colors, someone has dubbed them, in distinction from the screaming hues that have been with us during the Oriental craze. Sand tones, soft grays, and grayish grens with the "Soldat blen" just over from Paris. This latter about the shade familiar in West Point uniforms. Browns in all the quieter shades are well endorsed and with the long list of blues and the always popular black and black-and-white mixtures. The woman of refined taste rejoices at the opportunities the presen color card offers.

A hat that is striking in its plainness is seen at intervals on the girlish contingent on Fifth Avenue these days. It is usually of black fine straw and exactly reproduces the shape seen in pictures of the early Puritans. This has a band of ribbon about its crown with a buckle of pearl—usually—directly at the front.

England's Army Rifle.

Quite a number of people believe that cartridges are served out to the soldiers separated from one another. Cartridges are, however, usually given out fastened together in clips of five. The modern rifle used by the British army is known as a magazine rifle and holds two clips or ten cartridges in the magazine itself as well as an extra cartridge above the magazine, eleven rounds in all.

When the cartridge clip is forced into the magazine the fastening is removed, so that each cartridge when it reaches the magazine is separate from the others.

The magazine of the army rifle is nothing more than a detachable box containing a spring. This spring forces up one cartridge at a time into its position ready for firing. As a rule the ten cartridges in the magazine are only used in great emergency, as when the order for rapid firing is given to stop an enemy's charge. In the ordinary way the magazine, with its ten cartridges, is shut off from the rest of the rifle by means of a metal slide called the "cut off."—London Standard.

Spoiled the Scoop.

The newspaper special, although always the cutest of the cute, is sometimes "scored off" by a colleague. For instance Sir W. H. Russell represented the London Times at O'Connell's trial in Dublin.

In those days the telegraph was unknown, and as his paper wanted to go one better than the Morning Herald, its great rival, Russell hurried back to London by special boat and train immediately the verdict was pronounced. As he got out of the cab in Printing House square a man in shirt sleeves, apparently a printer from the Times, came up and exclaimed: "So glad to see you safe over, sir. So they have found him guilty?" "Yes, guilty, my friend," replied Russell.

The Morning Herald came out with the news of the bare fact as well as the Times. The shirtsleeved man was a smart representative of the rival paper.—London Tatler.

Holland's Water Line.

The famous "water line" of Holland is really the final line of defense which Holland would make use of should she be invaded.

The "water line" is a line about seventy miles long by seven to eight miles wide. It is flooded by means of special sluices and dykes so constructed that the whole of the line can be covered to a depth of a foot and a half in two days.

In the ordinary way this water is drawn from the Rhine. In a case of great emergency, however, the sluices will also let free the waters of the Zuyder Zee. These waters, however, would only be let loose in the last extremity because, being salt, they would do an immense amount of damage to the land over which they flowed—damage which would take years to repair.—London Globe.

Shoes and Nerves.

Travelers say that the reason why nervous people don't exist in China is because it is the custom to wear soft shoes there. There is no doubt that hard soled, creaking footgear is responsible for such nervous wear and tear as well as physical fatigue in western lands.

Tired feet and tired nerves will find solace in a warm foot bath with a handful of salt in it. Move the feet about or keep them still, as best pleases you, as long as the water is pleasantly warm; then dry them with a rough towel and put on a fresh pair of stockings.—Family Doctor.

A Difficult Wife.

An Englishman thus described the wife of his bosom in his will:

"Heaven seems to have sent her into the world solely to drive me out of it. The strength of Samson, the genius of Homer, the prudence of Augustine, the skill of Pyrrhus, the patience of Job, the philosophy of Socrates, the subtlety of Hannibal, the vigilance of Hermogenes, would not suffice to subdue the perversity of her character."

FASHION FOR STRIPES.

STRIPED SILK GOWN.

A handsome afternoon frock of blue and white striped poesy willow taffeta is illustrated here.

The bodice, cut on the bias and folded into plaits, extends into a pointed hip yoke, held in at the waist line by a cording of the material. Suspenders of the taffeta are developed into a gathered, flaring collar with tabs over the shoulders. A tucked and frilled guimpe of cream daphne silk is worn. The short skirt, straight in front, flares in the back, the bottom being corded to

SHABBY WASTEBASKETS.

Fancy Covers Make Them Look Prettier Than Ever.

When the old wicker wastebasket has become shabby it can be easily renewed by incasing in a tight covering of colored silk and then adding a second and top covering of crocheted lace. The square, octagonal or paneled wastebasket can be readily fitted up with crochet lace.

Crochet panels of lace the width and length of each side of the basket. First baste each separate panel thus crocheted to the basket through the wicker, and then proceed to whip the panels together with white thread and an ordinary sewing needle.

Bind the top and bottom of the basket with ribbon to match the first layer of material used upon the basket and place bow at the side. The color used in making the basket should, of course, match the color scheme of the boudoir or bedroom for which the basket is intended.

Couldn't Then.

"Then why don't you try to marry 'em?"

"As I said, I want to enjoy 'em."—Kansas City Times.

"SANITO" COOKING UTENSILS

are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

BRITISH ADMIRAL FORCED TO FLEE TO THE PRINCESS

Lion Was Damaged Badly In Sunday's Action With Bluecher and Other German Cruisers

By HERBERT TEMPLE.

London, Jan. 27.—Official admission by the admiralty that the British cruiser Lion, the flagship of Vice Admiral Sir David Beatty, had been badly damaged in the North sea battle with the Germans on Sunday as well as the torpedo boat destroyer Meteor, was followed today by reports that the battle cruiser had been struck by a torpedo fired from a German submarine. Belief was also expressed that the Meteor, which had to be towed into port was disabled by a torpedo launched from a submarine which was co-operating with the underwater craft which attacked the Lion.

It is known that Vice Admiral Beatty transferred his flag to the Princess Royal after the Lion had been holed beneath the water line and some of her forward compartments had been flooded. When the Lion reached port in tow of the cruiser Indomitable, she was in a sinking condition. Other ships of Vice Admiral Beatty's squadron had narrow escapes from mines dropped by the fleeing German men-of-war.

The work of repairing the Lion and the Meteor will be commenced at once.

The Lion bore the brunt of the fighting on the British side, 17 members of her crew being wounded. The heaviest loss of life on the British side occurred on the cruiser Tiger, nine men and three officers being killed on this ship. The British lost 14 men in killed and had 29 wounded.

Damage inflicted on the Lion is believed to have given rise to the German report that one of the British warshaps had been sunk.

The transfer of Vice Admiral Beatty to the Princess Royal toward the close of the engagement was accompanied by an interesting incident. When the British commander climbed upon the deck he found the rail lined with grimy, half naked stokers and bluejackets, whose faces were streaked with burned powder. These men set up a cheer and shouted:

"Well done, David."

ROYAL AMNESTY GRANTED MANY GERMAN PRISONERS

By FREDERICK WERNER.

Berlin, (by wireless) Jan. 27.—An imperial decree of amnesty for persons undergoing punishment for minor offenses against the military law was issued here today upon the occasion of the Kaiser's birthday. Imperial clemency is thus extended to persons undergoing disciplinary punishment inflicted by the military commanders, to those upon whom fines have been levied and to those sentenced to six months or less by court martial. The decree also sanctions the annulment of investigations against soldiers on active duty for transgressions or offenses against the civil law committed prior to the call to arms. Another imperial decree orders that memorial leaflets expressing the profound sympathies of the Emperor and the government, be sent to the relatives of all warriors in the Prussian army, who "have fallen in battle in defense of the Fatherland, in recognition of the immortal faithfulness to duty even unto death which they have shown."

Divine services were held in all the churches in Berlin and in other cities throughout the Empire at which prayers were offered for the success of the German armies.

Special prayers were held for the members of the imperial court where prayers were made, imploring divine guidance for German army officers and German statesmen.

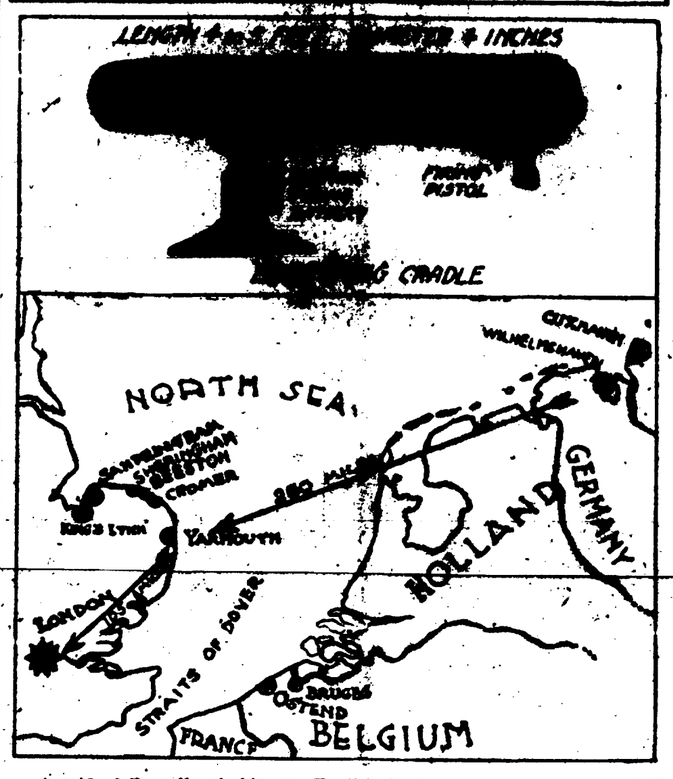
Festivities which otherwise might have marked the day were absent as a result of the special request recently made by the Emperor himself.

RUSSIANS ARE AGAIN ACTIVE IN E. PRUSSIA

By FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY.

Petrograd, Jan. 27.—German forces in East Prussia took the offensive on Sunday and gained some slight advantage in the region of Gumbienn, but the Russians made a number of counter attacks on Tuesday and regained practically all the lost ground. Fighting was severe yesterday, about Pillkallen, northeast of Gumbiennen. The Germans were driven several miles west of that town. Hard fighting is still in progress.

"The Russians in East Prussia resumed the offensive in the region of Pillkallen, and repulsed the enemy to the line of Mallwischken and Lasdensen (west and north of Pillkallen)" sayss an official statement issued here.



According to the same statement, the Austro-German forces in Galicia have resumed their attacks upon the Russians here energetically, but with slight success.

"The enemy's activity on the Galician front through Jasliska, Uzhok, Lowerecka and Maidank has increased," says the statement. "His energetic offensive has been repelled, however, in a battle in which we captured three officers and about 300 men."

The situation on the Bukowina front is unchanged. On the right bank of the lower Vistula in northern Poland only skirmishes and artillery duels are taking place.

West of Warsaw, on the left bank of the Vistula, the Germans are again showing great activity. The war office states that the Germans made sharp attacks in region of Borjimow and Gumin on the night of January 24 and on the following day, but were repulsed with heavy losses. Southeast of Skiernievico, at Grabskierudy and Rouda, two German batteries were silenced by the Russian artillery.

Further Zeppelin Raids Feared By England After Coast Attack:

A raid of Zeppelin airships on English North sea coast towns resulted in the death of several persons and the damage of much property. The raid occurred at night and was more spectacular than practical in its results. It served to further impress the people of England with the danger of an aerial raid. London at once prepared for the long expected visit from the German airships. Here is shown the latest type of aerial bomb used by the Zeppelins. It is shot forth from a launching cradle instead of dropped by hand. Better and surer results are thus obtained. A map showing the six towns attacked is also given.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

By BERNARD BELANCOURT.

Amsterdam, Jan. 27.—Emperor William is reported to htve arrived at Thielt late yesterday afternoon and advices from Sluis says that a great forward movement by the German troops in Flanders began early today. Passchendaele, between Roulers and Ypres, is said to have been occupied by the Germans, the allies making no attempt to hold it because it would be of no strategic advantage.

Sluis dispatches state that heavy artillery fire continued in southern Flanders all night in preparation for a great attack now under way in celebration of the Kaiser's birthday.

Vienna, via Berlin and Amsterdam, Jan. 27.—Another victory over the Russians was officially announced here today in the following report from the Austrian general staff: "In the valleys of the Rivers Ung, Latorcza and Nagy-Ag the enemy has been forced to evacuate important heights after repeated counter attacks in which he lost heacily."

The conflict along these three rivers has been very violent for two days.

GERMAN FLYING MACHINE CAPTURED BY BELGIANS

Paris, Jan. 27.—The official statement today states:

That a German flying machine that succeeded in flying over the Belgium army was destroyed yesterday in the region of Craone. The German army is maintaining its position in the trenches which were recaptured from the Germans. The text of the statement follows: "Near Nieuport and Ypres artillery combats occurred yesterday. A German flying machine was destroyed within the lines of the Belgium army. It is confirmed that near La Bas the Germans yesterday suffered a great check on the road from La Bas to Bechuen there were found the bodies of six officers and four hundred men. The total losses of the Germans therefore represent at least two battalions. From Lens to Soissons there were artillery combats. In the region of Perthes, Hill No. 200, four violent attacks by the enemy were repulsed. In the Argonne the German attack was driven back by the bayonet. At St. Mihiel we destroyed the new pontoon bridges of the enemy on the Meuse. The day was calm in Lorraine and in the Vosges."

Stock Owners to Be Reimbursed by U. S.

Washington, Jan. 27.—The Department of Agriculture announced today that it is now in a position to reimburse stock owners whose cattle were killed in the fight against the foot and mouth disease.

President Wilson made available $2,500,000 for the use in the campaign by the department, when he signed the urgent deficiency bill.

Up to Jan. 1, the outbreak had cost the Federal government $2,129,138.04. Of this, $1,840,328.99 represents Uncle Sam's half share of value of animals killed. Prior to January, 101,176 animals were slaughtered—46,268 cattle, 47,735 swine and the remainder sheep and goats.

Mile of Trenches Captured.

Berlin, Jan. 27.—The capture of nearly a mile of French trenches in Craonne region and of an important French point of support southeast of St. Mihiel is announced in an official report made by the General Staff to the war office this afternoon. In the fighting resulting in the taking of 1800 yards of points of support on the French frontier the German troops captured 855 wounded French men and also a depot in which were stored supplies for French sufferers and miners.

RUSSIANS "SHOOT UP" ONE ZEPPELIN, SEVEN PRISONERS

Airship Struck Big Shell, Fell Into Water Libau; Germans Fought for Liberty

By FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY.

Petrograd, Jan. 27.—The destruction of a German Zeppelin which bombarded Libau on Monday and the capture of the dirigible's crew of seven was officially announced by the Russian war office today in the following statement

"A German Zeppelin dropped nine bombs on Libau on Monday without doing any damage. The Zeppelin returned to the frontier, where she was shelled, falling into the sea near Wirgen. The airship sank, but her crew of seven men were made prisoners of war."

According to details given out at the war office, the Germans on the Zeppelin put up a fight against capture after their baloon had fallen. The following account of the Zeppelin raid and its ignominious finish is compiled from the official details.

"The Zeppelin, which was numbered 19, appeared at Libau about 10 o'clock Monday morning. After dropping several bombs the airship turned toward the south, with the evident intention of trying to get away. The ship was struck by a shell from a Russian gun and fell into the water about a mile off shore near Bernaton. A number of Russian vessels set out from the shore, firing as they went. Those on board the Zeppelin replied with rifles, but the fight was of short duration. The crew of the Zeppelin, consisting of the commander, three officers and three sailors surrendered. An attempt was made to tow the Zeppelin inshore, but it was impossible and accordingly the airship was sunk."

"BRITISH PEOPLE" GONGRATULATE KAISER ON HIS BIRTHDAY

London, Jan. 27.—The following despatch was filed in a London telegraph office today: "Wilhelm, Imperator et Rex, Berlin—Congratulations on your birthday. Remember St. Helena. There will be no Elba." The sender of the dispatch is signed the "British People." It is probable that the censor will prevent the pointed allusion to Napoleon's fate from reaching the Kaiser.

KAISER'S NATAL DAY SPENT WITH TROOPS

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK.

Paris, Jan. 27.—Official dispatches from the front show that, in the fighting by which the Germans hoped to achieve a victory for the Kaiser on his birthday, today, the severest attacks were concentrated against the British. A series of violent assaults were launched against the English troops in West Flanders and in northern France along the La Basse canal and the Bethuen road.

Hard fighting is not confined to these districts alone, however. The renewed pressure to the Germans on the Aisne indicate that they may try to debouch to the south bank in the vicinity of Soissons, for their artillery has been violently shelling the French lines and the French anticipated that this cannonade would be followed by an attempt to throw pontoon bridges across the river.

Near Soissons, it is said, the Germans are near enough to the river to make such an attempt. These positions are advanced lines, however, and the bulk of the troops on that part of the German right center remain in their original trenches south and southwest of Laon.

Emperor William is believed to have gone to the headquarters of one of his commanding generals in Belgium or France for his birthday. Reports agree that he is somewhere in the field in the western theater of war.

North of Rheims, in the neighborhood of the plateau of the Craone, the Germans have been trying to dislodge French artillery which has proved troublesome to the German trenches. These attacks, however, have failed.

The fierce fighting which was in progress in the northern part of the Argonne for some days, has now given way to skirmishing.

On the Meuse the hard pressed German army at St. Mihiel attempted some night attacks, but these were revealed by the searchlights of the French.

That the French attacks in Alsace-Lorraine are causing great apprehension in Germany is shown by the fact that trenches are being dug along the Rhine to reinforce the already strong defensive works in that region.

It is reported from Belgium that the Germans are constructing a railway from Aix la Chappelle to Vise.

GERMAN CRUISER DAMAGED BY TORPEDO IN BALTIC

By FREDERICK WERNER.

Berlin, (by wireless) Jan. 27.—Official announcement was made today that the German cruiser Gazelle was torpedoed on January 27 in the Baltic sea. While the statement issued by the admiralty does not say so, it is believed here that the Gazelle was attacked by a Russian submarine or todpedo boat. The statement follows:

"Aceording to reliable information, the small cruiser Gazelle was torpedoed January 25 near Rugen. It suffered slight damage and has arrived at an eastern sea harbor. There was no loss of life."

The Gazelle is a ship of 2645 tons and carries an crew of 264 men.

A Copenhagen dispatch yesterday stated that the Gazelle was towed to Sassnitz, Germany, after being torpedoed.

STATE SAVES MANY LIVES

Decrease Outside New York City Greater Than That in Metropolis

New York, March 5.—A saving of more than 2,000 lives in the State outside of New York city is indicated by the decrease of five points in the death rate, from 15.8 per 1000 population in 1913 to 15.3 in 1914. These figures are based on the United States Census estimate of population. New York city, which for twenty years has had a more progressive health administration than the rest of the State, still enjoys a lower death rate. There was a greater decrease in the death rate, however, in the section outside of the city than in the Metropolis in 1914. Based on the United States Census estimate, the death rate in the city decreased from 14.2 to 14.0 making a drop of only .2 for the city as against a reduction of .5 for the rest of the State.

Commenting on the facts the S. C. A. A. News, the official publication of the State Charities Aid Association says: "In the campaign for the passage of the public health law and for the reorganization of the State Health Department a chart was used, showing the great and ever widening gap between the death rate of New York city and that for the relatively rural sections of th State. It was then pointed out that this gap proved he need for a reorganization of the State's health activities. When Dr. Hermann M. Biggs, the new Commissioner of Health, took office, his job was definitely that of reducing the death rate outside of New York city, so that it would at least coincide, if not go lower than that in the Metropolis.

"To accomplish his the Department had as a working tool a modern health law, which has since been the model for many revisions of health statutes in other states. It fell to the lot of the State Charities Aid Association, by reason of its interest in tuberculosis, mental hygiene and other health work, to assist in the investigation upon which the law was based. It was also among the leaders in advocating its passage. Public health journals and other health work, to assist in the investigation upon which that law was based. It was also among the leaders in advoting its passage. Public health journals and medical journals in all parts of the country have declared the law to be a progressive and scientific statute but the test of a health law is in the lives it saves. The test of a Health Department's efficiency is not merely in the way it works but in the results of its work.

A Progressive Law

"Judged by these tests the State Department of Health, with a saving of more than 2000 lives to its credit in the first year of its activity, proves itself well on the way toward the fulfillment of its announced promise to save 25,000 lives in this State in the next five years.

"To bring this about the Department needs adequate appropriations. 25,000 readers of the S. C. A. A. News interested themselves in the passage of the law and still watch with ever increasing interest the work the the Department and the proposed changes in the law—whether for good or ill. We trust they will use their best endeavor to convince their local representatives in the legislature that the people of the State believe not only that 'Public Health is Purchasable' but also that the State should stay in the market and purchase it.

"The new law established an adequate field force of sanitary supervisors; provided for a Public Health Council to enact a state sanitary code; specified the duties of health officers and fixed a minimum wage for them to insure adequate compensation for the perfomance of these new duties. All these things cost money but if they save lives the money is well spent. For the first time in the history of the State the Health Department's book-keeping, the vital statistics, may be relied on to tell the truth. Those figures show that the taxpayers are getting lives in return for their money."

FILM FREEDOM WANTED NOW

Censorship Law Being Backed By Politician It Is Said

Phila., Pa., Mar. 5.—In a public meeting of protest against the censorship law of Pennsylvania registered at the Forrest theatre yesterday afternoon a demand for a freedom of the "movies" as untrammeled as the freedom of speech and the freedom of the press has been in English-speaking countries for the last 150 years."

While an audience that packed the lower floor of the building enthusiastically applauded, four speakers demanded the repeal of the law. They were Charles Segall, president of the league; Frank S. Bush, of the Moving Picture World, of New York; Samuel Wheeler, of the Belmont, 52d street and and Apollo Theatres, and Jacob W. Binder, of New York, a member of the National Board of Censorship. Their objection to the act is that it gives one man and one woman, "political appointees, the right to determine what is good and what is bad for the 8,000,000 people of Pennsylvania."

No formal action was taken at the meeting. Two pictures were shown, a rural comedy, approved by State Censor J. Louis Breitinger, and a serious drama, "The Silent Plea," designed in the interests of mothers' pension legislation, without such approval.

League members, however, did not last night expect any action from Censor Breitlinger on this score. "The play contained absolutely no objectionable features," said J. Emmanuel, manager of the Ridge Avenue Theatre, "and since no admission was charged, was not technically a theatrical performance. It was simply a private view to which the public was invited."

"The moving picture can be kept decent without the censor," said Mr. Bush. "The common law, which punishes obscenity, indecency and immorality in the press and on the platform, is ample to deal with the screen.

"When you see a picture that strikes you as being immoral," said Mr. Wheeler, "swear out a warrant for the producer and the manufacturer of the film, and the law will take care of the punishment."

"The only explanation for the existence of this law," he said, "is that somebody wanted a job and somebody got it. It isn't so bad now, while the chief censor is only getting $1500 a year and his assistant $1200, but under the new law which Mr. Breitinger is urging upon the Legislature he would receive a salary of $3000 and his assistant would receive $2500; and I understand, further, that there are provisions in the bill for the appointment of some 27 new assistants.

"Back of Mr. Breitinger and his censorship agitation there are just two interests, the liquor dealers and the politicians. The liquor dealer is against the moving-picture theatre because it is taking his best customers away from him. I mean the workingmen. The politician is for censorship because he knows that through the censor he can control the theatre; that he can suppress absolutely any film which reflects on the practices or the members of his party.

"It's the people's fault that we've got this law," he said in closing. "They haven't paid enough attention to its provisions, and they haven't paid enough attention to the interests behind it."

Censorship was a weapon which governments in reactionary countries of Europe used to suppress freedom of thought," Mr. Bush said. They were using it that way in America already. Out in Ohio the censor had rejected a film satirizing the hypocritical sweat shop employer on the grounds that it "tended to promote class hatreds."

SCHWAB TO BUILD AN ATHLETIC FIELD

Buys Eighty-two Acres in a Prominent Part of Bethlehem

Bethlehem, Pa.—Negotiations were completed today between Charles M. Schwab and the congregation of the Moravian church, which owns the land, whereby Mr. Schwab becomes the owner of 82 acres of land in a prominent part of town on which he will build a modern athletic field where 10,000 employes can indulge in all kinds of athletic sports. It will also be open to residents of the Bethlehems.

A quarter-mile running track, baseball diamonds, soccer field, tennis courts, etc., will be laid out at once. Mr. Schwab paid $20,340 for the land and will spend thousands more in converting it into an athletic field. He will erect a field house, which will cost perhaps $50,000 or more.

WALKED WITH BOSSIES OUT OF QUARANTINE

Consternation Reigned After Holstein Friesian Sale in Syracuse on Monday.

Elmer Taylor has added to his herd another Holstein-Friesian cow which holds a record of 26 pounds of butter per week.

Mr. Taylor purchased the animal at the sale in Syracuse on Wednesday, and as a quarantine was declared on Onondaga county at the hour of 5 p.m. there was some "tall scrambling" according to Mr. Taylor for the buyers to get their cattle from that county with but an hour's notice. The sale closed at four o'clock. Motor trucks and every mode of conveyance possible was pressed into service.

In company with a friend, who had also purchased a cow, the two, or four rather, hiked for Three Rivers point, a distance of 14 miles, to reach a point where the Bossies would be out of reach of quarantine.

BOY SCOUTS WILL GIVE PICTURE BENEFIT

Local Boy Scouts will give a benefit at the Quirk theatre Tuesday evening, March 9. The proceeds will be used in building a cabin in a piece of woodland somewhere on the outskirts of the city, and which may be used as an objective point on hikes and also for camp.

The film chosen for this benefit is "The Adventures of a Boy Scout." The pictures trace the value of the Scout movement, and interwoven is the tale of Tom, a waif, who becomes a most useful member of society after becoming a Scout.

The boys should be encouraged in their maiden effort at a benefit, and may realize enough to bring forth their dream of a cabin in the woods.

James N. Robinson announces a postponement of the regular meeting of Troop I, that the members may be free to take advantage of the opportunity to see the films at the Quirk. The next meeting of Troop I will be held March 16.

The amount to be raised by each town is $23,000. About $50,000 will be needed to pay the state's share. The bridge will be 300 feet south of Benson avenue in Minetto.

MOTHER DEFENDS HER DAUGHTER

Believes Young Woman to Have Been Deranged Temporarily

New York, Mar. 5.—Almost prostrated by grief over the death of her daughter, Lillian May Cook, the mother of the girl who was found shot to death near New Haven, Ct., yesterday, today declared her belief that the girl was temporarily insane when she ended her life.

"My daughter was a good girl," sobbed the stricken mother. "She had worried because her father had lost his lost place and had overworked in an attempt to fit herself for a better position."

While the mother and eight brothers and sisters of the dead girl grieved in their little Brooklyn home, the father, Frank H. Cook, was on his way to claim the body of his daughter as soon as the inquest at New Haven was over.

n the meantime the Brooklyn detective bureau began an investigation to determine whether there had been any violation of the white slave act in transporting the Cook girl from Brooklyn to New Haven, where she entered the employ of Virginius I. Mayo, president of the Mayo Radiator company.

SISTERS DIE SAME DAY; TO BE BURIED TOGETHER

Crawfordsville, Ind., Mar. 5.—The pitiful prayers of two sisters that they die on the same ay have been answered. Icy May Griffith and Nellie Sylvia Griffith are dead today. The grim reaper took both lives within two years. Icy was 20 years old, Nellie 23. They have been sufferers from tuberculosis. There was no hope of a cure. They knew that death would sooner or later grasp them. They had been companions throughout life, each sympathizing with the other in their sufferings. Day and night they prayed that when the end came both would go. The younger sister was the first to go. The older one did not have to mourn long. She soon passed away. Both will be buried in the same grave.

Woodlots of the State

In continuing studies of the forest resources of New York begun in 1911, The New York State College at Syracuse University finds that about one-third of the remaining timber lands in the State belongs to farmers. There is a much larger amount of timber being cut from these woodlands annually than is realized even by the wood-using industries of the State. The farm woodlot promises to be one of the large sources of timber supply in the future.

Very few farm woodlots in the State of New York are in thrifty growing condition. They are run down and in an unprofitable condition as the result of repeated surface fires and careless cutting of trees. The College of Forestry urges a heavy cutting for many of the woodlots as such a cutting will remove trees of undesirable kinds as well as diseased and defective trees. In every woodlot there are many tree weeds such as Ironwood, Blue Beech, Hawthorne, Dogwood and these weeds are occupying ground in the place of more valuable trees such as Ash, Basswood and the rapidly growing evergreens. In some instances to bring the woodlot back to a favorable condition, it trees among the older trees of the woodlot. It would be better to use rapidly growing evergreens as the new blood and in most instances these evergreens will grow to commercial naturity twice as quickly as such broad leaves as the Ash or Oak.

Most woodlot owners have been using their woodlots as pastures. The College of Forestry in studying the woodlots of the State finds it is out of the question to attempt to grow trees and stock on the same ground. In the first place, grass grown in the shade of trees has but a small precentage of the forage value of grass grown in the open sunshine, and secondly, cows or horses in a woodlot will trample and browse the young trees in a way that is very disasterous to the woodlot. If some shade is necessary for the stock, the College urges the fencing off of a small section of the woodlot and the giving over of this section entirely to the stock. The remaining portion of the woodlot can then be improved by taking out the defective trees and replacing with rapid growing evergreens or hardwoods.

Frank F. Moon, Professor of Forest Engineering in The State College of Forestry, has been studying for several years the various phases of woodlot production, management and marketing. He fels that the most important question for the next few years is the development of the right kind of a market for the timber in a market basket—so to speak. They should be able to sell by the carload lot and the College believe this can be done in New York through reasonable cooperation among woodlot owners. The College will issue within a few weeks a bulletin on the woodlots of the State, giving results of Professor Moon's studies in which suggestions will be given not only for the proper protection and care of the woodlot but for its profitable marketing. This report should be of help to woodlot owners.

BILL WOULD SAVE THE FLY FROM SWATTING

Albany, March 5.—The passage of the Boylan bill, intended to prohibit animal experimentation in the public school, would mean an end to the "swat the fly" campaigns waged in New York class rooms, Paul B. Mann professor of biology in a New York high school, told joint legislative committees.

Prof. Mann was one of the opponents of three anti-vivisection bills on which there was a hearing. He declared that the Boylan bill, if enacted, would prohibit experiments of any kind on any live animal or insect in schools.

"This measure, if it becomes a law, would emasculate the courses of biology and physiology in every public school in the State," he said. "It would prohibit stirring up the water of a fish aquarium so that the children might study the use of fins. It would be unlawful to have live frog jump about a table so that students might study the act of jumping. It would prohibit killing mosquitoes and every time I swatted a fly I would be in danger of losing my license. The study of transmigration of birds would have to end because we would be prohibited from fastening a copper band, bearing an address, about the leg of birds."

The bills were advocated by Mrs. Sarah W. Lyons of Albany and Dr. J. D. Harrigan of Carmel, representing the State Anti-vivisection Society, and H. B. Barbour of New York, appearing for the Society for Prevention of Abuses in Animal Experimentation. They argued that vivisection as practiced now virtually unrestricted, resulted in needless cruelty to animals.

DARDANELLES FORTS ARE CRUMBLING

army that was rushed into northern France to outflank the Germans when the Teutonic hosts began its retreat after the battle of the Marne.

A Turkish army of equal strength has been organized on both sides of the Dardanelles, near the junction of that waterway and the Sea of Marmora, to resist the advance of the allies. The Anglo-French army of invasion will attempt to push through inland and occupy Constantinople.

Although the Turkish military minimize the importance of the allies' victory, declarging that the Turkish forts at the eastern entrance of the Dardanelles were old and insecure British naval experts who are acquainted with conditions on the Dardanelles express the opinion that there are only two remaining works of any consequence.

Working ships in relays, the fleet which is smashing the Turkish defenses has been able thus far to carry out minuately the plans of Vice-Admiral Carden. But while the ships have been able to penetrate the waterway for fifteen miles, they have still got a difficult stretch to navigate. The Bosphorus, which lies between the Sea of Marmora and the Golden Hornfi is a narrow piece of water noted for its treacherous currents. The ships will not be able to maneuver when they get within that waterway and will offer excellent targets for the Turkish guns mounted along its shores.

The fleet is still approximately 150 miles from Constantinople but the British are placing implicit faith in the big guns of the war fleet and the superior fighting ability of the English and French to blaze the way to the Turkish capital.

FRENCH BOMBARDING GERMANS IN RHEIMS

By Franklin P. Merrick

Paris, Mar. 5.—Ostend is being vigorously bombarded by long range artillery of the French and Belgians, according to a dispatch from St. Omer. The German sand works among the duns on the North seacoast are also being attacked by the allies. Official dispatches still dwell upon operations in Champagne. It is evident that General Joffre, commander-in-chief of the allied armies, is determined to keep pounding away at the German left without any halt. During the past three weeks of fighting between Rheims and the Argonne the French have gained from five to eight miles at various points, particularly north of the old Roman road near Souain, Perthes, Mesnil and Beausejour.

In the Vosges, the region of St. Die, severe fighting is in progress. The Germans have been trying without success to outflank the French forces operating in the Fecht valley west of Colmar.

Bunions and Rank.

"It is extraordinary," writes Sir Henry Drummond Wolff in "Rambling Recollections," "to observe in England the weakness that most people have for boasting of their friends in high places and the deference that they show to them. The daughter of a lady of very high rank had some pain in her foot which the mother asked the governess to be good enough to look at. The latter after examining it said, 'If it were not for her ladyship's exalted rank I should say it was a bunion.'"

War: Pathos and Humor

London, March 5.—A lucky escape from drowning by two English officers during the Boer war probably is responsible for such success as so far has been achieved by the British expeditionary force now fighting against the Kaiser's legions in France.

During the fighting in South Africa, on the day of General Cronje's memorable surrender, a British general started to ford a stream. The raging torrent frightened his horse, which reared, slipped and fell. The general was flung into the water.

His assistant adjutant general rushed to the rescue. His charger, too, became frightened by the water and fell.

For a moment the lives of both the general and his right-hand man were in imminent jeopardy, for the two men were entangled in the trapplings of their horses. But by great good luck they wriggled themselves free, swam desperately for shore, and reached it drenched through to the skin.

The first of these two men who came near to losing their lives on that eventful day was General French; the second was Colonel Haig. If these two had been drowned, the position of affairs in the western theatre of war today would be very different from what it is. For it was French who managed that astounding retreat from Mons and who kept the Germans out of Calais; and it is Haig who after French, has gained more personal glory in the European war than any other British general.

Haig's rise to fame has been a brilliant dash. He holds the record for promotion among cavalry officrs, having risen in eight years from captain to major-general. So rapid has been his ascent that he has been called the "luckiest man in the British army," and the phrase "Haig's luck" has become a proverb among soldiers. But "luck" is an unfair word in the present case. Shakespeare says that "there is a tide in the affairs of men, which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune." Haig has always known how to take the tide of his affairs at the flood, and that is one of the reasons why he is a great leader of soldiers.

It is not a little startling to reflect today that thanks to the red-tape of the authorities, we nearly lost Haig as an officer altogether. As a young man he applied for entry to the Staff college. The examiners, however, declared, that though he was physically as fit as a fiddle, he was also color-blind—and they rejected him forthwith.

Haig's way, however, is not the sit-down and take-it smiling way. It is rather, as a writer has put it, the up-guards-and-at-'em way, and Haig set about getting the verdict of the examiners reversed. He went to London, and to Paris, and to every likely center for advise and eventually he went to the commander-in-chief himself—a bold thing for a young man to do—and laid his case before him. The results was that he was given a special order without delay, and, despite his terrible infirmity of color-blindness—which was in reality very slight—was admitted to the college.

In 1885 Haig joined the 7th Hussars. He first smelt powder in the Sudan campaign of 1898, when Kitchener avenged General Gordon and took Khartoum. Kitchener very quickly formed a high opinion of the young man's capabilities,and entrusted him with the final cavalry reconnaisance before the battles of Atbara and Khartoum. He was mentioned in dispatches for his efficiency, and the phrase "Haig's luck" began to gain currency.

Then came the Boer war. Haig was quickly appointed to Natal as assistant-adjutant-general of cavalry, and at Elandslangte it was largely due to his able assistance that General French handled his men so beautifully, and timed and kept the whole operation so well in hand.

So valuable a henchman did Haig prove himself on this occasion that when French was recalled to Cape Town he took Sir Douglas with him to act as his chief staff officer. In this capacity Haig distinguished himself during the operations at Colesburg, where he acted by turns, as he himself has stated, as "commander-in-chief and office-boy."

Haig won two medals and nine clasps altogether in South Africa, and among the many honors given him on his return was that of extra aide-de-camp to King Edward. His medals are so numerous that only what is called a "swanker" in popular parlance would wear them all simultaneously.

His genius for startegy and tactics has been the admiration of all who have served under him, and it is said that a young officer never learns more than when he has the good fortune to take part in a Haig conference.

His qualifications for the present war are well established in many ways. For many years he has studied the methods of German cavalry leaders. He knows all the tricks of the Uhlan trade, and he knows how to foil them. And it is reassuring to recollect that he once expressed an opinion that the German cavalry of today was not of a very high order, and that, taken for a man, our cavalry are far supreior.

In view of all this, it is not surprising that he should have been given an army corps to command in the experitionary force, and it is even less surprising that he should have covered himself with so much glory in the performance of his duties. In one of his first dispatches General French spoke of Haig's work in the following unusual terms of praise:

"At the same time information reached me from Sir Douglas Haig that his first division was also heavily engaged south and west of Maroilles. I sent urgent messages to the commander of the two French reserve division on my right to come up to the assistance of the first corps, which he eventually did. Partly owing to the assistance, but mainly to the skillful manner in which Sir Douglas Haig extricated his corps from an exceptionally difficult position in the darkness of the night, they were able at dawn to resume their march south towards Wassigny-on Guise."

In October, "lucky Haig" came in for another eulogy from his grateful commander.

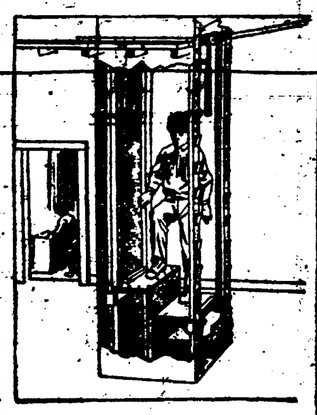
"The action of the first corps on this day under the command of Sir Douglas Haig," wrote Sir John, "was of so skillful, bold and decisive a character that he gained positions which alone have enabled me to maintain my position for more than three weeks of very severe fighting on the north bank of the river. I cannot speak too highly of the valuable services rendered by Sir Douglas Haig and the army corps under his command."

Haig himself is so modest that he would be the last to take to the glory for these brilliant achievements. When he came back on furlough to England for a few days recently he said that "it was the men that were helped by their confidence in Haig, and Haig was helped by did it." In reality it was, of course, a little bit of both; the men his confidence in men.

Haig is only fifty-three years old, having passed some thirty of these in the army, so he is a very young man, as generals go. But he is not only a good soldier. He is something of an author, too. His "Cavalry Studies" show him at his best, while he also wrote the "Cavalry Drill Book" in collaboration with Sir John French.

In society he is as popular as he is in the army. He is very wealthy, very good-looking, and when he is at home he plays polo like a champion, and hunts like a fine sportsman. His hurricane marriage, which caused a considerable flutter in the dovecotes of Mayfair, was characteristic of the man, for he met his future wife on a Monday, proposed to her on the following Saturday, and married her with a fortnight.

That is Haig's way—the way of a dashing cavalryman.



POPULAR MECHANICS

New Plan of Ore Concentration.

There is a new system coming into general use in copper metallurgy as well as in the treatment of other metals which, while essentially concentration, differs radically from the older idea of that process. The new plan is now generally referred to as flotation. In the practice of flotation the separation of metallic sulphides is made in a manner exactly opposite to that followed in ordinary concentration. Instead of settling the sulphides, they are made to float upon the surface of the pulps and are skimmed off. The basis of the method was discovered by an American woman, Miss Carrie J. Everson of Denver. It is recounted that Miss Everson's brother, who was an assayer, turned over to her some sacks which had contained concentrates to be cleaned. She washed them in soap and water and in the process noticed that the sulphides floated, while the siliceous gangue sank to the bottom." Being a woman of intelligence, she realized that she had made a discovery and took out a patent covering the flotation of metallic sulphides by the use of oil and water.—Engineering Magazine.

An Ingenious Elevator.

A novel and ingenious combination of elevator and stairway has been invented for use in places where lack of space prohibits the installation of either an elevator or a stairway, says Popular Mechanics. The apparatus consists of two steps that operate in a small shaft and move up or down alternately under the pressure of the foot. At each corner of the shaft is a post with its outer face provided with spaced teeth, and the front and rear posts are used respectively for supporting the front and rear steps. Each step is provided with a counterweight and is supported on the posts by means of hinged arms that engage the teeth. In ascending one stands on one step and allows the other to rise a convenient distance under the action of the counterweight, when the hinged arm engages the teeth in the higher position and holds the step in place. The steps are worked alternately in this fashion until the desired floor is reached. In descending the steps are released alternately by pressure of the foot against strips that control the arms, and the steps are forced down to the next lower level. Means for holding the steps stationary at each floor are provided, while ropes suspended from the steps and so arranged as to release the arms from the teeth allow the apparatus to be pulled down readily by a person on a lower floor.

STAIRWAY AND ELEVATOR.

Tin Rapidly Disappearing.

With regard to the future use of tin, it may be said that we are dealing with the one metal whose known ore reserves are entirely inadequate to even the present demands and that, unless some new source of supply is developed very soon we may expect to find that tin is a very scarce metal indeed, says the Engineering Magazine. Of the present sources of tin ore supply most are either stationary or receding in output, Bolivia being the only one which gives promise of permanency and of future growth. Under these conditions the question of substitute metals becomes of importance, and aluminium, zinc and steel all have some possibilities in this direction in one way or another.

BAGGING A HIPPO.

How It Is Done and How the Flesh of the Animal Tastes.

There are two ways of bagging a hippopotamus, says a writer in the Wide World Magazine, and neither is justified unless the sportsman is sorely in want of food, for its meat is very poor indeed and wants a good deal of preparation to be palatable to any one except the starving. It has a taste I can only describe as fishy, something what beef would taste like after being wrapped up for a couple of days with a Scotch haddock of doubtful freshness.

The hippo may be shot in water. When mortally wounded he will sink and will not reappear on the surface for several hours, consequently a tiring lookout has to be kept for the carcass. If he is only slightly wounded he may charge, but more often he will flee and die in the reeds to serve as food for scavenger birds or crocodiles.

The other and more sporting way is to shoot him on land. This is, as a rule, only possible at night or late in the evening and early in the morning. It would not be wise to find oneself between the river and the wounded hippo, for he at once makes for the water by the shortest route, and he goes so fast that getting out of his way requires pretty speedy feet and great coolness of nerve.

FORCES OF NATURE.

Soft Their Touch, but Constant and Effective Their Work.

What adds to the wonder of the earth's grist is that the millstones that did the work and are still doing it are the gentle forces that career above our heads—the sunbeam, the cloud, the air, the frost. The rain's gentle fall, the air's velvet touch, the sun's noiseless rays, the frost's exquisite crystals, these combined are the agents that crush the rocks, pulverise the mountains and transform continents of sterile granite into a world of fertile soil.

It is as if baby fingers did the work of powder and dynamite. Give the clouds and the sunbeams time enough and the Alps and the Andes disappear before them or are transformed into plains where corn may grow and cattle graze.

The snow falls as lightly as down and lies almost as lightly, yet the crags tumble beneath it; compacted by gravity, out of it grew the tremendous ice sheet that ground off the mountain summits, that scooped out lakes and valleys and modeled our northern landscapes as the sculptor his clay image.—John Burroughs.

The Distinguished Guest.

Captain Raabe was a man whose name had weight in the French cavalry. He was a tall man, belonging to the middle aged trooper type. With military qualities of the highest kind, he had a singular bearing, a savage sort of misanthropy and a cynical tongue, which stood in the way of promotion. When he was in the Sixth lancers, on garrison duty at Commercy, one of his comrades brought his father to dine with him at the officers' mess, a man of humble position and unpretentiously dressed. Captain Raabe, considering that this guest had not been fitly received, gave expression to his opinion, saying that if the executioner of Commercy had come in evening dress he would have had a better reception. The officers demurring, he made no rejoinder, but shortly afterward came to mess with a guest whose dress was irreproachable. Every one lavished attentions on the unknown. When dinner was over Captain Raabe, raising his glass, proposed the health of "the executioner of Commercy."

Sir Isaac Newton.

The discovery of gravitation was the first of many great ideas that came to "the greatest original thinker of all time." Newton was also the pioneer in announcing the physical properties of light. His epitaph, translated from the Latin, on his monument in Westminster Abbey describes in a few words the greatest accomplishments of Newton. It reads:

"Here lies Isaac Newton, who by vigor of mind always supernatural first demonstrated the motions and figures of the planets, the paths of the comets and the tides of the ocean. He discovered what before his time no one had even suspected, that rays of light are differently refrangible and that this is the cause of colors."

GAMBLING ON THE WEATHER

Albany, N. Y., Mar.—Twenty-three hundred dollars profit a day on the weather sounds like easy money.

That is the rake-off said to be made daily by a syndicate operating from Albany, which makes pools on the weather. This concern sells an average of 20,000 tickets each day, pays out $700 in prizes and pockets the balance—$2,300.

Gambling on the weather has become an institution throughout a great part of the United States. Everybody knows that the weather over this broad country is uncertain and that to bet on it is a real gamble. Yet at least two syndicates in New York State are making a profit out of weather pools.

The syndicate here is operated by the same gentlemen who give the public a chance to bet on baseball games in smmer. The syndicate is usually on the sunny side of East street, no matter what the temperature, which usually is zero for the bettors.

In the weather pool, the system is much the same as in the baseball pool.

The English Lloyd's, has long been betting on the weather, in a sense. If rain on a certain day would mean a financial loss, Lloyd's for a small premium, will insure against rain on that day. But these weather pools are entirely new; only those who buy tickets in them and the syndicate's numerous agents are supposed to know of their existence but it is possible that the police of certain cities know.

Those who buy tickets do so blindly. In the 15 cent pool there is handed or sent to a player a sealed envelope containing a card on which are the names of four cities from this list:

Atlantic City, N.J.; Buffalo, N.Y.; Boston, Mass.; Cleveland, O.; Chicago, Ill.; Charleston, S.C.; Des Moines, Ia.; Denver, Col.; Detroit, Mich.; Eastport, Me.; Galveston, Tex.; Jacksonville, Fla.; Kansas City, Mo.; Louisville, Ky.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Montgomery, Ala.; Memphis, Tenn.; New Orleans, La.; New York, N.Y.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; Portland, Ore.; Phoenix, Ariz.; Rosewell, N. M.; Raleigh, N.C.; San Diego, Cal.; San Francisco, Cal.; Scranton, Pa.; St. Louis, Mo.; Salt Lake City, Utah; Syracuse, N.Y.; Tampa, Fla.; and Washington, D. C.

The weather gambler must take the ticket sent to him in the sealed envelope. On it he writes his guess as to what the temperature will be the next day in the four cities the names of which it bears.

First prize goes to him whose four correct guesses form the highest sum total in a given pool. Reports of the Weather Bureau at Washington decide the pools.

The first prize given by the Albany syndicate is $150; the second prize, $75; third, $50; fourth, $45; fifth, $40; sixth, $35; seventh, $30; eighth, $25. As in the baseball pools, there are "booby" prizes for those whose guesses are furthest from the correct total. These are: First prize, $50; second, $30; third, $20. There are also twenty special prizes of $5 each, and twenty of $2.50. These players win whether their guesses are high or low. "Special prize" and the amount is written on the back of forty tickets, probably to create the impression that even the syndicate does not know what ticket a sealed envelop contains. But there is a strong suspicion that the poolmakers know very well. The players cannot be certain that the pools are conducted honestly.

A 25-cent pool has its office at a point in the Susquehanna Valley. In its whoodling literature this syndicate explains:

"The combination that a patron wishes to play is selected as follows: He picks an six different numbers, one to thirty inclusive. These numbers will represent six different cities, one for each day of the (following) week, starting with Sunday. At the time a patron picks those six numbers he does not know, nor do we know, what cities they will represent. Each Saturday a drawing is made to determine what the number of each city shall be for the following week, and the result of this drawing is immediately sent to agents, along with the list of winners for the previous week.

SEARCHLIGHTS IN WAR.

How They Are Worked by Distant Control in Land Operations.

In modern warfare the searchlight is invaluable. On dark nights at sea it is the only means of guarding against torpedo boats, which its beams will reveal at a distance of two miles and more.

On shore it is the electric eye of the army. It is carried to all parts of the field of action by motor truck, and the motor that propels the vehicle drives the electric generator that supplies the current for the light.

Most of these field searchlights are not directed by hand, for each instrument is fitted with what is known as the distant control. Two small motors govern the vertical and the horisontal movements of the light. From them an electric cable runs to the station of the operater, who, although he may be several hundred feet away, can send the rays of the light in any direction he pleases.

According to the Navy and Army Illustrated, one advantage of this distant control is that the objects picked up by the beam of light can be sighted more quickly and more definitely, for

A BABEL OF TONGUES.

The World's Languages Now and What May Be in the Future.

How many men, if asked how many languages there are in the world, could give anything like an accurate answer? The average man's knowledge or ability to speak languages rarely exceeds two besides his native tongue.

It may appear strange, but it is nevertheless true, that there are over 4,000 languages spoken by mankind, while the number of dialects exceeds this. There are more than sixty vocabularies in Brazil, and in Mexico the Nahua is broken up into some 700 dialects. There are hundreds in Borneo, and in Australia there is no classifying the complexities. Let us assume that fifty dialects, on an average, belong to each language and we have the colossal total of 200,000 linguistic abilities.

A century hence the probability is that there will only be four languages of importance in the world. Central Europe may produce a newer and more straightforward German language. Imperial English may reign alone over the North American continent, while a more businesslike Spanish will be used in South American states. Then Russia may take on some more rich Slavonic dialect, which will blend the races of eastern Europe and central Asia into a harmonious federation. So that in future these four languages will enter into what may be a never ending competition.—Exchange.

FULL TEXT OF DECLARATION OF LONDON ON NAVAL WAR

Code Defines Blockade, Search and Seizure, Convoy, Rights of Neutrals and Belligerents.

Agreed Rules Correspond In Substance With Recognized Principles of International Law.

HEREWITH is printed the text of the "declaration of London" defining blockades, search and seizure, convoy and rights of neutrals and belligerents as signed by the delegates of the powers in 1909. In this declaration it is to be noted that the signatory powers agree that the rules of naval warfare it lays down "correspond in substance with the generally recognized principles of international law." It merely declares the "law of nations as it has existed and has been enforced." It is claimed that the fact that the declaration is itself not binding, because not all the powers have ratified it in its present form, does not mean at all that the recognized principles of international law on which it is based are not effective.

The declaration was signed by representatives of Germany, the United States, Austria-Hungary, France, Great Britain and the Netherlands.

Following the introductory paragraphs the declaration goes on as follows:

CHAPTER I.—BLOCKADE IN TIME OF WAR.

Article 1—A blockade must not extend beyond the ports and coasts belonging to or occupied by the enemy.

2—In accordance with the declaration of Paris of 1856 a blockade, in order to be binding, must be effective—that is to say, it must be maintained by a force sufficient really to prevent access to the enemy coast line.

3—The question whether a blockade is effective is a question of fact.

4—A blockade is not regarded as raised if the blockading force is temporarily withdrawn on account of stress of weather.

5—A blockade must be applied impartially to the ships of all nations.

6—The commander of a blockading force may give permission to a warship to enter and subsequently to leave a blockaded port.

7—In circumstances of distress, acknowledged by an officer of the blockading force, a neutral vessel may enter a place under blockade and subsequently leave it, provided that she has neither discharged nor shipped any cargo there.

8—A blockade, in order to be binding, must be declared in accordance with article 9 and notified in accordance with articles 11 and 16.

9—A declaration of blockade is made either by the blockading power or by the naval authorities acting in its name.

It specifies—

(1) The date when the blockade begins;

(2) The geographical limits of the coast line under blockade;

(3) The period within which neutral vessels may come out.

10—If the operations of the blockading power or of the naval authorities acting in its name do not tally with the particulars which, in accordance with article 9 (1) and (3), must be inserted in the declaration of blockade, the declaration is void, and a new declaration is necessary in order to make the blockade operative.

11—A declaration of blockade is notified—

(1) To neutral powers, by the blockading power by means of a communication addressed to the governments direct or to their representatives accredited to it;

(2) To the local authorities, by the officer commanding the blockading force. The local authorities will, in turn, inform the foreign consular officers at the port or on the coast line under blockade as soon as possible.

12—The rules as to declaration and notification of blockade apply to cases where the limits of a blockade are extended or where a blockade is re-established after having been raised.

13—The voluntary raising of a blockade, as also any restriction in the limits of a blockade, must be notified in the manner prescribed by article 11.

14—The liability of a neutral vessel to capture for breach of blockade is contingent on her knowledge, actual or presumptive, of the blockade.

15—Failing proof to the contrary, knowledge of the blockade is presumed if the vessel left a neutral port subsequently to the notification of the blockade to the power to which such port belongs, provided that such notification was made in sufficient time.

16—If a vessel approaching a blockaded port has no knowledge, actual or presumptive, of the blockade, the notification must be made to the vessel itself by an officer of one of the ships of the blockading force. This notification should be entered in the vessel's logbook and must state the day and hour and the geographical position of the vessel at the time.

17—If, through the negligence of the officer commanding the blockading force, no declaration of blockade has been notified to the local authorities, or if in the declaration as notified no period has been mentioned within which neutral vessels may come out, a neutral vessel coming out of the blockaded port must be allowed to pass free.

18—Neutral vessels may not be captured for breach of blockade except within the area of operations of the warships detailed to render the blockade effective.

19—The blockading forces must not bar access to neutral ports or coasts.

20—Whatever may be the ulterior destination of a vessel or of her cargo she cannot be captured for breach of blockade if, at the moment, she is on her way to a nonblockaded port.

21—A vessel which has broken blockade outward, or which has attempted to break blocade inward, is liable to capture so long as she is pursued by a ship of the blockading force. If the pursuit is abandoned or if the blockade is raised, her capture can no longer be effected.

22—A vessel found guilty of breach of blockade is liable to condemnation. The cargo is also condemned unless it is proved that at the time of the shipment of the goods the shipper neither knew nor could have known of the intention to break the blockade.

CHAPTER II.—CONTRABAND OF WAR.

23—The following articles may, without notice, be treated as contraband of war under the name of absolute contraband:

(1) Arms of all kinds, including arms for sporting purposes and their distinctive component parts.

(2) Projectiles, charges and cartridges of all kinds and other distinctive component parts.

(3) Powder and explosives specially prepared for use in war.

(4) Gun mountings, limber boxes, limbers, military wagons, field forges and their distinctive component parts.

(5) Clothing and equipment of a distinctively military character.

(6) All kinds of harness of a distinctively military character.

(7) Saddle, draft and pack animals suitable for use in war.

(8) Articles of camp equipment and their distinctive component parts.

(9) Armor plates.

(10) Warships, including boats, and their distinctive component parts of such a nature that they can only be used on a vessel of war.

(11) Implements and apparatus designed exclusively for the manufacture of munitions of war, for the manufacture or repair of arms or war material for use on land or sea.

24—Articles exclusively used for war may be added to the list of absolute contraband by a declaration which must be notified.

Such notification must be addressed to the governments of other powers or to their representatives accredited to the power making the declaration. A notification made after the outbreak of hostilities is addressed only to neutral powers.

25—The following articles, susceptible of use in war as well as for purposes of peace, may, without notice, be treated as contraband of war under the name of conditional contraband:

(1) Foodstuffs.

(2) Forage and grain suitable for feeding animals.

(3) Clothing, fabrics for clothing and boots and shoes suitable for use in war.

(4) Gold and silver in coin or bullion, paper money.

(5) Vehicles of all kinds available for use in war and their component parts.

(6) Vessels, craft and boats of all kinds; floating docks, parts of docks and their component parts.

(7) Railway material, both fixed and rolling stock, and material for telegraphs, wireless telegraphs and telephones.

(8) Balloons and flying machines and their distinctive component parts, together with accessories and articles recognizable as intended for use in connection with balloons and flying machines.

(9) Fuel, lubricants.

(10) Powder and explosives not specially prepared for use in war.

(11) Barbed wire and implements for fixing and cutting the same.

(12) Horseshoes and shoeing materials.

(13) Harness and saddlery.

(14) Field glasses, telescopes, chronometers and all kinds of nautical instruments.

26—Articles susceptible of use in war as well as for purposes of peace, other than those enumerated in articles 23 and 24, may be added to the list of conditional contraband by a declaration, which must be notified in the manner provided for in the second paragraph of article 23.

27—If a power waives, so far as it is concerned, the right to treat as contraband of war an article comprised in any of the classes enumerated in articles 22 and 24, such intention shall be announced by a declaration, which must be notified in the manner provided for in the second paragraph of article 23.

27—Articles which are not susceptible of use in war may not be declared contraband of war.

28—The following may not be declared contraband of war:

(1) Raw cotton, wool, silk, jute, flax, hemp and other raw materials of the textile industries and yarns of the same.

(2) Oil seeds and nuts, copra.

(3) Rubber, resins, gums and lacs, hops.

(4) Raw hides and horns, bones and ivory.

(5) Natural and artificial manures, including nitrates and phosphates for agricultural purposes.

(6) Metallic ores.

(7) Earths, clays, lime, chalk, stone, including marble, bricks, slates and tiles.

(8) Chinaware and glass.

(9) Paper and paper making materials.

(10) Soap, paint and colors, including articles exclusively used in their manufacture, and varnish.

(11) Bleaching powder, soda ash, caustic soda, salt cake, ammonia, sulphate of ammonia and sulphate of copper.

(12) Agricultural, mining, textile and printing machinery.

(13) Precious and semiprecious stones, pearls, mother-of-pearl and coral.

(14) Clocks and watches, other than chronometers.

(15) Fashion and fancy goods.

(16) Feathers of all kinds, hairs and bristles.

(17) Articles of household furniture and decoration; office furniture and requisites.

29—Likewise the following may not be treated as contraband of war:

(1) Articles serving exclusively to aid the sick and wounded. They can, however, in cases of urgent military necessity and subject to the payment of compensation, be requisitioned if their destination is that specified in article 30.

(2) Articles intended for the use of the vessel in which they are found as well as those intended for the use of her crew and passengers during the voyage.

30—Absolute contraband is liable to capture if it is shown to be destined to territory belonging to or occupied by the enemy or to the armed forces of the enemy. It is immaterial whether the carriage of the goods is direct or entails transhipment or a subsequent transport by land.

31—Proof of the destination specified in article 30 is complete in the following cases:

(1) When the goods are documented for discharge in an enemy port or for delivery to the armed forces of the enemy.

(2) When the vessel is to call at enemy ports only or when she is to touch at an enemy port or meet the armed forces of the enemy before reaching the neutral port for which the goods in question are documented.

32—Where a vessel is carrying absolute contraband, her papers are conclusive proof as to the voyage on which she is engaged, unless she is found clearly out of the course indicated by her papers and unable to give adequate reasons to justify such deviation.

33—Conditional contraband is liable to capture if it is shown to be destined for the use of the armed forces or of a government department of the enemy state, unless in this latter case the circumstances show that the goods cannot in fact be used for the purposes of the war in progress. This latter exception does not apply to a consignment coming under article 24 (4).

It is presumed to exist if the goods are consigned to enemy authorities or to a contractor established in the enemy country who, as a matter of common knowledge, supplies articles of this kind to the enemy. A similar presumption arises if the goods are consigned to a fortified place belonging to the enemy or other place serving as a base for the armed forces of the enemy. No such presumption, however, arises in the case of a merchant vessel bound for one of these places if it is sought to prove that she herself is contraband.

In cases where the above presumptions do not arise the destination is presumed to be innocent.

The presumption set up by this article may be rebutted.

35—Conditional contraband is not liable to capture, except when found on board a vessel bound for territory belonging to or occupied by the enemy or for the armed forces of the enemy and when it is not to be discharged in an intervening neutral port.

The ship's papers are conclusive proof both as to the voyage on which the vessel is engaged and as to the port of discharge of the goods, unless she is found clearly out of the course indicated by her papers and unable to give adequate reasons to justify such deviation.

36—Notwithstanding the provisions of article 35 conditional contraband, if shown to have the destination referred to in article 33, is liable to capture in cases where the enemy country has no seaboard.

37—A vessel carrying goods liable to capture as absolute or conditional contraband may be captured on the high seas or in the territorial waters of the belligerents throughout the whole of her voyage, even if she is to touch at a port of call before reaching the hostile destination.

38—A vessel may not be captured on the ground that she has carried contraband on a previous occasion if such carriage is in point of fact at an end.

39—Contraband goods are liable to condemnation.

40—A vessel carrying contraband may be condemned if the contraband, reckoned either by value, weight, volume or freight, forms more than half the cargo.

41—If a vessel carrying contraband is released she may be condemned to pay the costs and expenses incurred by the captor in respect of the proceedings in the national prize court and the custody of the ship and cargo during the proceedings.

42—Goods which belong to the owner of the contraband and are on board the same vessel are liable to condemnation.

43—If a vessel is encountered at sea while unaware of the outbreak of hostilities or of the declaration of contraband which applies to her cargo, the contraband cannot be condemned except on payment of compensation; the vessel herself and the remainder of the cargo are not liable to condemnation or to the costs and expenses referred to in article 41. The same rule applies if the master, after becoming aware of the outbreak of hostilities or of the declaration of contraband, has had no opportunity of discharging the contraband.

A vessel is deemed to be aware of the existence of a state of war or of a declaration of contraband if she left a neutral port subsequently to the notification to the power to which such port belongs of the outbreak of hostilities or of the declaration of contraband respectively, provided that such notification was made in sufficient time. A vessel is also deemed to be aware of the existence of a state of war if she left an enemy port after the outbreak of hostilities.

44—A vessel which has been stopped on the ground that she is carrying contraband and which is not liable to condemnation on account of the proportion of contraband on board, may, when the circumstances permit, be allowed to continue her voyage if the master is willing to hand over the contraband to the belligerent warship.

The delivery of the contraband must be entered by the captor on the logbook of the vessel stopped, and the master must give the captor duly certified copies of all relevant papers.

The captor is at liberty to destroy the contraband that has been handed over to him under these conditions.

CHAPTER III.—UNNEUTRAL SERVICE.

45—A neutral vessel will be condemned and will, in a general way, receive the same treatment as a neutral vessel liable to condemnation for carriage of contraband:

(1) If she is on a voyage specially undertaken with a view to the transport of individual passengers who are embodied in the armed forces of the enemy or with a view to the transmission of intelligence in the interest of the enemy.

(2) If, to the knowledge of either the owner, the charterer, or the master, she is transporting a military detachment of the enemy, or one or more persons who, in the course of the voyage, directly assist the operations of the enemy.

In the cases specified under the above heads goods belonging to the owner of the vessel are likewise liable to condemnation.

The provisions of the present article do not apply if the vessel is encountered at sea while unaware of the outbreak of hostilities, or if the master, after becoming aware of the outbreak of hostilities, has had no opportunity of disembarking the passengers. The vessel is deemed to be aware of the existence of a state of war if she left an enemy port subsequently to the outbreak of hostilities, or a neutral port subsequently to the notification of the outbreak of hostilities to the power to which such port belongs, provided that such notification was made in sufficient time.

46—A neutral vessel will be condemned and in a general way receive the same treatment as would be applicable to her if she were an enemy merchant vessel:

(1) If she takes a direct part in the hostilities;

(2) If she is under the orders or control of an agent placed on board by the enemy government;

(3) If she is in the exclusive employment of the enemy government;

(4) If she is exclusively engaged at the time either in the transport of enemy troops or in the transmission of intelligence in the interest of the enemy.

In the cases covered by the present article goods belonging to the owner of the vessel are likewise liable to condemnation.

47—Any individual embodied in the armed forces of the enemy who is found on board a neutral merchant vessel may be made a prisoner of war, even though there be no ground for the capture of the vessel.

CHAPTER IV.—DESTRUCTION OF NEUTRAL PRIZES.

48—A neutral vessel which has been captured may not be destroyed by the captor. She must be taken into such port as is proper for the determination there of all questions concerning the validity of the capture.

49—As an exception, a neutral vessel which has been captured by a belligerent warship and which would be liable to condemnation may be destroyed if the observance of Article 48 would involve danger to the safety of the warship or to the success of the operations in which she is engaged at the time.

50—Before the vessel is destroyed all persons on board must be placed in safety, and all the ship's papers and other documents which the parties interested consider relevant for the purpose of deciding on the validity of the capture must be taken on board the warship.

51—The property of the neutral vessel must, prior to any decision respecting the validity of the prize, establish that he only acted in the face of an exceptional necessity of the nature contemplated in Article 49. If he fails to do this he must compensate the parties interested and no examination shall be made of the question whether the capture was valid or not.

52—If the capture of a neutral vessel is subsequently held to be invalid, though the act of destruction has been held to have been justifiable, the captor must pay compensation to the parties interested, in place of the restitution to which they would have been entitled.

53—If neutral goods not liable to condemnation have been destroyed with the vessel the owner of such goods is entitled to compensation.

54—The captor has the right to demand the handing over or to proceed himself to the destruction of any goods liable to condemnation found on board a vessel not herself liable to condemnation, provided that the circumstances are such as would, under Article 49, justify the destruction of a vessel herself liable to condemnation. The captor must enter the goods surrendered or destroyed in the logbook of the vessel stopped and must obtain duly certified copies of all relevant papers. When the goods have been handed over or destroyed and the formalities duly carried out, the master must be allowed to continue his voyage.

The provisions of Articles 52 and 53 respecting the obligations of a captor who has destroyed a neutral vessel are applicable.

CHAPTER V.—TRANSFER TO A NEUTRAL FLAG.

55—The transfer of an enemy vessel to a neutral flag effected before the outbreak of hostilities is valid, unless it is proved that such transfer was made in order to evade the consequences to which an enemy vessel as such is exposed. There is, however, a presumption, if the bill of sale is not on board a vessel which has lost her belligerent nationality less than sixty days before the outbreak of hostilities, that the transfer is void. This presumption may be rebutted.

Where the transfer was effected more than thirty days before the outbreak of hostilities there is an absolute presumption that it is valid if it is unconditional, complete and in conformity with the laws of the countries concerned, and if its effect is such that neither the control of nor the profits arising from the employment of the vessel remain in the same hands as before the transfer. If, however, the vessel lost her belligerent nationality less than sixty days before the outbreak of hostilities and if the bill of sale is not on board, the capture of the vessel gives no right to damages.

56—The transfer of an enemy vessel to a neutral flag effected after the outbreak of hostilities is void unless it is proved that such transfer was not made in order to evade the consequences to which an enemy vessel as such is exposed.

There is, however, an absolute presumption that a transfer is void:

(1) If the transfer has been made during a voyage or in a blockaded port.

(2) If a right to repurchase or recover the vessel is reserved to the vendor.

(3) If the requirements of the municipal law governing the right to fly the flag under which the vessel is sailing have not been fulfilled.

CHAPTER VI.—ENEMY CHARACTER.

57—Subject to the provisions respecting transfer to another flag, the neutral or enemy character of a vessel is determined by the flag which she is entitled to fly.

The case where a neutral vessel is engaged in a trade which is closed in time of peace remains outside the scope of and is in no wise affected by this rule.

58—The neutral or enemy character of goods found on board an enemy vessel is determined by the neutral or enemy character of the owner.

59—In the absence of proof of the neutral character of goods found on board an enemy vessel they are presumed to be enemy goods.

60—Enemy goods on board an enemy vessel retain their enemy character until they reach their destination, notwithstanding any transfer effected after the outbreak of hostilities while the goods are being forwarded.

61. However prior to the capture a former neutral owner exercises on the bankruptcy of an existing enemy owner a recognized right to recover the goods they were in their neutral character.

CHAPTER VII.—CONVOY.

62—Neutral vessels under national convoy are exempt from search. The commander of a convoy gives in writing, at the request of the commander of a belligerent warship, all information as to the character of the vessels and their cargoes which could be obtained by search.

63—If the commander of the belligerent warship has reason to suspect that the confidence of the commander of the convoy has been abused, he communicates his suspicions to him. In such a case it is for the commander of the convoy alone to institute the search. He must record the result of such investigation in a report, of which a copy is handed to the officer of the warship. If in the opinion of the commander of the convoy the facts shown in the report justify the capture of one or more vessels the protection of the convoy must be withdrawn from such vessels.

CHAPTER VIII.—RESISTANCE TO SEARCH.

64—Forcible resistance to the legitimate exercise of the right of stoppage, search and capture involves in all cases the condemnation of the vessel. The cargo is liable to the same treatment as the cargo of an enemy vessel. Goods belonging to the master or owner of the vessel are treated as enemy goods.

CHAPTER IX.—COMPENSATION.

65—If the capture of a vessel or of goods is not upheld by the prize court, or if the prize is released without any judgment being given, the parties interested have the right to compensation, unless there were good reasons for capturing the vessel or goods.

FINAL PROVISIONS.

66—The provisions of the present declaration must be treated as a whole and cannot be separated.

67—The signatory powers undertake to insure the mutual observance of the rules contained in the present declaration in any war in which all the belligerents are parties thereto. They will therefore issue the necessary instructions to their authorities and to their armed forces and will take such measures as may be required in order to insure that it will be applied by their courts and more particularly by their prize courts.

67—The present declaration shall be ratified as soon as possible.

The ratifications shall be deposited in London.

The first deposit of ratifications shall be recorded in a protocol signed by the representatives of the powers taking part therein and by his Britannic majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs.

The subsequent deposits of ratifications shall be made by means of a written notification addressed to the British government and accompanied by the instrument of ratification.

A duly certified copy of the protocol relating to the first deposit of ratifications and of the notifications mentioned in the preceding paragraph, as well as of the instruments of ratification which accompany them, shall be immediately sent by the British government through the diplomatic channel to the signatory powers. The said government shall in the cases contemplated in the preceding paragraph inform them at the same time of the date on which it received the notification.

Napoleon as an Editor.

The Almanach de Gotha was already of sufficient importance over a century ago to prompt a dispatch from Napoleon. On Oct. 20, 1807, he wrote to Champagny, his foreign minister, complaining that "the latest edition of the Almanach de Gotha is full of errors, no account having been taken of the changes wrought by me in Germany. Tell the minister from Gotha to call on you and inform him that this must be set right in the forthcoming edition. Insist on seeing the section devoted to Germany before the edition is published."

VIRTUE OF AN APPLE.

At One Time the Fruit Was Called the "Food of the Gods."

The apple has become so familiar as the commonest of all fruits that its value as man's greatest friend in the vegetable kingdom may not be fully realized. It was called the "food of the gods" because it was believed to be the magic renewer of youth to which the gods resorted when they felt themselves growing old and feeble.

There have been many mystic traditions about the apple, which has been credited with varied potency. It is the healing fruit of the Arabian tales. Latin chronicles and institutes and early English poems contain many references to it. Scientific analysis of late years has justified all the ancient glorification of this fruit, which has been found to contain albumen, sugar, gum, malic acid, gallic acid, fiber, water and phosphorus.

Malic acid of apples neutralizes the excess of chalky matter caused by too much meat and thereby helps to keep us young. Apples are good for the complexion, as their acids drive out the noxious matters which cause skin eruptions. They are good for the brain, which those same noxious matters, if retained, render sluggish. The acids of the apple diminish the acidity of the stomach that comes with some forms of indigestion.

The phosphorus, of which apples contain a larger per cent than any other fruit or vegetable, renews the essential matter of the brain and spinal column.—Boston Herald.

PUBLIC PLAYGROUNDS.

The importance of establishing playgrounds in our cities can scarcely be overestimated. Play is the natural and normal portion of the life of every boy and girl. Exercise is to the child no less vitally important than food, for without exercise his body will starve just as surely as it would were it deprived of material nutriment.

We who may have been fortunate enough to have been brought up in the country or but dimly understand the lot of the child of the city st[reets]. With us exercise and re[creation] came in natural course. The necessity for finding a place to play was quite unkn[own], opportunities for play lay all about us. But fo[r] the city child the problem [is] more difficult. There are alw[ays] the streets, of course, and [the] of course—and necessarily—t[here] were must also be the city ord[inance] and the policeman f[orbidding] him to use the street[s] for play.

Provisional measures, such, for [in]stance, as the closing of a block to traffic, are expedients at best. The playground is the only real remedy. And the playgrounds should be ready for the coming of spring.

Returning First Calls.

One should return a first call within three weeks after it has been made. After a dinner, luncheon or a card party one should call within two weeks after the entertainment. A party call is not necessary after attending an afternoon tea. Just after a large reception a call is customary.

Observer Appreciates a Funny Story, and Can Tell One Himself

MORE IF NECESSARY

Editor Evening Times:

The writer is perfectly aware that almost every one is liable to misconstrue statements at times and become affended or hurt at something that has been said, while the one who said it did not intend it for sarcasm or to cause offence. I mention this for the reason that I have been informed that in my last article the statements I made regarding State Street M. E. church and its worthy pastor had been misconstrued and not read and interpreted properly nor received in the spirt in which they were written. The writer had no intention of insinuating that State Sstreet members were given to boasting—not at all—merely wished to prove our belief that they were perfectly satisfied and took as a basis for our belief the favorable reports received from different members of the church and congregation. I have every reason to believe that since Rev. Mr. Holmes assumed the pastorate of this church things have been looking upwards—and, sociability is one of the watchwords.

In reply to the letter of S. D. Gardiner, of the Welcome Committe of the First M. E., I would say that I really enjoy a funny story; especially one which is used to forcibly illustrate some point the writer or speaker is trying to make plain. Every reader of the letter written by the representative of the Welcome Committee will see the point at a glance, and, we assure the good brother that we laugh with the rest. We always are glad to hear stories that were told by good old Uncle Abe.—stories are right handy, at times, they serve to kill dull care and pass away long hours during tedious travel—they oftimes are used with telling effect by the salesman who would get his prospect in good humor before opening his sample case; they are sometimes introduced when serious conversation has reached a tiresome point; they have been used by the after dinner speaker, until his good stories have become as famous as his speeches. They have at times been the salvation of the man called on for a speech, and, who knowing in his own mind that he was not capable of making one, substituted a good story instead. In the case of this particular member of the Welcome Committee the good story is sprung, evidently for the same reason that it is used by the man who could no make the speech—for the simple reason, that the story-telling art is his limit. Of course, this particular story is used as a means to belittle Observer in the eyes of the readers of your paper, and with a fond hope that it will silence him forever. BUT, it has no direct bearing on the issue, nor does it answer the arguments of Observer. Had we so desired, we could have told the same story to illustrate just how much harm the action of one church might do the Anti-Saloon League. But, we prefer to use arguments backed with facts and when the time comes that we have none, we will then be silent. We are indeed grieved to observe that our carfully prepared statements should be so unappreciated, and calls a story to mind (getting the habit, you will observe) of a good lady who was looking forward with joyous anticipation for the time to arrive that would bring the bishop for the purpose of making his annual visit under her roof. The good housewife had spent much time and labor in the preparation of a rich and expensive fruitcake—such that would tempt the appetite of any man, whether he was hungry or not. The bishop arrived in due time, and, as was his custom, just in time for supper—Take Notice! That is not meant for a knock—as the meal progressed, the lady of the house noticed with growing apprehension, that the fruit cake was rapidly disappearing and that her distinguished company was eating nothing else—she urged him to partake of some of the other things on the table, but he declined, and gave as his reason that "this good old pound cake was good enough for him, even if he was bishop." If the reader fails to see the point, we will be glad at some future time to explain it. Of course, it is a matter of opinion as to whether the above story applies in this case; and, it is also a matter of opinion as to whether or not the committeeman's repetition of Uncle Abe's story for the purpose of making Observer the "yellow dog" and his articles the "bark, bark, bark all night long," has any direct bearing on the issue. The young lawyer in the story was undoubtedly full of his own importance and not over stocked with real knowledge—his stock in trade, was what we Americans are pleased to call "bluff." We will leave it to those who know, to decide whether Observer has dealt in this article or the real facts. Had the young lawyer been as well posted and as sound in his criticisms of the judge and his methods, as is Observer in his statements regarding present day Methodism as practiced in some of its churches, we are just vain enough to believe that the judge would never have had occasion to make use of the "yellow dog story." You have read the history of early Methodism, please consider that statement and decide in all due fairness whether we are right or wrong. Observer is not a "sore head" nor one who would cause ruction within a peace-loving body; BUT, he means to the end of the chapter to state facts as he finds them and to call things by their proper names. From early childhood, I was led to believe that harmony, good will and a Christian spirit should exist among church members; and, that the cordial reception to strangers in our congregation was the strong bulwark of our society. If the First M. E. or any other M. E. church have changed this old time belief, then they should tear down the old sign on the church and put up the new—which should read, Methodist Episcopal Church, Limited.

Truth is mighty and must prevail—the world at large hates an untruth whether spoken or acted. We all have our faults and when apprehended, we should with good grace acknowledge our error and strive to remedy the mistakes we have made. At the present day, the First M. E. church may possibly be on the right track as to the glad hand proposition; but how about six months ago? Observer will accept the invitation of "Fair Play" and pay you a visit, soon, and hopes to find conditions changed from what they were the last time he sat in one of your pews.

In reply to the letter of "Not a Methodist," permit me to say, that I thoroughly appreciate the spirit in which this letter is written; and as far as I personally am concerned, it would make no difference to me if no one noticed me when I attend church. But, when a Methodist who has been accustomed to seeking and finding a warm welcome in other churches of his creed drops in some particular church, which he has been informed is the Methodist, and is accorded a frost, he is somewhat surprised, is he not? Then, is it a good business proposition on the part of the church not to notice strangers—is it likely to increase their congregations—and attendance is what counts, you will have to admit; nothing is so discouraging to our ministers as to preach to half filled or empty pews. We will take two stores for example where price and quality are equal—and the service is poor and clerks cold and impolite in one, and the conditions are just the reverse in the other—is it not safe to assume the store where you are received with a smile will get the business, although you get your money's worth in the other. Why cannot the same rule apply to churches? Think this over my Brother and if I am wrong, set me right. With malice toward none and good feelings toward all, I remain, as ever,

AN OBSERVER.

TURKEY CONFIDENT THAT ALLIES WILL FAIL

By Ludwig Von Klein

Constantinople, via Berlin and Amsterdam, Mar. 5.—Predictions of apparently the utmost confidence were made by Turkish government officials today that the Anglo-French fleet would fail in its efforts to force the inner forts of the Dardanelles. Nevertheless preparations have been made by the government to meet all emergencies. It is impossible at present to tell what these are, however.

(The foregoing may relate to the reported departure of the Sultan from Constantinople and the removal of Turkish archives to Asia Minor.

The war ministry today issued the following statement:

"The enemy's fleet for some time has unsuccessfully bombarded our batteries near the entrance to the Dardanelles. Our return fire has been effective. In the land operations there have been developments of importance. Only a few advance guard engagements have occurred.

Ambassador Morgenthal, the American envoy here, has for some time been in daily communication with the Turkish government and Washington. His duties has been enormous, increased as a result of recent developments and the ambassy staff is working under steady pressure.

TURKEY REPORTED SUING FOR PEACE CONDITIONS

By Brixton D. Allaire

Rome, Mar. 5.—Reports that Turkey will sue for peace in general circulation in diplomatic circles here today. Some rumors were to the effect that the American ambassador at Constantinople had been informally approached by Turkish officials and asked to ascertain upon what terms the allies would consent to a termination of hostilities.

Italian newspapers have resumed their efforts to induce their government to participate in the war. They assert that the tribal outbrekas reported from Tripoli are due to Turkish machinations and that Italy must make a firm stand to protect her interests.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN HURT IN FOOD RIOTS

By Bernard Belancourt

Amsterdam, Mar. 5.—Potato riots at Cologne in which a number of women and children were injured today are reported in advices received here today. The municipal sale there opened with a breat mob besieging the market and the police found themselves powerless to repress the disorder that resulted.

After 10,500 separate sales had been made the sale finally had to be halted. The balked purchasers waited about the market place for several hours and attempts by the police to disperse them resulted in many being crushed and trampled upon.

Did Observer Throw Dust?

Query By Fair Play

Editor Evening Times:

In the article appearing in your valuable paper Wednesday evening over the signature of "Observer," there seems to be an attempt made by the writer thereof to throw some more dust into the air and threby hide the real issue. He invites us to go back and read some of the articles that emanated from his fluent pen while he was having a discussion over some points then at issue with Edward Joslin. He intimates that if we did this we might learn some things that at present we are unaware of. What good would it do us if we literally carried out his suggestions and looked up the files of The Times and read some of his so-called "deep voiced thoughts that are worthy of consideration." In our communication of Tuesday evening we did not go back to get his history, but simply took up an insinuation that appeared in his communication of the previous evening, i. e., that there might be some things to mention in connection with the erection of the other church. This was another attempt on the part of "Observer" to throw more dust into the air. From a reading of his article in Monday's Evning Times a person was given strong reasons for believing that he had some things stored up in his memory that he wished to discuss for the enlightenment of The Times' readers.

To our reply to his insinuations he injects some more sarcasm into his remarks by saying that the people of State street seem to carry the idea that their church and Rev. Mr. Holmes are all there is to Methodism in Fulton.

Now to get at the foundation of all the unkind remarks about the First Methodist church that are being made by "Observer," we ask permission to single out a few of his remarks. However, before doing this we find he says that he is a "dyed-in-the-wool Methodist," and in the same breath he accuses the present-day Methodists with having digressed from the teachings of their fathers. It looks from some of the statements of "Observer" that when he goes to church he does it either simply for amusement or to be granted a cordial reception. We have always been led to believe that a church was a place for worship and not a house of amusement or reception hall.

It is very evident from Observer's communication that he has not attended either one of the two Methodist Episcopal churches for some time, for if he had we are charitable enough to believe that he would not have made the statement that one of thes churches was large enough to seat every church-going Methodist in the city. The large congregations that are turning out each Sunday at either one of the Methodist churches is enough evidence to put courage into the heart of the most pessimistic of dispositions.

The styling of himself as a dyed-in-the-wool Methodist is an assertion that will hardly bear the light of investigation. If he were ever so loyal a Methodist as he would have people believe he certainly has strayed from the beaten path. If the church is in error in its methods, he should get within its walls as often as possible and become a real worker, not a knocker. He is—evidently—possessed of a mind that he has allowed to become perverted by prejudice. If he had the welfare of the church at heart he would not be attempting to tear down these glorious institutions for good in our midst.

This particular church that Observer seems to have singled out as his target, has been visited by us on many occasions during the past twenty years and if we speak the absolute truth would say we always received a most cordial welcome. However, we wish to qualify by saying we did not enter the church with such a look upon our face as would cause a chill to run down the backbone of an icicle. Nor did we start for the door before the pastor had hardly said amen to the benediction with our hands in our pockets for fear some one would give us a hand-shake.

In conclusion, permit us to extend to Observer a most cordial invitation to attend church next Sunday morning, and if he will do this we bespeak for him a hearty welcome that may, perhaps, change the feelings of his stony heart and convert him from what he really seems to be—a mound of ice himself.

FAIR PLAY.

U-8 SUNK YESTERDAY; CREW DEEMED PIRATES

London, Mar. 5.—The British admiralty announced today that the German submarine U-8 was sunk yesterday by destrowers. Its officers and crew were taken prisoners.

A similar announcement was made by the French ministry of marine last night.

Demands were served upon the government today by a number of deputies that all the members of the crew of the German submarine U-8 which was sunk by French destroyers in the Channel, be tried as pirates before a naval court and executed if found guilty of making attacks without warning upon merchant vessels.

Officials of the ministry of marine refused to reveal their plans as to the prisoners, but stated that they would be confined in a military prison until a decision as to their "final disposition" had been reached.

TWO RUSSIAN DIVISIONS FALL INTO GERMAN HANDS

Berlin, Mar. 5.—Having mounted their artillery upon the position captured south of Ypres the Germans are inflicting severe losses upon the English troops, according to the statement issued today in the official war bulletin. It also tells of the repulse of French attacks in the Champagne region east of the Argonne forest, east of the Meuse river and in the Vosges. In the western theater of war the Russians have suffered heavy losses in their attacks upon the Germans northeast of Lonza. The Germans have also captured in that region soldiers of the first and second divisions of the Russian guard. West of Lonza as far as the Vistula river the situation isu nchanged.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE CAMPAIGN

"BURY THE HATCHET—EVERYBODY'S DOING IT"

What Kind of City Will Fulton Be? Speaker at the Citizens Club Points Out What Constitutes Superiority in Cities.

"The place which Fulton is destined to occupy industrially and economically must be won by demonstrating the superiority of the city through community co-operation, rather than by any self-deceptive form of so-called 'city boosting.'"

This ringing phrase, uttered by J. H. Braddock, field secretary of the American City Bureau and formerly staff member of the New York Bureau of Municipal Research, was addressed to the members of the Citizens' Club and their friends at a reception in the club house last evening. Mr. Braddock's remark as above given, closed an informal talk on "Cities I Have Visited."

During his talk, the speaker touched on a score of cities which are marked for specific civic improvements and acts of community advance. He spoke of the flood-abatement work at Olean, the municipal research at Reading, the interception sewers of Syracuse, the awakened civic consciousness of the people of Paterson, the street paving and ornamental lighting of Seneca Falls, the school gardens of Glen Falls, the federated charities of South Bend, the weekly noon talks to business men at Youngstown, the city planning of Bluefield, the community program of Kalamazoo. He drew lessons from the model town of Montclair, New Jersey. He laid especial emphasis upon the quality of the milk supply at Montclair, pointing out how a similar quality might be obtained for Fulton to the profit of the farmer and the benefit of the city at large. He said in part:

"Mrs. Braddock and I went to live in Montclair, New Jersey, because we know that there we can buy as pure milk for our babies as we are willing to pay for; that all that is necessary is to look at the reports of the health officer, printed in the newspapers, or to go direct to the health officer and learn the exact bacteria count and butter fat content of the milk being delivered in Montclair by all of the milk dealers at that particular time or for any previous period. The health officer in turn tests the accuracy of his findings from time to time by having analyses made by disinterested chemists, and by having his laboratory methods open to check by the public at all times.

"Now, what is the result of such a system? For Montclair it means that the public is assured as high grade a milk as the individual is willing to pay for. It means that the citizen can learn at all times whether he is receiving full value as to the purity and richness of the milk. It means that parents can buy for their babies the kind of milk best suited for their needs.

"From the standpoint of the community at large, the strict supervision of the Montclair milk supply means that every one interested in the growth and development of the town takes pride in this asset. The real estate man starts his selling talk by laying stress upon the security which a father and mother may take in the knowledge that their children will not be poisoned by the milk they drink.

"And the farmer, too, profits thereby. For he competes with other milk dealers, not as to price, but as to quality. When his name appears at the top of the list, he knows that he can demand a slightly higher price for his product. Our own milk dealer recently informed us that he had secured a higher place in the list of Montclair dealers, and that he was going to increase the price per quart. And we are glad to pay it, knowing that our babies will receive the increased value of pure, rich milk.

"Quizzed on the situation at Montclair, consider the southern city which has typhoid epidemics much of the time, and which has only such supervision of the health of the community as is purchased by the $100 per year paid the physician who is called the health officer.

"The milk supply," continued Mr. Braddock, "is taken merely as an example of the many activities in which the Chamber of Commerce can participate in making Fulton a better place in which to live and do business. Other phases of public health, charities, education, recreation, city planning and community progress require the active interest of this group of business and professional men. There is a gigantic work before the Fulton Chamber of Commerce. The success of the enlarged organization will be measured by the activity of every member. No man capable of even the smallest amount of helpfulness can fulfill his duty as a citizen without becoming an active member."

MONEY FOR CAMPAIGN PURPOSES TO BE RAISED

Yesterday at 6 p.m. a meeting was held at the new Chamber of Commerce rooms at the call of J. H. Braddock, for the purpose of devising a plan whereby money may be raised for campaign uses. N. L. Whitaker presided and about twenty business men were present. Different methods of assessment were discussed and a schedule will be drawn up of all the business interests in the city, which, if approved, at the next meeting will tenatively fix the amount each corporation, firm or business shall be asked to subscribed. The meeting adjourned at 6 o'clock.

ENTOMBED MINERS GET BACK TO EARTH'S SURFACE

Hinton, W.Va., Mar. 6.—After being imprisoned for 96 hours in the wrecked shaft of the Layland coal mine, 47 miners who were entomber by an explosion were rescued alive today. At the same time rescue squads declared that others were still alive and that they were to be brought to be brought to the surface. Hope had been abandoned for the men when the relief workers came upon them. Although suffering from hunger and thirst and fears of impending death the men suffered no serious injuries.

LUSITANIA ARRIVES; CARRIES U. S. FLAG

Liverpool, Mar. 6.—Crawling thru the darkness and mist, avoiding being seen by German trawling boats, the Cunard liner Lusitania reached this port today. She carried 475 passengers and sailed under the British flag all the way from New York, although Gaptain Dow declared that he stood ready "to run up any flag from the emblem of Ireland to the Stars and Stripes."

1000 MINERS ENTOMBED IN PORTUGUESE MINE

Madrid, Mar. 6.—More than 1,000 miners are still entombed in the Cabeza del Buero mine near Cordova, where an explosion occurred yesterday while 1600 men were at work. Rescue work went on rapidly today, however, and it is believed that practically all the imprisoned men will be saved as fire had not broken out.

GREECE AND ITALY MAY DECLARE WAR AT ONCE

Germany Unsuccessful In Holding the Two Nations In Grasp of Alliance

Rome, Mar. 6.—That Greece and Italy will enter the war on the side of the allies before the end of the war, was the prediction made by the leading diplomats here today. One asserted that the government at Athens had already decided to cast its lot with the foes of Germany, Austria and Turkey and that this action would also force Italy into the war when it became known that Ambassador A. Kroupenski had resigned. He has been the dominant member of the allies' diplomatic corps here and has balked at every turn the efforts of Ambassador Von Buelow, the German envoy, to persuade the Italian government to support the Triple Alliance.

Feeling that his task has been accomplished, M. Kroupenski, who has been in ill health for some time, has asked his government to relieve him and his request has been granted.

Only the formal entrance of Greece into the war is now awaited here. The participation of thatc ountry and the rewards she might receive in the Balkan peninsula would gravely menace the enemies of Italy.

KRUPP GUNS DO NOT REASSURE ALLIES TROOPS

London, Mar. 6.—Heavy Krupp guns, mounted along the shores of the Dardanelles north of Chanak and Nagara ports where the waterway bends sharply to the east and the great Turkish army along both sides of the strait to prevent the march of the Anglo-FrFench forces upon Constantinople have apparently cut the operations of the fleet. Although no official report has been issued at the time this dispatch is written unofficial advices from Athens stated that alarm had fallen over operations in the Dardanelles. In the meantime the fleet is being supplied with arms and ammunition. Some military and naval experts express the opinion that the fleet will not try to smash its way any farther eastward but will content itself with keeping the Turkish army engaged while the Russian Black Sea fleets attack the eastern entrance of the Bosphorous. A number of big transports are said to be accompanying the Russian fleet carrying Russian troops. This indicates that the Russians may land troops to attack Constantinople on the north.

PILOT LOSES L-8, A ZEPPELIN AIRSHIP

By FREDERICK WERNER.

Berlin, Mar. 6.—by Wireless.—Returning from an aerial raid upon the coast towns of northern France, a Zeppelin airship was wrecked at Tirlemont, east of Brussels, last night.

Unable to see his way clearly in the darkness, the pilot of the big airship crashed into a clump of trees. The bag was torn in two places, but the damages were temporarily repaired and the Zeppelin was taken to her home station.

The airship will be brought back to Germany and thoroughly overhauled.

The wrecked airship was the L-8, a sister ship of the two recently lost in the North sea. She was completed only a month ago.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

London.—With the Holland-American liner Noorderdyk returning to Rotterdam in a damaged condition, efforts are being made here today to confirm reports that she was torpedoed by a German submarine. Up to noon today no details had been received to explain why the vessel started back to Rotterdam after starting for New York.

* * *

New York, Mar. 6.—Federal investigation was begun today of charges that German ships at Hoboken have been armed with provisions and coal for a dash into the Atlantic ocena to attack British and French shipping. The neutrality squad of the New York Custom House was sent to Hoboken to inspect the Vaterland of the Nprth German Lloyd line to make complete searches. It is also reported that United States restropers have been ordered to patrol the waters outside the harbor to prevent the escape of armed liners.

Paris.—French dispatches from Athens confirm Rome reports that Greece is preparing for the war. A general mobilization order is said to be awaiting only the royal signature.

Second Time in Steamer's Existence That She Has Suffered From Flames, First at Havre

By JOHN C. FOSTER.

London, Mar. 6.—"S. O. S." calls for help, flashed from the French line steamship La Touraine early today and picked up by the Valentia island wireless station, off the west cast of Ireland, stated that fire was raging on board the ship.

A dispatch received from Queenstown at 12.36 p.m. stated that an aerogram picked up there reported La Touraine was burning fiercely and said that the liner Arabic and the other steamers rushing to her assistance had redoubled their speed.

According to marine advices received at Belfast, all the passengers and crew of the La Touraine have been rescued.

La Touraine, which sailed from New York for Havre, France, last Saturday with 38 first class and 46 steerage passengers and a crew of 200 on board, reported herself in latitude 48.06 north and longitude 20.14 west, or about 500 miles west of the Irish coast.

It is stated at the office of the line that the vessel carried about 12,000 tons of dead weight cargo consisting mostly of foodstuffs. There was no ammunition on board it is declared.

Distress calls from the French steamer were picked up by the steamships Rotterdam, Swanmore, Cornishman and Arabic which altered their courses and began a dash through the seas toward La Touraine.

A Lloyds dispatch from the Valentia island wireless station stated that the call from the La Touraine had been received there at 6.55 o'clock. The operator in the station at once began combing the seas, asking that all possible assistance be sent to the aid of the liner.

La Touraine has been one of the best known trans-Atlantic liners in the service of the French line. Her tonnage is 3378. She is 520 feet long and 56 feet wide. She was built at St. Nazaire in 1890 and is commanded by Captain Cousin, a skilful and cautious navigator.

Despite the perils of German submarines and mines the officers of the French line decided to keep the vessel in commission after the German admiralty declared the waters off the northern coast of France a war zone.

When the war brouke out La Touraine was engaged to carry to New York American tourists who were marooned in Europe and who were trying to make their way home. The vessel arrived in New York on December 18 last 30 hours overdue because of heavy gales she had encountered on the western passage. This is not the first time that fire has broken out on the ship. Several years ago while lying at her pier in Havre flames damaged the ship.

Valentia island, where news of the accident was first received lies in Angle Bay, off the coast of Ireland.

Up to noon the London agents of the French line had not received any information regarding the fire.

BIG GUNNER CARRRIED MANY MUNITIONS OF WAR

New York, Mar. 6.—Despite the denial of officials of the French line that the steamer La Touraine which is on fire in the Atlantic carried any explosives, an examination of her manifest at the Custom House showed that in her cargo were 459 cases of cartridges, weighing 2000 pounds and valued at $21,000, which were for rapid fire guns and 515 cases weighing 55,000 ponnds and valued at $22,000 were for Rotterdam. In addition La Touraine carried clothing, cotton, wheat and large blankets, turpentine, 139 rapid fire guns and many cases of revolvers.

AMERICAN NURSES ABOARD STRICKEN FRENCH LINER

New York, Mar. 6.—Among the passengers on the steamship La Touraine are ten nurses and five physicians who left for the war zone of Europe to help caref or the wounded French soldiers. The party had been fitted out by Mrs. William J. Fitzgerald of the Ritz-Carlton hotel, at an expense of $100,000. The doctors in the party were Joseph S. Wheelwright, T. T. Walker, W. C. Bradock, J. S. Irving and C. J. Jimenis. The nurses in the party were Cathlyn O'Hanlon, Florence Gordon, Mollie Carsons, Eugenie Lysons, Nell O'Hanlon, Alma McCormick, Mollie McGrath, Dorothy O'Connell, Beda Peterson and Victoria Francefort.

Three of the young women were reported to have become engaged on the even of sailing.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppmon

THE FARMER.

THE farmer is a happy man, he "lives" as only farmers can, where nature's on display. He may not know the city's ropes, as open-eyed and green he gropes along the Great White Way. He gets up early in the morn to feed the hens and pluck the corn beneath the clear blue sky. When people say that there's a charm in living on a well kept farm, I do not wonder why. He gets fresh grub right from the soil and labors at an honest toil, with happy mien and vim. He has his barn well filled with hay and gets unwatered milk each day. Oh! how I envy him. His good wife baketh home-made pies that bring the lustre to his eyes of apple, pumpkin, mince. The man who lives upon the farm, where roosters crow the morn alarm, is equal to a prince. He knows Dame Nature to a "T" and how to treat each shrub and tree—each flower, plant and bud. If food goes up, he does not care. His bin is filled with garden ware—the onion and the spud. He has a "hoss" to take him when he must go to town again to sell his choice produce. He sits within his bungalow and makes his healthy "physog" glow by drinking apple juice. He lives the "back to nature" life, away from city noise and strife, where songbirds gayly sing. To live within the city, where there's premiums on clear, fresh air, would make his belfry ring. He may not know the Metropolitan-city ways or Broadway bluff, nor know the latest slang. Why should he worry? He's got his. He's happy in the farming "biz." So let the town go hang.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

The other day there appeared in the mail of the Up-State Woman Suffrage Press Bureau a letter from Montreal written by a life-long resident of New York state. It contained a blank which the writer's husband had been obliged to fill out before his wife could deposit and check out her money for her housekeeping expenses. It ran as follows: I hereby authorize my wife from time to time and in her own name to deposit moneys in the Bank of Montreal and withdraw the same with accrued interest.

Exhibit No. 2 in the letter was a newspaper clipping with the glad tidings that after twenty years of agitation the Legislature of Quebec had passed a law giving to the widow a share of her husband's estate if he die intestate. Previously it had gone to the most distant relatives in perference to the wife.

Anti-Suffrage Comment: See how Nem York State women have pregressed toward equal rights without the help of the vote!

Suffrage Comment: The justice attained by women in this State has been given largely through the efforts of suffragists and because women were asking for the suffrage. When a woman asks her husband for ten dollars he is apt to say, "I can't give you ten but I will give you five." So the New York Legislature confronted for over half a century with an active demand from women for the right to vote has offered as a sop to the contestents most of the lesser rights which women have at present in this state.

It is not alone suffragists who are commenting on the fact that of the 43 Congressmen who voted against the child labor bill in the House of Representatives, 41 had also voted against the woman suffrage bill. Many of these gentlemen protested with their hands on their hearts when they voted "no" on woman suffrage that no one excelled them in devotion to the interests of the home.

It is also to be noted that not a vote against child labor came from a state where mothers have equal suffrage.

The increase in the number of marriages and births in California since the women were enfranchised in 1911 is respectively submitted to those fatuous gentlemen in New York State who are warning women that if they get the vote at the election next November men will not love them or marry them and that they cannot expect to rock the cradle because they will have wrecked the world.

"I never could see any reason under the sun why a woman shouldn't vote," said United States Senator Sherman of Illinois." I intend to vote for suffrage every chance I get as long as I live." Opportunities are coming thicker and faster.

Gilbert Roe, a lawyer of note in New York City, has issued a statement calling attention to the fact that while the mother is supposed to be an equal guardian of her child in New York State, as a matter of fact, in religion, in education, and in all matters pertaining to the custody of the child the law favors the father.

Reciprocity.

"I wish I could get some washing to take in."

"So do I."

"Well, you take mine, and I'll take yours. There's nothing like getting a start."—Pittsburgh Post.

BLAZING A TRAIL

Herbert Spencer spoke with wonderful accuracy when he said, "Man was made for mutual service." Nowhere can we find a section of country where men are really independent of each other. The relationship may be indirect but it is there just the same as a bit of analysis will prove.

The value of man's relation to man, and man's relation to the community is measured commonly in gold. John Doe values his business relations with John Blank, or with the community, by the amount of gold that trickles into his purse. The value of man's relations uncommonly is measured by the good he is able to radiate.

Have you never heard an individual, particularly in public life, wholly enthusiastic with helping good things along, sarcastically spoken of and the wonder expressed as to "what game he is up to." The reason for such expression lies more in the fact that man has been observed more often working for gold than a vision.

Pioneers are blazing a trail toward a vision today in greater numbers than ever in the history of the world. Never has there been such united action among all classes as there is in human welfare interest today. Money is assuming its real value, and is recognized as but a something to be passed on for greater good and not to be hoarded.

A brighter, happier future looms ahead, as the pioneers blaze on.

OUR CITY'S DESTINY

It is evident that the prosperity of any city depends upon the faith which the people of that city have in their own city's destiny. Even so with Fulton.

It is stubborn stupidity to close our eyes to Fulton's present plainly visible reasons for being optimistic. Big business men on the outside who have no special reason for loving Fulton would not talk so persistently about our present opportunity if that opportunity were not clearly in existence. Men like that don't talk merely for the sake of saying pleasing things.

When the leading men of other cities seem to be alarmed at Fulton's opportunity, it is time for the people of Fulton to wake up to the tremendous importance of such a fact and situation.

The Chamber of Commerce is awake to the opportunities before us, and is engaged in a thorough-going campaign to secure the membership of all business and professional men. It is hoped that this membership campaign will add materially to the influenee of the Chamber of Commerce, not only in Fulton, but throughout the State and Nation.—A. C. B.

A BLOCKADE OF GER[illegible]

The answer of the Allies to the creation of the war zone by Germany is what amounts virtually to a blockade of Germany, Austria and Turkey. It is proposed to use the fleets of England and France to stop all goods whatever from going to these countries by sea and likewise to prevent any goods from leaving them. In brief, commerce with them, and especially with Germany, in ships is to be prohibited, if the thing is possible.

This is going to be pretty hard on neutral countries, and especially the United States. There will be a wail from the cotton growers of the South, for their German market will be cut off. And if dyestuffs and certain chemicals so much needed cannot be imported, many a textile mill will be hard put to secure needed supplies.

But this isn't all. It is not only direct trade with Germany that is prohibited, but indirect. England and France hold themselves free to capture goods wherever there is a presumption that such goods are destined for the use of their enemies or have been sent from hostile countries. That means that if copper, cotton, munitions of war and anything else of value to the Germans are consigned to neutral countries like Italy, and the Scandinavian nations, the vessels carrying such cargoes are subject to seizure, if the quantities are such as to lead to the belief that their final destination is Germany or Austria. Trade with Holland is probably exempt, since Holland has agreed with England not to allow exportations of contraband materials. But apparently everything is to be considered contraband after this.

England has been a long time in arousing itself. The English people are slow to wrath and exceedingly self-confident. They have taken it for granted that they were going to win out. They have been very deliberate in getting together a respectable army. The bombardment of Scarborough angered them a little. The Zeppelin attacks upon sleeping women and children stirred them up more. But it has required the submarine campaign against British shipping to get them good and mad. Apparently they have at last arrived at that phase, and the virtual blockade of Germany is their method of retaliation. We may protest all we please, but we are not at all likely to change their attitude. They have conceived the notion—for which Germany is alone responsible—that Germany is in danger of starvation and actually can be starved into submission. They propose to try the starvation process.

It is easy to foresee many a knotty problem ahead for our own government. It is not so easy to see how those problems can be worked out in the interests of American trade. We may, of course, attempt to run the blockade, but that must be at the peril of the vessels attempting it. There is only one satisfactory point. Ships captured will not be destroyed and human life will not be put in jeopardy. So no matter what happens, we shall at least be spared the horrors of the torpedo.

After Half A Century

By JOHN TURNLEE

One morning when John Merton of Chicago awoke and looked out through his front window he noticed some men digging in a vacant lot opposite. He was poised with trepidation lest some objectionable building was to be erected on the lot and, dressing himself, went out to make inquiries. He learned that the lot had been sold and the owner was about to erect on it a soap factory.

Mr. Merton at once sought the man and secured an option on the lot at a substantial profit to the latter. Then he visited several of his neighbors, proposing that they should club together and protect the locality by buying the lot. Only one person, a man named Gawtry, was willing or perhaps able to make such an investment, and he and Merton became the owners. By agreement they put the property in the hands of a trust company, to be divided among the heirs of the third generation, or the grandchildren of the two owners. The Mertons were to have the north half and the Gawtrys the south half.

Twenty years later, both Merton and Gawtry being dead and the part of the city in which the lot lay having become used for business, the trustees leased the lot for thirty years, and a store building was erected upon it. By the terms of the lease at its expiration the building was to belong to the owner of the lot.

Meanwhile the descendants of the joint owners had become scattered, the trust company's directors and officers had been changed, and there was no descendant of either Merton or Gawtry who knew about the lot, for which but $800 had been paid by the two purchasers.

One day an advertisement appeared for grandchildren of the late John Merton and Samuel Gawtry. It elicited no response and was repeated from time to time for a year, when it met the eyes of a young bank clerk named Spencer in a western city. His father and mother were dead, but he knew that his mother's maiden name was Merton. He wrote to the advertiser and received a printed statement setting forth the facts in the case of the Merton-Gawtry lot. Spencer, convinced that the John Merton named was his grandfather, investigated the case and, after a long hunt, found that he was the only living grandchild of the said Merton and consequently heir to the north half of the property.

No response to the advertisement whatever came from the Gawtry side, and no division could be made of the lot and building until the heirs in this family were found. John Spencer, desirous of coming into what was a fortune, at once made it his business to hunt up these heirs. He began at the fountainhead, making inquiries as to the first and second generations of Gawtrys, and learned that a son of Samuel Gawtry had settled in Detroit.

Spencer went to Detroit, where he learned that the widow of Samuel Gawtry of the second generation was living in straitened circumstances. Not wishing to excite false hopes in this person, he made inquiries in a roundabout way and learned that the original Gawtry had had several children, but the only living grandchild was Marian Gawtry, daughter of the widow he had found. Having proceeded thus far, Spencer returned to Chicago and reported his find to the trust company and left its officers to satisfy themselves that he (Spencer) and Marian Gawtry were the heirs to the property in question and, this done, to give each heir a half.

One morning Miss Marian Gawtry, when about to go to her school duties, took a letter from the postman informing her that the —— Trust company of Chicago was ready to convey to her one-half of a certain lot and building in that city bequeathed to her by her grandfather, Samuel Gawtry. She referred the matter to her mother, who said she had never heard of her father owning such property. He had left Chicago forty years before, a poor man. Miss Gawtry put the matter down as a mistake and, proceeding to school, thought no more about it.

One evening she received a call from a young man named Spencer. He was about to mention the fact that she was an heiress when it occurred to him that since there was a building on the property there might be difficulty in dividing it and it would be better that they should own it together. But he was an honorable fellow and scorned to win her knowing that she was an heiress.

"Miss Gawtry," he said, "I have come to Detroit to inform you that you are joint owner with me of a lot and building in Chicago worth in all half a million dollars."

The young lady, remembering the former information she had received on this subject, coolly remarked:

"That's a mistake. My mother says her father owned no such property in Chicago."

"Will you marry me if what I tell you is true?"

"If you can convince me that I am worth the sum you name I'll marry you."

Spencer eventually proved his case and held her to her promise. Since they had been mutually pleased with each other and a division of the property was hard to effect Miss Gawtry was by no means loath to keep it.

All of which goes to show that our fates are often determined by small matters.

Opinions

Seas Should be Free

It is conceivable that this amazing Anglo-French project to shut the door on Germany is in the nature of duress to force that country to suspend her "war zone" proclamation. A tenuous hope, yet perhaps realidable. But no considerations, no speculations whatsoever must stay an early and emphatic protest by the United States against the hitherto unheard of design of Great Britain and France to close the free seas to neutral commerce with Germany.—New York Sun.

Can't Sell Abroad

The American Woolen Company is one of the most efficiently managed industries in this country with all the capital needed and able to secure labor as cheap as any American manufacturing concern. William M. Wood president, in the annual report says:

"After a determined effort to sell our fabrics in the open markets of the world, we have been forced to the conclusion that as a general proposition we are unable to compete with the low-wage labor of Europe. Certain few special fabrics can be sold abroad at times, but there is not the volume of business available to us to encourage the belief that we can become a factor in the export of cloth to European countries. Our efforts must, therefore, be directed to securing to ourselves the market of the United States, the best and greatest market in existence."

Mr. Wood states that after the Underwood tariff went into effect importations of woolen goods increased enormously and that such importations displacing an equivalent amount of home made product injured not only wool manufacturers but other lines of industry.—Standard, Watertown.

Extravagance Rampant

In his admonitions to Congress at the beginning of the last session President Wilson devoted a few kind words to economy. "The duty of economy is not debatable," he said; "it is manifest and imperative." Having relieved himself of that admirable sentiment he went his way. Congress also went its way. The result is a total of appropriations for the short session of $1,128,000,000, an increase og $12,000,000 over the total for the long session.

The total for the two years is $2,244,000,000, with many stray items still unincluded. That is an increase of about $125,000,000 over the total for the 62d Congress and of nearly $200,000,000 over the total of the 61st Congress, which was controlled by the Republicans.

There is no justification for the extraordinary enlargement of public expenditure which has occurred since the House of Representatives became Democratic in 1911. An intelligent effort to economize would have held expenditure down to an annual average of between $1,025,000,000 and $1,050,000,000. No such effort was made. The Wilson administration has put no check on waste. It was too anxious to get destructive legislation through Congress to give any time or thought to a rationally constructed federal budget. The Congresssional spenders had their opportunity and made the most of it. In an effort to cover over their extravagance they even imposed new internal revenue taxes amounting to $100,000,000 a year.—Tribune, N. Y.

WOMEN PLAN FIGHT IN NEXT CONGRESS

Expect Momentum of Big Campaign to Impress It on December 6.

New York, Mar. 6.—"Welcome, little stranger!"

The Congressional Union is already getting ready to say this to the Sixty-fourth Congress when it is born, December 6. Though the date is so far off, the union deems it none too soon to begin making plans for the reception of the babe from which many women expect the enfranchisement of their sex. Miss Alice Paul and other officers of the union met at the headquarters on Forty-first street, to celebrate the passing of old Sixty-third Congress and to plan for the reception of his successor.

If the intentions of the union carry, young Sixty-fourth Congress will make his advent in a country organized in every State and every Congressional district for the pushing of the Bristow-Mondell amendment, long known as the Susan B. Anthony amendment.

"Our advisory council," Miss Paul said after the meeting, "which includes Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch, Mrs. Florence Kelley and many well known women from various parts of the country, will hold a conference March 31 at the home of Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont in this city. There we shall decide the details for a series of conventnions in the different states, and when these conventions have been held we shall have a chairman in every state and a sub-chairman in every congressional district. Miss Hazel MacKaye has written a play founded on exciting incidents in the life of Susan B. Anthony, and this play is to be given at the various conventions.

"About the end of August we'll have a conference of the women of the suffrage states in San Francisco, and then will begin the descent upon Washington. And when Congress convenes we will welcome it with the largest parade we have ever held. Judging from the interest already shown, it will be much more impressive than the parade with which we welcomed the Sixty-third Congress. And I know the Washington police will see to it that we are not molested this time."

Miss Paul declared there was a fair chance that the amendment would go through. It is to be introduced the day Congress meets.

FORTY-SIX MILES OF ROSES PLANTED IN DAY

Portland, Ore., March 6.—Fifty-six miles of roses were added to the beauties of Portland with the planting in one day of 100,000 bushes. They were purchased as a result of the campaign started by the City Beautiful Committee of the Rose Festival Association, the purpose being to make the city more than usually attractive in preparation for the coming of visitors on their way to and from the exposition at San Francisco.

Many roses worth $1 were sold by the committee through the co-operation of florists at 12½ cents each. The bushes sold are large enough to bloom in time for the Rose Festival next June.

SUNDAY MADE PLEAS FOR PURITY OF THE RACE

"Billy" Sunday told plain truths to 50,000 Philadelphia women yesterday. His language that of the surgical clinic, his every phrase bald and blunt. He dissected woman and the sins of womankind; pictured the horrors of a life of vice, whether in the upper strata of society or in the underworld, and picturing in splendid colors the glory of being a woman and a mother he pictured the pity and the shame of those who disgraced womanhood and motherhood.

Pacifically, he cried the wrath of God upon women who "stained their hands with the blood of their unborn," upon women who refused motherhood; upon the spread of social diseases, and upon the divorce evil. He came out, with all the strength in his being, for sex hygiene in the public schools. His burning words called it a crime against God and man for a woman to marry for any other reason than love.

He served solemn warning of the presence of the white slaver, and of what he termed the danger of the dance. He told every unmarried Christian woman to live and die an old maid rather than marry an unbeliever "and live to see husband and children go to hell."

His long looked for sermons to women only, sermons of a day mysterious and apart from the other days of his campaign in this city, won a total of 546 converts.

If "Billy" Sunday ever went through an endurance test, he did it yesterday. Leaving out of the question altogether the time that he spent praying or "calling to the sawdust trail," or directing collections and the mechanical features of the day, he preached, actually preached, for four hours and 39 minutes.

He started his first sermon at 10:45, ending it at 12:05. That was one hour and 20 minutes of [illegible] uous action. He fairly tumbled up the restrum stairs and down into his waiting limousine. He was whisked home, was rubbed down by Trainer Cardiff scrambled into another suit, snatched a bite to eat, and was back in the tabernacle at 12:57. It had taken him exactly 52 minutes.

He plunged into his second sermon at 1:26 o'clock and finished it on the dot of three. He had preached one hour and 34 minutes, and he had preached at top speed. Out of the building and home again, a rubdown, a bit to eat, into bed for a half-hour's rest and he was back and in action again long before 7 o'clock. He lengthened his night's sermon to one hour and 45 minutes.

All this, and he hadn't had enough. He thought it a shame the weather had militated against a fourth and possibly a fifth meeting. He'd wanted to reach every woman in the city who could get to the tabernacle. But he'd talked to nearly 50,000 and he was glad for that. He was glad, too, that he had disappointed not more than 300.

Living Film of Faces

Hardly had Sunday swept into that sermon than he pleaded and prayed that no mother should withhold knowledge of the intimate things of life from her child. Sex hygiene, he said, should be a major study in every school in the nation. Many fell through ignorance. Blindness, the terrors of diseases scouring the nation—graphically he told his hearers of them. He minced no words. The emotions of horror, of disgust, of startled surprise upon the living film of faces before him, all these signified nothing. He plunged ahead.

"The matter with you girls," he shouted, leaning far over the desk, so that he seemed to be boring down into the very souls of the nearest faces upturned to his, "is that you hold yourselves too cheap!" Every word rang out like a hammer-blow.

"Love is the greatest blessing to mankind. If you don't know it and believe it, you are not fit for love. As for being old maids," he grined. "I'd rather call them ladies in waiting."

He gave the divorce evil a whack, berating America for leading the world in divorce statistics—six divorces out of every 12 marriages, he said. Too great an anxiety to get married was one cause. Another was that some girls were poorly trained, and found after marriage that it would have been better if they had died.

"They launch the matrimonial boat and put in the oars and try for luck anyway," he said, "and think that if it is not a success they can look to the law to get them out of it." He told them that he was a Roman Catholic in his profound opposition to any such thing, and that he would never, under any conditions, unite in marriage any persons who had previous partners living. "If you are already married," he cried, "that's all I can say. But if you're not, listen to me."

Children "Out of Fashion"

"It's the terrible truth that Society has just about put maternity out of fashion. Children are too much bother," he sneered. "They interfere too much with the opera, and balls, and pink teas, and bridge whist. Considering what care the children of the rich get after they do get into the world, I do not know but that it's just as well, after all.

"Turned over to governesses and fed on artificial baby foods—why, they don't even get a decent meal, of the kind that God intended. No!" he bellowed, "the lady has to spend her time at grand social gatherings, and in her automobile, and hugging and kissing lap dogs." He leaned forward confidentially and smiled one of his irresistible "Billy" Sunday smiles. "No wonder the dogs turn out so much better than the children!"

Back to statistics. He cried that in 100 families living in New York-bats, where you paid $2000 a year just for the rooms, there were only seven babies; out of 90 families, only two babies; out of 60 families, only four; of 75, only one. And then in the poorer sections of the East Side, in 40 families there were 150 babies; in 27 families, 78; in 40, 102.

He waited for the amusement to subside, then he went on, seriously again: "I think a lot of girls marry for other causes than love. Ambition, laziness, avarice, lead girls to the altar. Many a girl is actuated by sex impulse, by desire for fine clothes, by the thought that she will have a lot of servonts to wait on her, the lazy lout."

He was deadly in earnest, sounding the call so that every unmarried woman hearing him might resolve to have he marriage founded on the right motive or not to marry at al.

Charity for the Erring

And then came one of the most dramatic parts of the whole sermon. With a face beaming with charity and kindliness, he pleaded the cause of the unmarried mother who had fallen from grace because of love, and insisted that she was far worthier of consideration from Christian people than the woman who was guilty of race suicide. "If I were a Judge," he said, "I'd show more mercy to the traduced, deceived girl, than to the wretched, idle, champagne-drinking, opera-going, dyked-up, lazy, selfish and pin-headed society woman who practices race suicide. She's a murderess, that's what she is."

He roused a storm of laughter a moment afterward when he announced that some men thought all that women were good for was to fry befsteak and patch pants. "With no God in the heart of the father" he thundered, "no wonder that marriage is so often a failure."

He sketched the attitude of a young girl who was beginning to cherish thoughts of a home and children of her own. He told the audience that many a woman was an "old maid" because she wanated to do her share of the courting, and he scored those girls who were so afraid of being unmarried that they were willing to take "any old thing that comes along wearing pants."

Sunday called down the thunders of wrath and the curse of God upon the "murderess of the unborn." He had told a story of the Shumite woman, who told the prophet Elisha of her childlessness and of the reproach it entailed upon her as upon all Jewish women. That it meant they were ostracized and considered victims of divine wrath. Sharply, his words uashing sparks he drew his contrast. Every woman sat a little straighter as he cried:

"You know there are homes today where the advent of a child is a curse rather than a blessing. I know there are some of you here to whom God has denied the grace of motherhood. That is not your guilt. But I am speaking of those homes where children are not wanted.

"Do you know that at the close of the Franco-Prussian war Germany and France had an equal population of 36,000,000? That last year Germany had 65,000,000 and France only 38,000,000? Do you know that there were 10,600 new-born babies found in the sewers of Paris last year? That the conditions are so frightful that the French Government has offered a reward for every marriage and a double reward for every child born?"

He pounded his fists in his hands. "There were 52,000 more funerals than births. One out of every six was illegitimate. Let me tell you something.

"Out in an Iowa town where I was preaching once there was a doctor, [illegible] to me, 'Mr. Sunday, why don't you preach on esermon especially to women? They need it.'

"'I haven't got the nerve,' I said. 'Well, says he, 'some one has got to have the nerve. Listen here: Do you know in the last two weeks six of the women in your choir, all church members, all of them married, have come to me to ask me to help them to evade maternity?'

He began to chuckle, quietly, but with such secret enjoyment, that all the upturned faces also broke into smiles. "Every town I go," he said. "I leave a trail of broken engagements. In one place there were 15."

Educational Problem

He took his stand for sex hygiene in the public schools with the words:

"Don't think I am talking too freely. Don't think, you mothers, that you can tell a child too much. The trouble is you won't talk at all. But I will, and I'll keep on talking. Sex hygiene in the public schools is far better for you than Greek and Latin, far more important to unborn generations! I'll talk it until we have sound, God-fearing, intelligent Christian united to sound God-fearing intelligent Christian men, and they are bringing sound and healthy children into the world.

Sunday Only Half a Christian

Philadelphia, the scene of Billy Sunday's endeavors to rid the world of wickedness, has a citizen who contributes to a newspaper there this opinion of the evangelist:

The clergymen and ministers must have thought there was something radically wrong with the churches of Philadelphia, else they would not have united in inviting Billy Sunday.

What is it that is radically wrong, and can Sunday effect a cure?

I fear not, since he offers nothing more than the ministers themselves have been offering. The Christianity that he and they preach is only halfway Christianity. They but partially accept the teachings of Christ Jesus.

I am not throwing a brick of infidelism at Sunday and the ministers. Far from it. I would not cast an obstruction, even so trifling as a peanut shell in Sunday's path. If he can bring one person, to say nothing of a considerable number of persons, to a better way of living, I shall be more than glad. He is earnest and—so far as he goes—thoroughly believes in what he says.

His God is a God in physical shape, casting human beings into a physical hell to be tortured by a physical devil. It was Jesus who taught that "God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth." However, let that pass. Mr. Sunday appeals to his hearers through fear. Fear is not in itself repentance. Whether through fear many of his hearers may not be led into Christianity is not my issue. But if they are, and join the churches, will they find lasting peace and contentment there—under existing ministrations.

I was brought up in the Congregational churches of New England. Of late years I have been associated with the Presbyterian faith in Philadelphia. I have not been satisfied. I have listened to Mr. Sunday and have read a good many of his sermons. Still, I am not satisfied. Why? By their fruits ye shall know them." The fruit of the churches is scarcs. There is some grave trouble. What is it? Sunday does not remedy it.

Throughout the Gospels very much space is given to the actual doings of Jesus. He went about doing good. He healed the sick. He cleansed from sin and disease. He combined the two. And naturally, since disease and sin are frequently synonymous. He cured the ills of the body so that the human mind might be open to Divine truth and understanding. Not only did He do this, but He commanded His followers to do likewise. "He that believeth on Me, the works that I do, shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do, because I go unto the Father." And He impressed upon them that they should "heal the sick, cleanse the leper, raise the dead, cast out devils; freely ye have received, freely give."

Jesus proved the Divine origin of His teachings by His works—"miracles." Mr. Sunday and our good ministerial friends call them. But these same "miracles" were performed by His Disciples and by His followers long after Jesus had gone "unto the Father." For three centuries, as I read, these "miracles" were wrought, hence the curing from disease and sin was not intended to be confined to the brief career of Jesus on earth. The command was for all [illegible] come.

Time after time have I listened to sermons wherein it was stated that if we had faith like unto a mustard seed we could remove mountains. Time after time have I listened to the prayer of the preacher calling for Divine interposition to save a church member from the sickness which inflicted him. Have such prayers been answered. If not, why not? Is it not because the preacher was lacking in something; because, while he believed in God and professed Christ Jesus, he did not really believe in Christ's very plain teachings?

Mr. Sunday seems to be on very intimate terms with God. I do not mean to be irreverant. His prayers, delivered in a conversational style, give that impression. But has Mr. Sunday ever cured the sick, healed of disease, actually snatched a single man, woman or child from the clutches of disease? And yet, there is the injunction to go forth and do that very same thing. So must I not believe that there is something radically wrong with Mr. Sunday? He freely consigns to damnation. But does he cleanse the leper, does he do the work that Christ Jesus did? And yet the command is staring Mr. Sunday—and the ministers—in the face every time he and they open the Bible.

Now this is just where the teachings of Mr. Sunday and of the ministers fall short. They accept only a portion of the Christ creed. And this is why I say that they are only halfway Christians.

There is need for a great change. When the ministers get us back to the religion taught by Christ Jesus then indeed will there be no necessity for revivals, for the churches will be crowded, because the truth of the living God will be demonstrated.

Ah! Brother Sunday, if you can bring yourself to grasp the Christ methods—the Christ religion— then shall you bring, not a few thousands of fear-stricken men and women to your feet, but you shall summon a whole city to repentance. And you, faithful ministers—faithful to one side of the Christian religion taught by Christ Jesus, but so sadly and dis astrously lacking in the faith of the early Christians—demonstrate your teachings as Jesus and His Disciples deconstrated theirs, and then shall you minister to the multitudes. That you must do if you would fill your churches.

We have gone far afield from Christ Jesus, and until we can get right back to Him all of the revivals that Mr. Sunday or any one else may conduct will fail to satisfy—at least me.

NEW STATE PARK

Green Lake and the surrounding property located a short distance from Jamesville, Onondaga county, was purchased recently by Mrs. Mary Clark Thompson, a wealthy Canandaigua widow, for a State geological park. Mrs. Thompson is a daughter of the late Governor Clark, of New York. The property will be transferred to the State and be known as the Clark memorial park.

The Green Lake district has been the mecca for scientists from all over the world for years. Scientists have explained how the amphitheater containing the lake was created by a great plunge of water in the glacial period. Scientists hold that the cataract of prohistoric times was mightier than the Horseshoe Falls of the Niagara.

The Green Lake district has long been described by enthusiasts as a spot rivaling in natural beauty many of the show places of Switzerland. The lake is surrounded by steep, wooded, abrupt slopes, but there are steps leading down to the water's edge. There are caves surrounding the lake on all sides in which investigators have penetrated hundreds of feet into the earth.—Palladium.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

Albany, Mar. 6.—Rumors of dissention in the innermost circles of the Republican party of the State, in so far as it relates to the legislative program have been rife of late. It may be said, in fact that since the bill to amend the Tax Law so that the State tax commission might be erorganized, the rumor has been abroad.

The Republican party is generally credited with being more astute in the carrying out of its legislative program than the Democratic party. This stand is taken by many for the reason that that party has had far more experience in affairs of State than has its great rival. If the belief that the Republicans know the political game better is to be accepted, then it must be obvious that it has not thus far this session lived up to its reputation of previous years.

While there has been no break in the allegiance of the leaders in the legislature to their party, it cannot be said that everything on the program has been presented and disposed of to the satisfaction of all. Senator Elon R. Brown and Majority Leader Harold J. Hinman are apparently at loggerheads as regards certain provisions of the amended Compensation law. Speaker T. C. Sweet of the Assembly and Leader Hinman do not agree as regards the date of final adjournment. In this particular Senator Brown has taken his stand with Leader Hinman and is advocating serious consideration of an early adjournment date. The Assembly has adopted a resolution to end up its affairs on April 2.

Determined to thwart Governor Whitman who desires to take certain functions from the comptroller and transfer them to the proposed new tax commission, Comptroller Travis is working to defeat this clause in the tax bill. Governor [illegible] is sincere and tenacious in his belief that the change should be made and is obdurate. This situation sheds another side-light upon the question.

Just what Lieutenant-Governor Schoeneck will do at the tail-end of the session as regards further opposition to the desires of the Republican party leaders, is not known. He refused to appoint Senator Henry M. Sage of Albany as chairman of the Senate finance committee, although it was well known that William Barnes desired hism to do so. The rules of the Senate were amended in order to obtain the position for the Albany senator.

Leader Hinman and Governor Whitman have split over the administration of the State highway department. Hinman believes that there should be a three-headed commission. The Governor thought so also at the beginning of the session, but he changed his mind and named as attorney friend, Edwin Duffey, as a single-headed commissioner.

Senator James A. Emerson, it is said, still smarts over his defeat as chairman of the Senate finance committee. He was jumped by Sage by party mandate. On top of this comes the bolting of four Brooklyn senators when the proposed amendments to the Workmen's Compensation law came up in the Senate. All were Republicans.

It may be that Senator Henry Walters of Syracuse will rally to the aid of the lieutenant-governor, also a resident of Syracuse if the presiding officer of the Senate finds that he needs aid in a tight place. Is it all a tempest in a tea-pot? The Republicans say so.

GRAND JURY WINDS UP WEEK'S WORK

Twenty-three indictments were returned by the Grand Jury at 3:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

Of this number, eight against persons now in custody, were open. The remainder were sealed.

Indictments were found against the following: Edwin J. Ouderkirk, Boylston, assault; Guy Crouse, Oswego, violation of the penal law; Lillian Garrison, Oswego, violation of the penal law; John Abbott, Oswego, violation of penal code; Albert Passo, Oswego, Grand larceny, second degree; Arthur Tannere, Richland, burglary, third degree and petit larceny; Richard Cunningham, Oswego, burglary, third degree, and petit larceny; Everitt Gordon, Syracuse, grand larceny, second degree.

The arraignment will take place before Justice Edgar C. Emerson at 2 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon.

LEAGUE PROTESTS FILM CENSORSHIP

At a meeting of the league for Political Education at the Cort theater, New York, Thursday, the members voted unanimously to protest by telegram aginst the enactment by the Legislature of a law creating a State Board of Censorship for motion pictures. The meeting was addressed by John Collier, the Rev. Dr. Charles S. MacFarland, general secretary of the federal council of the churches of Christ in America, and D. W. Griffith, who produced the remarkable photo spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty theater.

Mr. Griffith, probably the most famous motion picture director in the world, said he did not believe in the censorship of motion picture plays, except those designed for children. He declared that plays for adults should be censored as books, magapines, newspapers and stage plays are censored—by public opinion.

"This question of censorship," said Mr. Griffith, "is a very serious one, and I feel that we never can be sufficently grateful to Mayor Gaynor for vetoing an ordinance establishing an official Board of Censors in this city. He held that the motion picture was a form of publication, that to interfere with it would be to interfere with free speech. Mayor Gaynor pointed out that all had a right to express themselves freely and publicly, being responsible to the law for their utterance."

VETS WILL NOT OBSERVE APR. 9

It Is the Day When Johnny Laid Down Arms for the Plowshare

Peace day, or the 50th anniversary of the day when peace between the North and South was declared, will not be observed in a formal way in Fulton.

Commander Skeel of Schenck Post, G. A. R., has been approached upon the subject, and while he and his gallant comrades would have, were they stronger numerically as well as physically, a creditable observance of the important epoch in the County's history, the event is likely to pass by unobserved, for the very good reason that of the 40 or more surviving members of Schenck Post, a small majority of them are unable to undertake the work of making arrangements such as would reflect credit upon themselves, the Post and the city.

Unless the Sons of Veterans see fit to mark the declaration of peace between their fathers and the fathers of those of the Confederacy; or, unless the churches of the city join hands with the city's patriotic orders, it is therefore unlikely that Fulton people shall have the pleasure of participating in a celebration that has meant so much to the entire world.

Oswego, it is expected, will have a celebration of the event, for at the next meeting of O'Brien Post, G. A. R., there will be discussed plans for a befitting celebration of the day fifty years ago, or to be correct, April 9, 1865, when the sword was laid aside and "Johnny came marching home."

PAUL J. MURRAY GETS VERDICT OF $2500

Not until 3.50 yesterday afternoon did the jury in the case of Paul J. Murray vs. the Lehigh Valley railroad return a verdict, which is for $2500. The action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries on the ground of negligence. The defendant's case was submitted in the morning and occupied but a short time. The defense contended that the Lehigh was in no way to blame for the accident as it happened on the New York Central property. Mr. Cobb, for the defense, in his summing up, declared that the plaintiff as an employe of the Central feared for his position if he brought suit against that company for the injuries he sustained in falling. He denied negligence on the part of the Lehigh or its employes.

Mr. Morehouse for the plaintiff declared that the Lehigh employes were to blame for permitting the coal to remain in a heap between the tracks such as is claimed, and denied that suit was not brought against the Centray by Mr. Murray because of fear of losing his job. The Lehigh Valley was the negligent party, he said. Justice Emerson, denied motions for a non-suit.

FARM LABORER STOLE FROM HIS EMPLOYER

Yesterday's Oswego Times told of the following story:

"Ingratitude is not crime under the statute but, if it were, it is probable that Albert Poscoso would get the limit of the law in case of his conviction. He is a farm laborer and was employed by Nelson Ward of the town of Granby on his farm. Poscoso had worked all summer at the Ward farm and although there was little to do during the winter Mr. Ward kept the man at work doing chores and odd jobs about the place.

"About two weeks ago Mr. Ward and his family left home for a visit, leaving Poscoso in charge. When they returned they found the house had been ransacked from cellar to atic and many articles had been stolen. The burglar had not spared even the toy bank of the Wards' little son. Here were kept the accumlations of many weeks, amounting to about $7.00. He also stole the eggs from the incubator and took a number of other articles, some of no value except to the family.

"There was no trace of Poscoso and Mr. Ward suspected him. A warrant was sworn out and Poscoso was traced to Combridge, N. Y., where he was placed under arrest.

"Sheriff Buck went Thursday to Cambridge where he secured the prisoner, who is now in the County ail."

HUGO IN CHARGE OF STATE CENSUS

Work of Counting Noses Will Cost Five Hundred Thousand Dollars

Albany, March 6.—It will cost the State of New York nearly half a million of dollars to take an enumeration of its inhabitants, according to the calculations of the secretary of State. The introduction of the Brown-Thorn bill is the last step towards such an enumeration, although it is merely red tape since the Constitution of the State provides that there shall be an enumeration this year. It is estimated that the work will be commenced by the first of May and that it will have been completed by July 1.

Secretary of State Francis M. Hugo is to have general supervision over the work of finding outh ow many men, women and children there are in the Empire State. He is empowered, however, to designate a clerk or a deputy in his department to do the actual work of adding up the long colums which are expected to show that enormous strides have been taken in the populating of the State. He is also empowered to temporarily employ such clerks as he deems advisable to facilitate the work of compiling the census.

"We will start this work just as soon as the legislature gives us the authority to do so," said Secretary Hugo today." There is considerable ground work to be laid out before we can get the actual counting of the inhabitants and to do this will necessarily take up considerable time. The members of the legislature have been informed that it is highly important that early action is taken on the Brown-Thorn bill which was drawn to cover the enumeration work at hand."

The fact that Senator Elon R. Brown, majority leader in the upper house is the sponsor for the enumeration measure in the senate marks it at once as an administration measure and assures its speedy passage.

Even though the bill should not pass, the enumeration would be taken, notwithstanding. In 1905 a law was pased which provided for an enumeration in the year 1915 and that such enumeration should be completed during the months of May and June. The last enumeration took an equal space of time to complete in 1905.

One of the important features which will result very likely when the count has been made is a change in the make up of the senate and assembly of the State. Representatives are based upon the population, a certain number of representatives are provided for by law to act for a designated number of inhabitants.

With the State Constitutional Convention on in full swing, the importance of the taking of the enumeration this year is obviously opportune. It is within the province of the delegates to the constitution in question to alter the Constitution in any manner agreed upon; it may be the basis of legislature representation may be made smaller. Such a step has been more than casually hinted at.

The working of counting the population of the State will start simultaneously in every election district of the State. An enumeration supervisor is to be appointed in each such district and in the larger cities it may be that one will be appointed for each block if it is deemed advisable. One chief enumerator is to be appointed for the counties of the Bronx, New York, Kings, Qeens and Erie. The salary of each enumeration supervisor is to be $500, while the chief enumeration supervisors are to receive $2,500 except in Erie county where the salary will be $2,000.

Interpreters in New York, Buffalo, Syracuse, Utica, Schenectady and other cities where there is a large percentage of foreigners are to be employed.

BALDWINSVILLE PAYS $35 PER LAMP A YEAR

The question of a new lighting system for Baldwinsville will be voted upon at the charter election March 16. The present contract expires June 1.

It was five years ago when the trustees first determined to establish a system of arc lighting and at that time the proposition was submitted to the people and carried by a large majority. Since then many changes have been made until now there are sixty-six arc lights in use.

In accordance with the present system, the village pays the Seneca River Power company $4,930 annually for furnishing these lamps. Now, however, the board believes that under a new system of using 150 large tungsten incandescent lamps the streets may be far better lighted at a slightly larger expense. These new lamps, if adopted, will furnish light from dusk to dawn at a cost of $35 per lamp per year, making a total expenditure of $5,250 per year.

MEHEGAN BROS. CO. MAKING IMPROVEMENTS

Mehegan Bros. Co. are now making extensive improvements on their storage cellar and workshop. the cellar floor is being made of concrete all the way out under the sidewalk and concrete retaining walls are being built all around the new addition. An opening will be built in the sidewalk with a trap door so that all piping supplies and heavy material may be placed in the storeroom without carrying it through the store. The store front and sidewalk will be later improced and made uptodate in design and appearance.

HOW COLONEL GOT THE JOB

The first intimation that I was to be ordered to Panama for duty in connection with the Canal came to me on the morning of Feruary 18, 1907, in the form of a telephone message from the Secretary of War, William H. Taft, saying he desired to see me. In compliance with this message I called upon him at once. He catechised me about the localities where I had served, the character of the duties in which I had been engaged since graduation from the Military Academy, and also concerning my anteeedents. He then informed me that the President had decided to accept the resignation of Mr. John F. Stevens, chief engineer of the Canal, and had concluded to turn the work over to the corps of engineers, United States army. He had just returned from the White House with General Mackenzie, chief of engineers, where, after discussing this question with the President, they had recommended me for the position of chief engineer. He could not assure me I would be selected, but I probably would be summoned to the White House that evening and should be prepared for such a call. In the meantime nothing was to be said concerning the matter to any one.

In the course of the evening a call came from the White House, and at 8.45 I reported there to President Roosevelt. He stated that he had sent for me to talk over some matters in connection with the Panama Canal. Expressing great regret that he found it necessary to make a change in the management of affairs on the Isthmus, he said he had concluded to accept Mr Stevens' resignation, since no other course was open to him. He considered any change in the administrative head of a work unfortunate, for it always unsettled the force and resulted in delays, and this was especially so with the work on the Isthmus. He was very desirous of having the Canal built as expediously as possible, and in order to avoid upsets and delays from similar causes in the future, he had decided to place the work in the hands of army engineers, thereby securing continuity of direction by putting in charge persons who would be obliged to remain.—From "The Building of the Panama Canal," by Colonel George W. Goethals, in the March Scribner.

About Sports Generally

By Frank G. Menke

New York, Mar. 6.—At last accounts, the British fighting the Germans in German East Africa from Uganda were being led by a Long Islander, Reilly, the cop.

W. J. Reilly, formerly of New York, is the chief of police of Uganda, a British African possession adjoining German East Africa. Reilly turned his native police into soldiers and with them invaded the enemy's territory, fighting a twelve-hour battle in which the British lost seven and the Germans one hundred dead and many wounded, according to a letter from Reilly received here by J. C. Hamment.

Here's what Reilly writes to his friend:

"Just come through a twelve hours' fight. Five machine guns and one cannon playing on us all day. I had only seven casualties, as I was beautifully entrenched. The Germans attacked us at dawn and had twice our number. Our ammunition ran out (some of my men fired 300 rounds) and we had to retire when night set in. The funny thing was that the Germans also retired and left a cannon behind them. As we were fighting in their country, the natives told them that we had retired and they came back next morning and occupied our position.

"I had some narrow escapes, as I was in charge, and had to keep running around. It was my first independent command and things turned out well. We are still in their territory and are going to attack them in two days. We hope to give them a thorough licking, but of course, we will be doing the attacking this time and will have more casualties. We killed nearly one hundred of the enemy and the wounded were in scores all around. The German commander was wounded in the calf and we also killed the man who was working the big gun."

Hemment first met Chief Reilly when he went to Africa with Paul Rainey to photograph elephants and lions for the moving pictures. A year ago last October Reilly came to New York to visit his sister in Flushing, Long Island.

A mighty man is Reilly. He fights lions single-handed and gets away with them. When Theodore Roosevelt made his African hunting trip, he became a warm friend of the big Long Islander, whom the natives of his province treat as if he were the real ruler of British Uganda.

Reilly's letter was written on January 12. It's a long way from Uganda to New York. Hemment has not heard anything further from the chief. He is pretty sure that if Reilly and his men won the next skirmish mentioned in the letter, he will learn of it in due time through another letter from his friend. If he does not hear, says Hemment, it will be because another intrepid Irishman has earned the Victoria Cross without knowing it and the name of J. Reilly has been added to the long lists published weekly in London under the caption: "The Roll of Honor."

A scrimmage of the sort described by Reilly would hardly get a line in the war news. But Reilly's men are fighting with the same zeal and the same deadly purpose as in bloody Flanders and Poland. It may be long before the news of the battle reaches New York. It depends on Reilly.

German East Africa joins Uganda and when the King, Kaiser, President and Czar let loose the dogs of war in Europe, it was not long before they were barking over in Africa. By way of Mombassa and Zanzibar the news spread to the interior and erstwhile friends were bidden to be up and at each other's throats.

The military force of Uganda comprises the force of Askaris the Chief has under him. Policemen is the name in English for the Askaris, 300 of them, all of them of the tribe of Uganda, who wear their puttees on their bare legs.

But Reilly had taught them to fight hand foot as they do in Ulster. He had taught them the use of guns and revolvers and banished from their hearts fear of the big game of the jungle and veldt. The Germans have real soldiers over there, but Chief Reilly wasn't a bit dismayed. Overnight he made soldiers of his policemen and the next day marched forty miles to meet the foe on his own territory.

It wasn't much of a fight, as Reilly might put it. Not much of one as we hear of battles in bloody Flanders and Poland. Only twelve hours of fighting in the trenches. Only 100 Germans killed and scores wounded. Only seven casualties on the side of Reilly and his Askaris and the Germans had one cannon and five machine guns.

The baseball magnates would go into bankruptcy in a month if they attempted to put into force the $2 admission that Joe Lannin, owner of the Red Sox, predicted in case the baseball war continued.

A $2 admission price would be equivalant to a hold up. The fans wouldn't stand for it—not for a single day. The magnates right now tax the fans a mighty stiff price and any attempt to boost it would mean a boycott of the ball parks.

Lannin, if quoted correctly, seems to have the idea that the fans ought to be forced to pay for the cost of warfare that is the faults of the magnates only. Such an idea is absurd in the extreme.

If the organized baseball magnates are suffering such heavy losses because of this warfare, it's about time for them to make peace—and make it in a hurry. Just because they are too bull-headed to patch up a truce with the Feds is no reason why the fans should suffer, and the fans won't.

The scale of prices at the big league parks, if changed at all, should be downward—not upward. The usual range of prices is from 50 cents to $1.25. Some of those 50-cent seats are not worth the price. They are too far removed from the central scene of action.

Some years ago, most of the parks in the country had from 3,000 to 7,000 twenty-five-cent seats. But the magnates, in recent years, became greedy. They reduced the 25-cent area to the lowest possible minimum and now are selling many of the old time 25-cent seats for double the former price.

A revolution will come some day in baseball and when it does the admission prices to the big league parks will be decreased. The $1 and $1.25 seats will be a thing of the past. The best seats will be had for 50 or 75 cents and there will be thousands of 25-cent seats where there are only hundreds now. And some of those 25-cent seats will be the seats that command 75 cents now.

The reduction will come when the magnates get together and decide to pay a ball player in proportion to his worth—about $3,000 a year for the greatest stars, and from $1,000 to $2,000 for ordinary ball players who now are drawing down war time salaries that range from $3,000 to $8,000 a year.

Walter Johnson, who probably couldn't earn more than $1,800 or $2,000 in twelve months' work of eight hours a day, at any other occupation, gets from $12,500 to $15,000 for working about 80 hours—ten full working days—in a year. And the "work" that he does is health giving work and the kind of "work" that is play for the rank and file of civilians.

It's the fans who pay Johnson, Mathewson, Cobb, Speaker, Collins and the others the big salaries that they get for the little "work" that they do. They've paid it for years without protest, but the remarks of Lannin about boosting the price to $2 changes the aspect of things.

The fans are beginning to conclude that the salaries that they (the fans) pay to ball players is all out of proportion to the worth of those ball players and some of these days they will balk at the prices. And then the magnates will have to use the pruning knife on their salary lists and pay the ball players a good living wage—not a millionaire's ransom.

AN EASY GOING SENTINEL.

Such a Little Thing as the Password Didn't Bother Him.

An interesting picture of the confusion that attended the anti-Austrian demonstrations in Milan in 1848 is given in "Memories of Youth," by Signor Giovanni Visconti Venosta.

Very early in the morning, says the author, after several hours of heavy sleep in a hammock in an anteroom of Garnier college I descended into the street and ran into some people who, with tricolored shawls across their shoulders, were giving orders in the name of the committee of defense. They were trying to discipline the revolution. Falling into their hands, I was stationed as a sentinel at a useless barricade that shut off Via Durini from the Verziere. The commander, having inspected my pistols and perhaps having found them not murderous enough, placed in my hands a fencing foil. Then he gave me the countersign, "Papa Pio."

A little while afterward another chief came along, who re-enforced the post and gave me as a companion a good old man who was armed with an antique lance. I told him the countersign, and we soon became friends.

A patrol appeared. "Halt!" cried the old man. "The countersign?"

"Concordia, coraggio," replied the captain of the patrol.

"Truly," replied my companion, "the countersign is something else. However, we are all Italians, so pass on."

Anvils Date Back of History.

The anvil was known in the earliest times, being spoken of in the Bible, the prophet Isaiah saying (chapter 47, verse 7), "So the carpenter encouraged the goldsmith, and he that smoothetb with the hammer, him that smiteth the anvil." It is not known who first used it, but of course the anvil of antiquity was unlike that of today as perfected by modern workmanship. The anvil still used in the orient, however, is a boot shaped piece of metal inserted in a section of oak or walnut log. Larger or smaller it is used by tinsmiths, shoemakers, silversmiths and blacksmiths. The anvils used in this country are commonly made of cast iron faced with steel and are of parallelopiped form, with a steel cone or beak at one end and a "handy hole" for inserting chisel or other tools at the other end.—Boston Globe.

The Crimean War.

The Crimean war was in 1853-56 between Russia on one side and Turkey, France, Great Britain and Sardinia, as allies, on the other side. It was called the Crimean war because it was mainly fought in the Crimean peninsula. It arose through the demand of Russia for a protectorate over the Greek subjects of the sultan and was closed and its issues decided by the treaty of Paris March 30, 1856. By this treaty Sebastopol, which had been captured, was restored to Russia, Russia abandoned her claim as to Christians in Turkey and the Black sea was neutralized.

Lost It.

"There is a good deal of talk about the English being slow to appreciate a joke," said Marshall P. Wilder once. "I have not found that to be the case at all, although one Englishman did come to me for an explanation after I had made the remark that 'I dreamed one night that I was dead, but it was so hot that I woke up.'

"'I beg your pardon, Mr. Wilder,' he said, 'but it must be deuced hot in your country.'"

SCOTLAND'S PALLADIUM.

A Famous Piece of Artillery Is Ancient Mons Meg.

In the most honorable location in the Argyll battery of Edinburgh castle is a huge piece of ancient artillery which is known as Mons Meg. This old fashioned piece of ordnance is held in the highest esteem by the Scottish people; in fact, it holds a position in their hearts similar to our feelings toward our own Liberty bell.

Mons Meg was made at Mons, Belgium, about the year 1503, by order of James IV., and was named Meg in honor of his wife, Margaret Tudor, the daughter of Henry VII. Its great bulk and weight rendered it almost worthless in those days of hand to hand conflicts. However, it was used on special occasions to help celebrate national events. In the reports of the financial transactions of the times may be found charges for "grease for Meg's mouth" (this was used to increase the loudness of the report), ribbons to deck her carriage and pipes to be played before her when accompanying the Scottish army on an expedition. After the union in 1707 the people feared that the "odious surrender of national independence" would be consummated by the removal of Mons Meg to England. In 1757 the piece was removed to Woolwich, but it was restored to Scotland in 1828, "to quiet the people."

Although only a mere mass of rusty iron, it is revered by the people today and is always decorated with thistle and other flowers on anniversary days. In processions it has always had the place of honor, but recently it was decided that it was dangerous to submit it to the shock of cartage, and now it looks down from its resting place over the great Scot city.—Chicago Herald.

FORCES OF NATURE.

Soft Their Touch, but Constant and Effective Their Work.

What adds to the wonder of the earth's grist is that the millstones that did the work and are still doing it are the gentle forces that career above our heads—the sunbeam, the cloud, the air, the frost. The rain's gentle fall, the air's velvet touch, the sun's noiseless rays, the frost's exquisite crystals, these combined are the agents that crush the rocks, pulverise the mountains and transform continents of sterile granite into a world of fertile soil.

It is as if baby fingers did the work of powder and dynamite. Give the clouds and the sunbeams time enough and the Alps and the Andes disappear before them or are transformed into plains where corn may grow and cattle graze.

The snow falls as lightly as down and lies almost as lightly, yet the crags tumble beneath it; compacted by gravity, out of it grew the tremendous ice sheet that ground off the mountain summits, that scooped out lakes and valleys and modeled our northern landscapes as the sculptor his clay image.—John Burroughs.

The Gatling Gun.

Richard Jordan Gatling, the inventor of the gun bearing his name, was a native of Hertford county, N. C., where he was born in 1818. The Gatling gun was not used to any extent during the war between the states, a dozen or so being employed by Butler on the James river. The invention was not made fairly practical until 1865, when the gun was adopted into the United States service.

MINUTES IN MANHATTAN

By Gotham Knickerbocker

International News Service Special Dispatch

New York, Mar. 6.—The proposal, once made, whether in jest or earnest has never been determined, to change the name of Arkansas, never drew from the late fire-eating Jefferson Davis, of that sovereign state, a more bitter and denunciatory protest, than the suggestion that the New York marriage bureau be moved from historic City Hall to the newer and more ornate Municipal Building, has evoked from Alderman John J. ("Happy Jack") Riordan.

Somebody or something, most likely it was a newspaper, made the assertion that the dark and dismal basement of the old City Hall was not a cheerful and fitting place for the abode of Hymen. Since Father Knickerbocker, it pointed out, has a brand new skyscraper for his very own, with plenty of bright and airy rooms, it would be more appropriate to have the "Marriage Mart" in the new quarters.

Some of the Aldermen agreed that this was so. But not all of them. The notable exception was "Happy Jack" Riordan, of the Twentieth Assembly District.

It is a foregone conclusion that the fight in the Board of Aldermen over the doing away of the Marriage Bureau in the City Hall will be one of the liveliest ever held.

At present the bureau is conducted by two men designated by the City Clerk. But to perform the ceremony they must have an Alderman, so "Happy Jack" is called in. In Brooklyn and the other boroughs the Aldermen find marrying couples profitable, and the attempt to take it away from them undoubtedly will be bitterly resented.

Those in charge of the "Marriage Bureau" are not permitted to ask for fees. The rule is that they must state that any money given for services or for certificates of marriage must be given voluntarily. However, the marriage certificates are so beautifully gotten up with gilt and plastered with huge impressive seals that they are sure to loosen the purse of any happy bridegroom.

No clergyman in the United States, probably, has to his credit having joined in wedlock half as many people as "Happy Jack." That is one reason he has so many friends.

Not only in his own district, which he has represented for ten years, but all over the greater city, Riordan is known as "Happy Jack." From morning until night he can be found in the chapel in the basement of the City Hall, ready to join all comers in holy matrimony with the tie that binds.

One of the reasons urged by those who want to move the Marriage Bureau is that the basement of the City Hall is dark and dismal. But another reason urged is the allegation that the Aldermen who hang around the City Hall for the purpose of performing marriages, do so for the purpose of making their living that way and hold up the bridegrooms for high fees, humiliating them before their brides if they fail to produce a dignified sum for the official.

This is indignantly denied by Riordan. He says he marries people for the love he bears his fellow man, that he takes whatever fee is offered and had joined many men and women for no fee at all.

Kiss the brides? —No. "Happy Jack" doesn't have to. All that is necessary for the blissful couple who have been made man and wife is to have one of "Happy Jack's" wonderful smiles bestowed upon them. It is his smile that has won for him the cognomen of "Happy Jack." It is one of those kindly, fatherly smiles that once received is never forgotten.

Right here at the urgent request of "Happy Jack" himself let it be denied once and for all that he ever was a hack driver, as has been erroneously stated in public print on several occasions. Not that he cares anything about it nor would he be ashamed of it were it true. But "Happy Jack" is emphatic in his denial.

"I don't care what anybody says about me," he declares, "but let's have the truth. I never drove a hack in my life. I drove a coach for years, but never a hack. And I drove for some of the best stables in New York, too. I drove to funerals and I took calls from the stables where I was employed. But I never in all my life picked up a fare on the street. That's what hacking is. No one can say truthfully that I ever hacked."

"It was almost ten years ago that "Happy Jack" became an Alderman, and he has been re-elected again and again. If he has his say about it he is going to continue to be Alderman as long as he lives, and if his friends continue to increase as they have been there is little doubt about his having his way.

"It's the best job I ever had," he says without hesitation, "and I ought to know, because I have worked at everything. I gave up driving a coach to become a gas inspector, and that's what I was doing when I was first elected Alderman."

TO REVISE METHODS OF AMENDING CONSTITUTION.

Entirely New Plan of Revision Proposed by Commission.

A movement has been launched by the committee on the federal constitution for a revision of methods of amending the constitution of the United States that will make it easier to secure needed amendments in the future. A resolution embodying the committee's plan was recently introduced in congress by Representative Bryan of Washington. A two-thirds vote in both houses of congress and ratification by three-fourths of the state legislatures will be necessary to the adaption of this resolution.

The changes provided for in the resolution would reduce the vote by which congress proposes amendments to the constitution from two-thirds to a simple majority and of the number of the state legislatures required for the ratification of amendments from three-fourths to two-thirds. In addition to this an entirely new plan of revising the constitution is proposed.

This new plan calls for the submission to the voters every twenty years of the question whether a convention shall be called to propose amendments to the constitution, and when decided in the affirmative delegates are chosen and the convention assembled on the 4th of March two years afterward, while amendments proposed by the convention are voted on at the ensuing presidential election, a two-thirds vote being required for ratification. This plan is almost identical with the convention system of amending state constitutions as followed in New York and other states.

The committee believes that the present method of amending the constitution is outworn and unworkable and that if the constitution is in the future to be adapted to changing social and political needs a more liberal method of amendment must be adopted. It is claimed in behalf of the plan that it requires full deliberation, does not encroach on the rights of the states

Bowser's Dead Friend

He Comes Back to Earth in the Form of a Dog.

By M. QUAD.

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Mr. Bowser smoked and read.

Then he chucked the paper away and talked to the cat.

Then he hummed the air of a song.

Then he looked at the clock.

Then he rose up and stretched and yawned.

What he would have done next cannot be told, as the mournful howl of a dog came from the street to cause Mrs. Bowser to exclaim:

"Mercy on me, but go out and drive that beast away!"

"By George, but that's a curious coincidence!" exclaimed Mr. Bowser as he got up. "It was only this afternoon that I was reading a long article on transmigration, and here a dog comes howling in front of my door."

"I don't see any curious coincidence about it," replied Mrs. Bowser. "If you had been reading a long article about Noah and his ark the dog would have come just the same. Please go out and club him away."

"I'll do nothing of the sort. How can we tell that the soul of some of our dead friends has not passed into that dog and returned to the earth again?"

"Nonsense!"

"You may sneer and sneer, but there are thousands who believe in transmigration. I'm almost a believer myself.

THERE WAS A MIXUP FOR A FEW SECONDS.

Hear that howl? There's something about it to remind me of the voice of some one who I have known. I won't do any driving away until I've had a look at the animal."

Mr. Bowser put on his hat and passed out. The dog sat at the gate and was getting ready for another howl but choked it off into a whine as the door opened. As no clubs were thrown or cuss words used he made bold to jump the fence and enter the yard. He was a long, lank, ill used bobtailed dog who had evidently cut loose from home and was freelancing around the country. Mr. Bowser was about to utter a yell and scare the canine out of a year's growth when Mrs. Bowser spoiled it all by opening the door and demanding:

"Well, why don't you drive him away, or has he turned out to be an old friend of yours?"

Mr. Bowser snapped his fingers, and as the dog came trotting up the steps he was ushered into the hall and through to the sitting room. The family cat was lying under a chair and seemed asleep, but it didn't take her over the thousandth part of a second to wake up and fight on that intruder. There was a mixup for a few seconds, during which Mrs. Bowser ran upstairs. Mr. Bowser got a chair, and cat and dog rolled over each other on the floor. Then the cat flew upstairs after Mrs. Bowser, and the dog sat down and looked at Mr. Bowser and waited for further instructions.

"What on earth did you do that for?" called Mrs. Bowser from the head of the stairs.

"Because I'm going to give this dog a show," answered Mr. Bowser. "I'm going to give him something to eat and then study him."

It happened to be the cook's night off or there would have been a riot in the kitchen. As it was, Mr. Bowser cleared the pantry for the dog, and when there was nothing more to eat he returned to the sitting room. Mrs. Bowser came down just then to say:

"I never heard of such a silly thing in all my life. Why don't you turn him out?"

"Let me tell you something," replied Mr. Bowser. "There's a familiar look about that dog's face. There's an expression about the mouth which awakens a memory. Say, now, but just as true as you live one of the best friends I ever knew had just such an expression! Upon my word, I believe the soul of Will Baker, who died two years ago, has passed into this dog."

"Then it had better pass out again. I'll open the door and you jump at him."

"I'll do nothing of the kind. That expression almost clinches my belief in transmigration. Suppose it should be the soul of my friend come back to earth again? See him look at me! Why, woman, that dog seems to understand every word I say!"

"Well, you can talk over old times with him, and I'll go upstairs," replied Mrs. Bowser. "If he suddenly runs mad and bites you don't blame any one but yourself."

"He's queer, mighty queer," mused Mr. Bowser after a long study of the dog's face. "That is Will Baker's mouth to a dot. If he comes back to earth in the form of a dog I'll not go back on him. A dog can't talk, but if this is poor Will there ought to be some way of making sure of it. Doggie"—

The dog didn't wait for him to finish. He lifted his head and indulged in a long drawn howl which made things rattle.

"For heaven's sake, but what is going on down there?" shouted Mrs. Bowser.

"The dog howled. I was going to ask him if the soul of Will Baker had returned to earth in this form when he"—

There was another howl. It was louder and longer than the other, and there was something so uncanny about it that Mr. Bowser found chills racing up and down his back. He determined to turn the soul of Will Baker into the street forthwith, but he instantly discovered an obstruction in his path. The soul objected—that is, the dog stood firmly planted on his feet before him and not only howled again, but finished up with a menacing growl and a vigorous scratching of the carpet with all four feet.

"What is it now?" shouted Mrs. Bowser.

"The blame cur won't let me move! I believe he's going mad! You'd better open a front window and yell for the police!"

"We don't want to arouse the whole neighborhood and have them laughing at you. If that's the soul of your dearest friend he'll go out if you'll ask him to. Is the expression of the mouth the same as it was?"

"It's a heap worse! Can't you slip down and open the front door?"

Mrs. Bowser said she'd try it, but she didn't. The dog decided to take a view of the second story and made a start. She heard him coming and had just time to reach her bedroom and shut the door when he banged against it. He tore around for a minute or two and then got downstairs and drove Mr. Bowser on to the lounge and stood before him and growled and chuckled and gurgled in a way to freeze the blood. It was evident that the soul of Will Baker had shut his eyes and felt his helplessness when the family cat came to his rescue. She had been licked in the fight, but she had been taken by surprise and hadn't a fair show. Burning to recover her lost laurels after hiding for fifteen minutes under the bed, she had sneaked downstairs, and all of a sudden she landed on the dog's back. The soul of Mr. Bowser's old chum was both pained and surprised at the sharpness of her teeth and the length of her claws. He made two turns around the sitting room, three around the parlor, and then there was a smash, a crash and a howl. With the cat clinging to his back and putting in ten hours a day the dog had taken a header through a parlor window, and the Bowsers were saved.

"And this," said Mrs. Bowser as she got downstairs and found Mr. Bowser pale faced and trembling and his knees bending under him—"this is transmigration, is it?"

"I thought—I thought"— he stammered, but she pointed to the broken window and interrupted:

"Yes, I know, and that's the result of it! You'd better let souls and dogs and transmigration alone and find some boards to nail over it till tomorrow!"

Mr. Bowser tried to work up a bluff and save his dignity, but it was a vain effort. There was a feeling as if a cold iron was being moved up and down his spine, and the wabble of his knees took his breath away.

A Rapid Calculation Trick.

By means of a simple arrangement of numbers a calculation can be made which will easily puzzle any unsuspecting person. If the two numbers 41,096 and 83 be written out in multiplication form very few will endeavor to write down the answer directly without first going through the regular work. By placing the 3 in front of the 4 and the 8 back of the 6 the answer is obtained at once, thus: 41,096x83 equals 3,410,968. A larger number which can be treated in the same way is the following: 4,109,589,041,096x83 equals 341,095,890,410,968.—Popular Mechanics.

He Was a Very Mean Man

By OSCAR COX

I knew a man who was so mean that he married a woman he believed to be waiting for his best friend to marry her.

Ralph Newland and Herbert Tucker were the friends. Ralph was the selfish man. Herbert was so generous that he would have given away his head if it could have been of use to another. The secret of Ralph's power over women no one could explain except the girls he fooled, and it is a question if even they knew just how he did it. At any rate, he seemed to draw them as honey draws flies.

Tucker became engaged to Laura Perkins and introduced his friend Newland to her. Within a fortnight she had deserted Tucker for Newland. Tucker was philosophic about it. He said that if the girl preferred his friend to him his friend was welcome to her and she to him. After the damage had been done Newland sheered off and left Miss Perkins out in the cold. She tried to make it up with Tucker, but Tucker would have nothing to do with her. What made her mad was that Tucker seemed to be more friendly than before with the man who had deprived him of her. It was a direct reflection on her, indicating that Tucker felt grateful for having been saved from her.

After awhile Tucker made up to another girl, Helen Spingler. He introduced Newland to this one, too, telling him that if he could win her away from him he was welcome to do so. Tucker didn't want any girl for a wife who didn't love him better than the whole world. He asked his friend to put his second love to a similar test to the first. Newland accommodated him and captured the girl.

Tucker was so pleased at having been saved from a girl who could not have been in love with him—so he considered it—that he blew Newland off to a champagne dinner. Newland was surprised that his friend took all this supplanting with such equanimity, but could not detect the slightest wounding of his amour propre. "It's all right," said Tucker, "only a matter of taste. Some day I may find a girl who will truly love me; then no one can take her away from me. Meanwhile I appreciate these services you are doing me."

Newland dropped the last girl as he had dropped the first. Miss Spingler had more tact than the other. She didn't let on she was a bit displeased. She only said that there wasn't enough in both the men to make one real, noble, good man, and she was well rid of both of them. But she did not say this to either Tucker or Newland; she said it to a friend. As to the men, she told them she hoped they would both be her friends for ever and ever. This was after she had known of how Tucker stuck to Newland despite the way the former was taking the latter's girl away from him, and probably she wanted to show that a woman might have an equanimity of that kind in her as well as a man.

One day Newland received an anonymous note informing him that Tucker was courting a third girl and keeping it a secret from his friend. Newland showed the note to Tucker, who denied the impeachment. Newland only half believed him. Only persons of real innocence believe in the innocence of others, and Newland wasn't exactly an innocent man, as may appear from this story.

Presently he received another letter informing him that Tucker was about to be married. Newland did not show this letter to Tucker. He kept it to himself, but concluded to watch his friend. It happened that Tucker had a platonic friend on whom he called occasionally, and one evening Newland shadowed him to her house.

"I wonder," said Newland to himself, "if after all I've done for him he thinks he's going to fool me. I'll get even with him."

Tucker told Newland one day that he was going out of town for a week. A few hours after the parting Newland was called to the telephone, and the following brief dialogue occurred between him and a female voice:

"Mr. Newland?"

"Yes, I'm Newland."

"Are you aware that your friend, Mr. Tucker, is about to be married this evening?"

"No. Is he?"

"Yes, at a quarter to 9 at 274 Mulford street."

"You don't mean it?"

There was a click, and Newland could get nothing more. It was half past 8. No time to lose. He was in evening dress, ready for a wedding. Calling a cab, in ten minutes he was at 274 Mulford street and entered a room where a bride and two bridesmaids were evidently awaiting the groom. The bride was veiled, and the bridesmaids turned away.

"For heaven's sake, don't marry Herbert Tucker," he said to the bride. "He will make your life miserable."

There was a hurried dialogue. The bride said she had promised to marry and must marry, whereupon Newland declared that rather than have her sacrifice herself he would marry her. A parson waiting in the next room was called in, the bridesmaids turned, each let down a veil, and the couple were married. When they were pronounced man and wife the three women raised their veils.

The bride was old and homely. One bridesmaid was Miss Perkins, the other Miss Spingler.

VIRTUE OF AN APPLE.

At One Time the Fruit Was Called the "Food of the Gods."

The apple has become so familiar as the commonest of all fruits that its value as man's greatest friend in the vegetable kingdom may not be fully realized. It was called the "food of the gods" because it was believed to be the magic renewer of youth to which the gods resorted when they felt themselves growing old and feeble.

There have been many mystic traditions about the apple, which has been credited with varied potency. It is the healing fruit of the Arabian tales. Latin chronicles and institutes and early English poems contain many references to it. Scientific analysis of late years has justified all the ancient glorification of this fruit, which has been found to contain albumen, sugar, gum, malic acid, gallic acid, fiber, water and phosphorus.

Malic acid of apples neutralizes the excess of chalky matter caused by too much meat and thereby helps to keep us young. Apples are good for the complexion, as their acids drive out the noxious matters which cause skin eruptions. They are good for the brain, which those same noxious matters, if retained, render sluggish. The acids of the apple diminish the acidity of the stomach that comes with some forms of indigestion.

The phosphorus, of which apples contain a larger per cent than any other fruit or vegetable, renews the cerebral matter of the brain and spinal cord.—Boston Herald.

RIBBONS FOR TRIMMINGS.

Placed on Millinery and Gowns Are Popular Decorations.

Ribbons will have large use for millinery decoration and for girdles on dresses, says the Dry Goods Economist. Narrow grosgrains will prevail for the former and wide, plain ribbons for the latter purpose. Striped and check effects will be dominant in the fancy novelties.

Veilings worn in loose, draped fashion will be in great vogue. Bordered ones will be popular. Hand run designs, velvet spots and fillet meshes will be features.

Millinery features are ultra small sailor, poke, toque and tricorn shapes, lisere straw in combination with other braids; small, flat, floral trimmings; narrow grosgrain and georgette satin ribbons, fancy button and straw novelties and compact feather effects.

Spring Cleaning Hint.

To clean ecru or cream curtains without washing tack a sheet to the floor, stretch curtain on this and cover with coarse salt and cornmeal. Rub briskly with a whisk broom fifteen minutes and you will have clean curtains and color as bright as new.

BEAUTY SNAPSHOTS.

It is claimed that tea boiled with water and strained is a mild astringent lotion for lessening hair falling.

A cold shower bath every morning will do much toward hardening the skin to winds.

An excellent practice to insure bright eyes and a clear skin is to take the juice of a lemon in a glass of water, with a dash of salt added. This acts directly on the liver, which has more to do with good looks than many imagine.

Pale, sparse eyebrows and lashes make a face expressionless. They can be coaxed into a better growth by rubbing the eyebrows nightly with vaseline.

If your hands perspire too freely, add a few drops of tincture of myrrh to the water in which you rinse them after washing. Then dry thoroughly and dust with boracic acid or oatmeal.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Shortness of Breath.

There are many ways in which shortness of breath may arise. It is often one of the symptoms of illness. When a person begins to complain of habitual shortness of breath it is important to have a physical examination made without delay. One reason is that tuberculosis often begins with no other symptoms than shortness of breath and a slight cough. If these cases are seen and diagnosed very early it is not difficult to arrest them.

The symptom is, of course, present in such troubles as pneumonia, broncho-pneumonia and pleurisy, which attack the organs of breath directly. Violent exercise naturally causes temporary shortness of breath. In the case of healthy people it disappears quickly when the exercise ceases. If it does not do so it is a good plan to have a careful examination in order to find out what is wrong. Young people sometimes persist in a favorite form of exercise after they have begun to notice their shortening breath. In that way they may do themselves lifelong injury.

THIRTY-ONE CARS IN CUP RACES

Fast Time Expected by Seasoned Drivers; Grant and Cooper Out Of It.

San Francisco, Mar. 6.—Under ideal weather and track conditions the Vanderbilt cup race will be run today on the Exposition course.

Thirty-one cars will leave the starting line at 12.30 (3.30 Eastern time).

The Vanderbilt, of 296¼ miles, is 100 miles shorter than the Grand Prix race. Expert drivers have estimated that the contest will be won at a 70-mile an hour pace.

There have been two important switches in the list of drivers. Bod Burman takes the place of Harry Grant in the Case car that made such a good showing in the Grand Prix a week ago and Grant, in turn, wil take the place of Earl Cooper in the Stutz car. Cooper was taken suddenly ill last night and was unable to compete in the race.

G. C. Bergdoll of Philadelphia, who was injured while tuning up his machine on the exposition track two weeks ago, will not start. He was scheduled to drive an Erwin Special.

The following is the list of entries:

Maxwell, Barney Oldfield; Dusenberg, Tom Alley, Tams, J. Gable; Mercer, Eddie Pullen; Stutz, Gil Anderson; Mercer, G. E. Ruckstell; Edwards Special, Captain Kennedy; Stutz, Harry Grant; Peugeot, D. REPAIRING A PUNCTURED ZEPPELIN UNDER WAY.

SECTIONAL VIEW SHOWING HOW THE SEPERATE GAS BAGS CAN BE REACHED FROM BELOW BY N.Y. HERALD

This view, drawn specially for this newspaper, the New York Herald and the London Sphere, by D. Macpherson, shows how the separate gas bags (or balloonets) are contained within the maze of aluminum alloy girdering. If a shot penetrates the outer covering and pierces a balloonet the Zeppelin will lose a certain amount of gas, but not to the extent to which a ripped Parseval would suffer. It is possible for the staff, armed with light oxygen helmets, to climb within the framework and repair holes in the balloonet fabric. Smaller stays are strung between the main girdering. Where the propellers occur the transverse framework is very considerably strengthened on a rectangular plan.

"SANITO" COOKING UTENSILS

are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

RUSSIA CLAIMS 50,000 GERMAN-AUSTRO CAPTIVES

Petrograd, Mar. 6.—With the cessation of blizzards in the Carpathians, the Russian armies have resumed activity.

In Bukowina their right flank has crossed the Prath river and has opened an attack on Skienowiece.

In southeastern Galicia, the Russians after capturing Stanislau and Koomea, have pressed the Austro-German forces back to Nadwina and are advancing against that town. In this region the Teutonic allies have lost in a single week all the ground they gained in a campaign lasting a month and a half.

Near Wyszkow and at the Lupkow and Dukla Passes the Czar's troops are driving home attacks upon the infrenched Austrians, while along the Dunajecc river a general battle has opened southwest of Tarnow. The Austrians there hold a front of great strength to protect Cracow, but the Russians have won some important positions at Zakliczyn.

From Zakliczyn to Czernowitz it is about 250 miles in a straight line, but because of the irregular front, the battle line through Galicia into Bukowina is about 375 miles.

The Russian successes about Stanislau are the most important that have been gained in the southern arena in several months. Three Austro-German divisions totalling 9000 men were trapped between the Zlota and Czarna rivers and forced to surrender while the attack upon Stanislau itself was made with such rapidity and vigor that the Russians captured 14,000 more men there, together with 75 cannon and machine guns and a vast quantity of supplies which the Austrians and Germans had taken there with the purpose of using Stanislau as a base for the campaign against Lemburg.

In operations along other portions of the Galician front the Russians have taken more than 26,000 additional prisoners. According to the official army messenger, at least 55,000 Austrian and German soldiers have been taken in the southern arena.

Kiew dispatches state that train after train of prisoners are arriving there. These come from the Galicia-Bukowina front.

In the meantime the Russians are maintaining their slow and cautious advance in Poland. Latest reports from the Niemen front state that the Germans there are merely maintaining their positions. Their greatest activity is in the vicinity of Mlawa, where they are conccentrating heavy forces while awaiting the result of their operations against the fortress of Ossowiec.

The German artillery is keeping up a steady rain of shells upon Ossowiec. The town is reported to be burning, but the forts there still hold out and are replying vigorously, to the German gunners.

The booty captured by the Russians at Przasnysz has been taken to Warsaw. It includes twelve cannon, 29 machine guns, 122 ammunition wagons, a scouting aeroplane and a number of trains.

The Germans prisoners who have reached Siedloe state that they were without bread for four days before they were captured at Przasnysz. They admit the German army there suffered heavily, many companies losing much of their great strength.

AN IDEAL COUNTRY SCHOOL

High ideals in sanitary requirements for rural schools are proposed in a bulletin that is distributed through the United States Bureau of Education. The bulletin comes from the Joint Committee on Health Problems in Education, composed of members of the National Education Association and the American Medical Association.

The general suggestion is that "the country school should be as sanitary and wholesome in essential particulars as the best home in the community."

"The school should be located in a healthful place," declares the committee. "Noise should be eliminated; children should not be obliged to walk farther than two miles or ride more than six; play-grounds should be ample and well drained; and the school ground should include a real garden or experimental farm, with trees and plants grouped artistically."

The schoolhouse, according to the bulletin, should be as nearly fireproof as possible. Doors should open outward. A small room for consultations and emergency purposes, and one for workshop, instruction in cooking and preparing refreshments, should be provided.

In the matter of ventilation ond heating, the bulletin gives specific instructions: Fresh air should be provided through window board ventilators except where the furnace or jacketed stove is used, in which case adequate inlets and outlets should be prepared. Every school should have a thermometer and temperature in cold weather should be between 66 and 68 degrees Fahrenheit.

Light should be abundant. "The best arrangement," says the bulletin, "is to have the light come only from the left side of the pupil and from the long wall of the classroom. The schoolroom should receive direct sunlight sometime during the day, but the main windows should not face directly south. East or west facing is desirable. In providing shades for windows dark ones should be used at the top of windows to control light on bright days.

"There should be no dry sweeping or dusting," says the committee. "Floors and furniture should be cleaned with damp sweepers and oily clothes. Scrubbing, sunning, and airing are better than any form of fumigation."

The common drinking cup should not be tolerated. Care should be taken that drinking water always comes from a safe source. Drinking fountains, located just inside or outside the schoolhouse, with sufficient pressure for running water, should be provided. That water for washing should be easily accessible and should be utilized always before eating seems little enough to ask, but many schools are found to be lacking in this respect."—Times, Bucalo.

Does Your Spine Shiver?

"A shivering spine," said a psychologist, "is the one infallible proof of an artistic temperament. Does a shiver run up and down your spine when you listen to beautiful music or read a lovely poem or look at a superb painting? If not the gates of art are closed to you forever. All great artists and all good critics experience this shivering sensation of the backbone before a worthy work of art. Some of these men use the shiver as a measure. The work that does not evoke it they pronounce a failure. My own spine shivers best to music. The violin solo that precedes the last act of Massenet's 'Thais' sets up in me a tremolo movement that wrinkles the back of my coat."

Much Inquiry Regarding a Patent Course Finder Handled by John S. Parsons.

Captain C. A. Potter, United States Steamboat Inspector for this district, with headquarters in Oswego, and for several years one of the best known masters on the lakes, is preparing to send out a great number of his course finder coast converters through John S. Parsons, the general distributor and sales agent for the United States and Canada. The inquiry comes mostly from Canada, where it is said that the Government is to place mines in the lower channel of the St. Lawrence river as a precautionary measure against a dash from a German gunboat or submarine.

This invention is said to be of great benefit to all marine men—amateurs as well as professional. The instrument is intended particularly for use in lake and ocean navigation, for shaping a ship's course on a chart, and also for converting a true course into a magnetic or compass course, or vice versa, by a comparatively simple but absolutely accurate instrument that is readily understood and operated by an unskilled mariner, equally as well as by a professional navigator.

By using this new, simple course finder and course converter, the navigator, be he amateur or professional, eliminates all possibility of error in shaping a ship's course, or in converting from one kind of a course to another.—Palladium.

The Wonderful Electric Stove
Within Reach of All Does Every Kind of Cooking Perfectly

Here is really a wonderful piece of news that every housewife should know about—the HUGHES ELECTRIC RANGE "17."

First of all, it is a perfect stove. By electricity it bakes, roasts, stews, fries, boils, better than coal, wood or gas stoves.

Anybody can afford it. It is strongly built for heavy duty—blue polished steel with nickel plated corners oven finished with special aluminum rust-proof prepartion.

It completely satisfies the cooking requirements of moderate sized families. The oven has a capacity of 3 loaves of bread, 2 pies, a 10-lb. roast, or 2 layerr cakes. With the oven removed, the two open range burners make possible frying, stewing, coffee making, etc.

Cook with electricity. It is clean, absolutely safe, makes perfect delicious dishes possible, and gives you much more leisure than do other stoves.

Men Who Shoot Game

There are 5,000,000 men in the United States who shoot game, according to an estimate made by the United States Department of Agriculture. In New York alone there are issued 250,000 hunting licenses. At a meeting of members of the American Game Protective Association in New York city recently, it was shown that throughout the United States there were a total of 1,500,000 hunting licenses issued. All States do not have licenses, and in States having them, men may hunt without them on their own farms. Figures showed that 500,000 rifles and shot guns were sold last year. The sale of cartridges amounted to 1,000,000,000. It is estimated that charges fired from muzzle loading weapons numbered 250,000,000. This shows that the old muzzle loader still holds forth in parts of the United States.

Of course, most of this shooting is not directed towards game. Moreover, most of the shots intended for game do not reach their mark. That is a very fortunate thing, for otherwise representatives of every game bird and animal by this time would be stuffed and on exhibition in museums as extinct specimens. Even as conditions stand the woodcock, it is said, is approaching extinction.

That the shooting is effective enough is shown by the fact that 15,000 deer were killed in the State last year. The deer population of the State is put at over 30,000 by H. T. Rogers, superintendent of the State Game Farm. But the deer are holding their own.

This can not be said of other game. Sportsmen and others should favor greater restrictions. Even the discontinuance of the open season for partridges, woodcock and other game birds and animals for a year or two would be an excellent method of increasing their numbers. It would do much more than dozens of game farms could accomplish.

It is worth noting that among 5,000,000 men who know something about handling guns many of them would make excellent material for soldiers, should the occasion require it. Not only their ability to shoot straight would be useful, but the outdoor life must add to their ability to endure the fatigues of campaigns and to take care of themselves in the field. —Sentinel, Rome.

The Quakers' Turn

The American Legion, 300,000 drilled men ready to answer a call to arms, should be encouraged by the people. In becoming prepared for war that we may have peace, the legion is only one of many agencies needed to assist the regular army. Had England been prepared for war peace would now prevail in Europe. It has taken months for nations with resources many times the resources of Germany to get in shape to fight. It was the unpreparedness of England, France and Russia which induced Germany to strike. If war were inevitable and the allies were prepared the war would have been over by this time and the slaughter would have been a tithe of the recorded casualties. When it is considered that this country has thousands of miles of seacoast to protect, that it has ammunition for nearly an hour's firing, that it has an army insignificant in size and national guards not as capable as German's last grade of defenders, it is necessary that there should be a mobile force of men who can at least fire a gun to promptly spring to the aid of the army.

This peace talk is as dangerous as jingoism. At a time when none would be surprised if it were announced that the temple of peace at The Hague were to be used for military service peace societies should take a long adjournment. They should take the jingoes with them and talk it out, for there is no real fight in a jingo more than in a Quaker, and permit the normal men of the country to do the sensible thing toward organizing for defense.

The brethren who fear that an ambitious and unscrupulous man at the head of the legion might attempt to seize the government, ought to join the jingoes and the Quakers. This country is safe from internal troubles as long as the majority of its citizens are men of patriotism and of intelligence and sound judgment. The majority of the safe and sound is growing.—Standard, Watertown.

DAWN O' DAY

Money in the ginger-jar, in the stocking, under the bed, or buried in the garden in an iron pot, is all worse than useless. It is an invitation to bugs, microbes, yeggmen, hoboes and fear.

Man and money both active are productive of greater good. Were the individuals of a community to bottle themselves up in their homes, tie their money in a sack and wear it around their necks the word "Finish" would soon be displayed upon their horizon. Yet every community has its people who are doing the thing which is as far from real sanity. Last summer, John Knox, business efficiency man, told us, while the majestic Oswego rolled her voiceless applause, just his ideas in connection with the "community grafters" as he delightfully named them.

"A live newspaper is the greatest asset a community can have, and to live it must be properly supported," said Mr. Knox one day. Granting a newspaper is a public asset then it is of value to the community. How shall we name the individuals who tell us to "go to it" and when we've really become successfully launched they will bring us their business too? How would we name the individual who bade his neighbor spread a feast, a good one, and when it be spread, and if it were really a success, he would consent to place his feet beneath the festive board and partake of the good things prepared.

Fulton's Evening Times is a community asset in the making. The merchant who deliberately pays fifty cents per inch in the Syracuse papers for his bit of advertising not only is placing his sentiment against the home paper, but he is paying fifty cents per inch to bring into our city advertising matter in competition to his own business. Whole pages of advertisements from the big shops in Syracuse are arrayed against the local advertiser's little business card. Then we wonder why home people are so disloyal as to shop in Syracuse.

Plainly, the facts arrayed look lack of business principle, and a total absence of civic pride.

Who needs awakening? It's dawn o' day!

People Get What They Want Here In Fulton

Editor of The Evening Times:

The long winded discussion between Edward Joslin and someone labeled "Observer," I believe, has served its purpose so far as Mr. Joslin is concerned. He has received a lot of free advertising, everyone knowing that he is in the hardware business; that he is a Methodist from his head down and from his feet up and we also have learned just what he thinks about the Oswego Y. M. C. A. Now devote a liberal space free to Mr. Joslin for the advertising of his wares, thus giving the readers of your paper a well earned rest.

"Observer" went to the First Methodist church one day. It appears that the congregation failed to proclaim him the long lost sheep; that the minister, conducting the service, neglected to invite him to dinner; and, the most disappointing part of the entire thing was, gentlemen, the man passing the contribution box didn't see fit to make him a present of the contents. He wasn't appreciated.

Do you blame Mr. "Observer" for feeling peeved? Without a doubt, some clever fakir had told him in advance how easily he had trimmed up the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Fulton, so he took it for granted that he would be hugged and kissed, slapped on the back and both hands shaken until he was exhausted by the good church going people. Observer's case is an exception, for strangers always get what they want here in Fulton.

People with a clean mind, I am informed, usually go to church, not to be made of and proclaimed a social lion; but, on the other hand, because they feel that they hear and learn things there which benefit and console them; that for a brief time their minds are free from the cares and troubles of the world; and, above all, that they are following the teachings of the Good Book and are keeping close to their Maker.

H. L. GILMAN.

Liberal to the Navy

No previous Congress has been as liberal to the navy as the one which has just expired. The total amount appropriated in the two years of the life of this Congress is $87,945,531. This includes a million dollars for aviation, and $800,000 which was reappropriated from savings effected during the last fiscal year.

We have not believed that all the criticisms leveled at our navy—some of which came from men who were high in authority—was deserved; although the layman and outsider is not prepared to give an opinion as to the efficiency and readiness of the navy in the event of war. Also, we have felt that perhaps we have not been getting all we had reason to believe we ought to get for the money we have been pouring into the navy. It has been stated that we have spent in the last 15 years more money for our navy than Germany has spent in the same time; yet there is no doubt whatever that Germany has a better navy than the United States, and if we were called to confront the German navy we would not be in good condition to do so. We don't know how the money has been wasted, or why we have not been given better results. Thirteen of those 15 years were under Republican administrations, and it is up to the leaders in that party to say why they failed to produce results.

But this is aside from the question. The thing to recognize is that the present administration, and the Democratic Congress which has accompanied its first two years of administration, has been very liberal indeed to the navy, and cannot be criticised for being niggardly in appropriations. It remains only to be seen whether the Democrats can and will produce the results which we had a right to expect from their rivals, and in which they appear to have failed.

Will that vast sum of money that has been appropriated for the navy give us such a force of naval vessels, including ships of all sorts, destroyers, cruisers, submarines and air craft, that those people who are lying awake nights fearing that Japan is coming in on one side, or Germany, France, England or somebody else on the other, and "levy tribute on our great seaports," may rest in quietness and with a feeling of security?

Will the five dreadnaughts, the three seagoing submarines, the 23 coast defense submarines, the 12 torpedo boat destroyers, the million dollars' worth of new aircraft, the additions to navy yards for the construction of ships and the manufacture of munitions of war, and the three real admirals that we are to have—will these things, costing $87,945,531, satisfy the demands that have been so industriously worked from the Atlantic to the Pacific for "an adequate navy?"

Will the critics relapse into silence, or must we continue to hear about our obsolete ships, unprepared to fire more than one broadside, undermanned, unready, halting and lame?

We fear the latter, for even now "a high naval authority" (name not given) is quoted by a jingo newspaper as saying that the appropriation ought to have been a "full hundred millions."—Observer, Utica.

War: Pathos and Humor

A STRANGE FATALITY

Paris, Mar. 8.—The official war despatches furnish many instances that prove truth indeed is stranger than fiction. Two "mentions" read together form a human document at once of pathos and heroism:

(1) Nogues, soldier of the second-class of the 153d infantry regiment, aged 56, gave a noble example of devotion to his country by volunteering in the same ranks as his son, a young soldier of the 1914 class. Was killed in the trenches by a fragment of shell, while his son was severely wounded at his side.

(2) Nogues, soldier of the second-class, of 153d infantry regiment, was seriously wounded by a fragment of shell while his father, aged 56, who had volunteered for the duration of the war, was killed at his side.

It was by the same shell, at the same moment, and side by side, that father and son were struck down.

Quite a good spy story this time, and with quite a refreshing touch of originality, is told by the Matin on excellent authority. It was up in the north, not far from Bethune, and towards dusk. A small procession appeared and made its way slowly and solemnly towards the French lines. It consisted of a captive Uhlan, straitly surrounded by two gendarmes, and at its head a brigadier in fine new uniform—an impressive figure. The captive Uhlan was the best passport there could be, and the little procession passed through the French lines without let or hindrance. So the generdarmes and their prisoner, who had a convincing, hang-dog air, continued their walk till they reached and overpassed the first line of trenches. All the time it might have been noticed, but at first was not, they were taking a keen and very intelligent interest in their surroundings. They had almost got to trenches number two, when a sergeant who was sitting under a tree smoking a peaceful pipe with half a dozen of his men, caught sight of them. "Hallo," he said to his companions, "there's something rather fishy here. Three gendarmes to one prisoner! I have never seen that before. Get your rifles ready, my boys!" Then coolly the sergeant, pipe still in mouth, went up to the procession. "Your papers, please," he said to the splendid brigadier. The brigadier blustered. "By what right," he said, in a thick accent. "Up with your hands," cried the sergeant sharply, and his companions behind him raised their rifles significantly. Up went the hands of brigadier, gendarmes, and pretender prisoner—now a genuine prisoner enough. The French sergeant now answers to the sobriquet of "SSharelock Hollmes."

Paris, Mar. 8.—In the old days the news that the "affairs Deperdussin" was to come before the Assizes would have created something of a sensation in Paris, which would have rubbed up its recollections of the arrest eighteen months ago of a man, reputed a multi-millionaire, head of a great aeroplane firm, donor of an aerodrome, and recent purchaser of a historic chateau. Paris would have remembered, too, with the sort of appreciation that she cannot but feel for criminals on a big scale, the amount of Deperdussin's alleged defalcations—more than $5,000,000. Not less would have been her somewhat cynical admiration of the extraordinary simplicity of the methods employed by the accused—how first of all he got a great bank to advance him a tolerable sum for the purchase of raw silk, and, purchasing nothing, repayed out of the loan a fantastic percentage; then borrowed a sum slightly larger, out of which he again paid a fat dividend; and so went on, always increasing his borrowing, till in ten years they amounted to $5,000,000. Tout Paris would have chuckled, too, and again rather cynically, at the effrontery which ventured to show in the last year of the cumulative, orders for silk which exceeded the total value of silk imports into France, and at the simplicity of a great bank, which, blinded by what appeared like noble returns for its money, did not notice the crying discrepancy. As it is, the Deperdussin case will fall very flat. The bleeding of a great bank of a million pounds is a very little thing when all Europe is outpouring blood and treasure.

Cairo, Egypt, Mar. 8.—An extraordinary instance of pluck, which deserves a place among the most heroic deeds of the war, occurred during the battle of the Canal.

The second 6-inch high explosive shell which struck H. M. S. Hardinge exploded within a few feet of Chief Pilot Carew, who was directing the course of the boat from above the knee, and seriously injured his left arm.

"Bring me a chair and I'll get on with the job. You don't suppose a thing like that would stop me, do you?" said Carew, with a grim smile, as they lifted him from the deck.

While the ship's surgeon dressed the stump of Carew's leg and bandaged the lacerated arm, the pilot continued calmly to direct the boat's course, even insisting at one point on turning the wheel with the still useful arm.

Then he fainted and was carried below.

Carew is 40 years of age, and the fact that he has suffered for some time from a weak heart makes the case all the more remarkable. He is now doing well in hospital at Ismailia.

Here is another incident which illustrates the Sangfroid of everyone concerned in the engagement. The 7 a.m. train from Cairo to Port Said on February 3 ran quite close to the thick of the battle.

Approaching a British battery in operation, the officer in charge of the train sent a police request to the battry commander to cease fire for a few minutes, so as not to draw the enemy's fire on the train while it went past.

This was done, and the 7 a.m. went on safely to Port Said.

Copenhagen, Mar. 8.—Sir Archibald Buchan-Hepburn has asked the Danish savant, Dr. F. C. Hansen, to examine the remains of Earl Bothwell, Queen Mary Stuart's third husband, which are at Faarevejle church, Denmark, and it is hoped now to establish the identity according to new information procured in England. It has not been absolutely settled that Bothwell's remains are still in Faarevejle, although that is the tradition and it is likely that the Earl was buried there. Bothwell died at Dragsholm, in Denmark, and, as nobody asked for his body, it was buried at Faarevejle, one of the most beautiful places in Denmark.

MUSCIAL COMEDY

The acme of perfection in the way of fun, hilarity, frolic, song and humor seems to have been reached in the new offering, "His Excellency the President," which comes to The Quirk for matinee and night March 10. The piece, which is described as a musical comedy in three acts is the work of Salem Tutt Whitney and T. L. Corwell, a composer of ability. Supported by the famous "Smart Set" company, an organization of capable colored artists, Mr. Whitney will assume the leading role, that of a Negro of uncertain and unknown origin who poses as the President of a South American republic. The situations are said to be many and varied and the fun of the subtle, unctuous brand. The production besides containing forty players, will also have the services of Homer Tutt and Blanche Thompson, a prima donna of unusual skil.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By Frederic T. Cardoze

Albany, Mar. 8.—Seven hondred miles of highway are to be constructed by the State department of highways this year and plans and specifications for a number of short roads in different sections are already prepared and awaiting the advertising for bids which will be announced shortly so that contracts can be awarded in April.

With the $10,000,000 appropriated for use during the year of 1915, the highway department expects to add a chain of short roads to the sections of roads already constructed, which will at once satisfy the demands of residents of different parts of the State who have been clamoring for improved highways, and make it possible to follow through routes without detours.

The policy of Edwin Duffey, commissioner of highways, will be to add here to three separate types of roads only. All of the highway construction work to be done this year will result in waterbound macadam, bituminous macadam and brick roads. No experimental highways are to be built and there will be little or no opportunity for representatives of patented road material to dispose of their goods in this State.

During the administration of C. Gordon Reol, who was commissioner of highways under Governors Dix and Sulzer and who was removed by the latter, twenty-seven different kinds of roads were built, either wholly or in part. At one letting contractors who were awarded contracts started in to construct sixteen different kinds of roads. Some of the roads were purely experimental and the State lost heavily when it was finally demonstrated that the majority of the experimental roads had proved absolutely unsuitable for the traffic to which they had been submitted.

Long strides as regards increased mileage of the good roads system have been made since 1898, when there were but two or miles of State highway. Records of the highway department show that in 1914, there were six thousand miles of improved highways. Viewing the efforts of the highway department to face the State with scientifically prepared roads, it may be said that at the present time there are eighty thousand miles of such roads in New York State. These figures include all roads which have been built entirely with or but partially with State money.

Economy is also to be the watchword of Hhighway Commissioner Duffey. He has already cut down his office force and it is understood that he will prune his field force down to the narrowest margin. In order to prevent the alteration of specifications or the making of supplemental agreements after a contract has once been let, great care is to be exercised in the preparation of the specifications. Because such charges have been heretofore made, the State has constructed highways which when completed did not conform with the original intentions of the highway officials. In some instances, because this or that material ran out or could not be readily obtained, contracts were cancelled by the highway department and claims against the State resulted.

It is said that John N. Carlise, formerly commissioner of highways, and who at present is being employed in an advisory capacity, is soon to terminate his connection with the department which was for considerably over a year under his jurisdiction, At present he is receiving $33 a day from the State.

ROUNDABOUT

Commander Gherardi's supplementary report on his investigation of the sinking of the American cotton steamers Carib and Evelyn by mines in the North Sea, received at Washington from Berlin, says: "Both boats were sunk by mines. No false directions given by British. Both simply ran on mine fields." It had been said that the ships were off courses furnished by the German authorities and were followig routes given by British officials.

A tri-weekly steamship service from Canada to France for the conveyance of war supplies for the British War Department is to be begun. The admiralty has undertaken to supply 18 freight boats for this service until the end of the war. Immense quantities of supplies for the British and French armies are being obtained from Canada and the United States. Cargoes of food, clothing, transport vehicles, ammunition and horses are being sent forward daily. This traffic has reached such a volume that the authorities feel warranted in inaugurating a regular steamship service to handle it, it is explained.

Mrs. F. R. Havely of Kansas City, Mo., had been suffering from paralysis of her throat since Thanksgiving. She received news of the illness of her mother, Mrs. Rachel Whitacre, at Ottawa, Wednesday, and went there immediately. On entering the house she was told her mother was dead. The shock brought a fainting spell. On being revived Mrs. Havely was surprised to find she could talk in a normal voice. Since November she had not been able to speak above a whisper.

The only remaining house in America which has sheltered persons who came on the Mayflower in 1620 is to be sold at auction at Plymouth, Mass., next month by order of the court. The house was built in 1666 by a son of John Howland, the last Mayflower survivor. In course of time the building fell into decay, but upon the organization in 1911 of the Society of the Descendants of Pilgrim John Howland of the ship Mayflower, the property was acquired and restored by that body.

On the first ride on the motorcycle for which he had been saving for years, Samuel Leechman, 26 years old, a salesman of New York city, was killed Saturday before he had gone 14 blocks. He swerved to avoid a passenger from a trolley car. The wheels sikdded and he was thrown.

Of course the manufacturers of paper towels had nothing to do with the enactment of the law prohibiting the use of cloth towels more than once, but all the same it should prove a boom to their business.

In the middle of a word the letter "w" in the Russian language is pronounced as is the letter "v" in English, but when it is at the end of a word it is pronounced as is "ff."

No British or neutral steamship will sail from New York for Great Britain exclusive of Saturday's departures, for 11 days. According to veterans in the steamship business, this will be the first time in 35 years when a week has elapsed without a vessel sailing for England direct. Some of the old-timers declared that next week's deficiency will be the first of its kind since steam vessels began a regular service between New York and Great Britain.

About Sports Generally

By Frank G. Menke

"Ball players, as a general rule, are nothing but overgrown kids," declared Charles Dooin, former manager of the Phillies. "The manager who gets the best results from his men is the manager who treats his men as though they were big kids.

"Frank Chance, while manager of the Yankees, made a miserable failure of it in trying to handle his star pitcher, Ray Caldwell. The whole reason was because Chance insisted upon treating Caldwell as if he were a full grown man. If he had treated him as he would have treated a youngster, he would have been successful in his handling of Caldwell.

"I am sure that Bill Donovan, the new Yankee manager, will be able to handle Caldwell and get excellent results from him. Donovan is a student of human nature and he will know how to handle Caldwell, who, in my opinion, is one of the greatest pitchers in the game when handled right."

Jimmy Clabby, the pugilist, had a toothache, and was headed for the dentist's to have it extracted. On the way he met "Germany" Schaefer, the baseball comedian. When Clabby explained his hurry, Schaefer agreed to accompany him to the tooth parlor and to try to cheer up Clabby while the molar was being released from Clabby's jaw.

Clabby climbed into the dentist's chair, whereupon the dentist and Schaefer got busy at the same time. The dentist began fussing with Clabby's jaw with a lot of vicious looking instruments, while Schaefer began unlimbering some of his monologue stuff.

Every joke that Schaefer cracked brought a gale of laughter from Clabby. It seemed that Clabby laughed more at Schaefer's jokes than anyone else ever had laughed before. And he laughed despite the fact that he was supposed to be in agony.

Schaefer, encouraged by Clabby's laughing appreciation, unlimbered all the best jokes he knew. He worked himself into a state of bordering on collapse, so as to keep Clabby amused and thus make him forget his pain.

Finally when the dentist laid the extracted tooth on the little surgical table, Clabby sat up, rubbed his eyes, and looked at Schaefer in a quizzical way.

"Have you been here all the time, Schaefer?" asked Clabby.

"Me here all the time?" repeated Schaefer, a bit puzzled. "Trying to kid me, Jim? Why, sure I've been here all the time. Didn't you hear those jokes of mine?"

"Jokes? No, I didn't hear any. You know, Schaefer, that I was under the influence of gas."

And the gas was the kind known as laughing gas."

Johnny Evers, the peppery captain of the Boston Braves, walked up to the plate during one of the games of the last Braves-Giants series in 1914 watched three strikes whizz by and was declared out.

"Oh, I say, Johnny," chirped up Mike Donlin, who was coaching for the Giants, "What was you waiting for?"

Quick as a flash Johnny shot back: "I wasn't waiting for the first and fifteenth of the month so as to get rent money, anyway."

The retort hurt Mike who was holding down the job as pinch hitter and coach for the Giants not because of his ability in either department, but through the friendship of Manager McGraw.

"ALBURTUS" LOOSE; HE'S IN ROCHESTER

Readers of The Fulton Weekly Times remember no doubt articles that appeared therein, signed by the nom de plume, "Albertus."

Word received in The Evening Times office indicates that "Alburtus" is loose again, as he has broken forth in the railway employes' magazine in this form:

THE PRESS POLITICAL

Senator Wagner and Assemblyman Smith are a little late in blossoming out as financial authorities. They gained their reputation at Albany in other ways.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

It seems absurd for the President to talk of New Freedom for business and to declare his desire to encourage it, while he puts in the realm of business for its regulation—always interpreted by commissions as meaning harassments—politicians who are more anxious for publicity than for the health of business. The new business bosses are politicians and will ride business until public sentiment takes them off its back.—Watertown Standard.

The State of New York is the most heavily taxed commonwalth in the Union. Last year it was denied that we would be foreed to have a direct tax when the charge was made that such a tax was certain to come. Now we find that so many things were put over last year, amounting to millions in the aggregate, that there must be a direct tax.—Buffalo News.

When it was pointed out last June that Governor Glynn vetoes of absolutely necessary appropriations would force a direct state tax this year, the statement was met with a prompt and vigorous denial, but since the present administration has had a chance to look over the books no one is denying it any longer. He saddled as much as he could on the incoming administration, having seen the handwriting on the wall early in his administration. Day by day is learned what an expensive administration the Democratic power put over.—Olean Times.

One of the most unjust bills ever introduced in the Legislature is that fathered by the Democratic leaders, Senator Wagner and Assemblyman Smith to repeal the law compensating farmers for diseased cattle slaughtered by the State. Do these Tammany statesmen think that the State should take a man's property without compensation?—Jamestown Journal.

The Department of Economy and been abolished and so has the fire marshal's office, and there are more to go. It is noticeable that the extinction of a lot of ornamental high-salaried offices moves to tears only the Democratic holders of the same. The taxpayers appear to be bearing these Republican atrocities with fortitude.—Newburgh Journal.

STATE POLICE COMBAT CRIME

Captain Lynn G. Adams of Pennsylvania Force Gives Talk In Utica

Utica, Mar. 8.—Capt. Lynn G. Adams of the Pennsylvania State police, in an address at the Hotel Utica Saturday evening, said the greatest opposition to the State police force of which he is an officer, was due to the use of the word "constabulary." The word "constabulary," following the organization of the State police about 10 years ago, created an unfavorable impression in the minds of many people, especially foreigners. It recalled to their minds organizations in other countries.

Captain Adams told his hearers that the Pennsylvania State police, composed of about 200 men, divided into four troops, and assigned to four parts of the State, was an able, hard-working, intelligent, conscientious and capable set of police officials, assigned to service largely in the rural communities, where they looked after infractions of the law. They take the place of the constable and Captain Adams' description of this class of officers tallied pretty closely with the men elected in this vicinity. The captain said many were over 70 years old, one-legged, others with only one arm, still others with eyes missing, men as a rule incapacitated from police duty, and the products of the fee system which prevails.

Captain Adams said the institution of the State police in Pennsylvania was followed by the knocking of the politicians, but once established it has developed until its efficiency has been thoroughly demonstrated. Labor leaders opposed the State police because they thought the State troops were to be put into office for use in strikes and industrial disturbances.

This form of police duty, Captain Adams said, were very small and within the last year his troops had only been called for this service once. There was no disturbance and there was nothing for the police to do.

Pennsylvania crooks, yeggmen and bad actors generally, according to Captain Adams, make their headquarters in the large cities, where danger of apprehension is smaller than in less populous communities. They make raids on the people of the towns and villages, using automobiles, motorcycles, trolley and steam cars to make a getaway and get back to the city again. These attacks on the foreign elements in the Pennsyvania cities are quite frequent. Captain Adams told how the bad men of Pennsylvania prey on the foreigners and how the State police operate to catch them.

"This is the age of prevention and psychologists tell us that people obey the law either through fear of consequences or for moral reasons," said Captain Adams. "Psychologists also say that ideas to do wrong are inhibited by counter ideas of danger as a consequence of wrongdoing. If this is correct, the more efficient the police become the less crime may be expected.

"A police force to be efficient must be made up of men who are morally physically and mentally right and possess more than ordinary courage. In order to obtain men of this character the pay must be good, the chances of advancement sure and upon merit only. Dismissal from service should not be subject to politics and favoritism. There should be an assurance that in the event of disability in the line of duty a man will not become the subject of charity. After securing the right type of men, the most important step in their training for service. In this training the first and most important feature is discipline. Absolute obedience, self-respect, courteous manner, self-control and a high prid of service individually and collectively must be acquired.

"The policemen is he not the man who guards you when you sleep. Is he not as important as the soldier in time of war. But you know it, gentlemen, that the police officer is a joke. Your comic papers poke fun at him. The reason is because you have not taught the policeman to respect himself, in the first place, and in the second place, under the present conditions, you cannot get the right type of men to fill these positions.

"You must first teach him that his uniform is a badge of honor. When he has learned to respect himself, others will respect him and he must also be efficient, but you must pay for the right type of man. Until you do you will continue to read about waves of crime."

Captain Adams told what had been done by organizing the State police. "Its duties," he said, "are to aid the local authorities in maintaining peace and good order; to detect crime, apprehend criminals and enforce the fish, game and forestry laws. The regular system of rural patrols is maintained and these patrols are conducted with systematic irregularity so that no one but the officer in charge knows when a patrol will appear at a given point."

The State police, he said, had acted as fish and game wardens; they have enforced quarantines; patrolled watersheds; recovered lost children and stolen and strayed horses; stolen property. The patrols have rescued people from drowning, extinguished fires; stopped runaways; picked up injured persons on highways; applied first aid treatment; they have observed dangerous conditions along roads, bridges, etc., enforced traffic regulations on the highway and added greatly to the sense of security of the inhabitants.

The most interesting part of the captain's talk was his description of the methods used in ferreting out crirmes and apprehending criminals, which forms a great part of the organization's work. The State policeman is taught to use his eyes and to know something about everything. Captain Adams told of one case where a patrol, noticing a smoke in a field, found some men melting the bearings from a railroad car journal box. This later resulted in the locating of $30,000 worth of stolen property which railroad detectives could not find.

PENNA. WILL NOT HAVE N. Y. WATERED VINEGAR

Rochester, Mar. 8.—The process that the cider vinegar manufacturers of western New York use does not conform to the statutes of the State of ePnnsylvania, declares the Superior Court of that state in a decision handed down in the test case brought by James D. Bashford, of Lyons, president of the National Association of Cider Vinegar Manufacturers, against the State of Pennsylvania. William W. Armstrong, of Rochester, represented the association.

In June, 1912, Commissioner of Agriculture Foust, of Pennsylvania, decided that cidar vinegar manufactured in New York State violated a statute of Pennsylvania. A test case was arranged. A dealer in Harrisburg who handled the New York State product was arrested. A jury in the Court of General Sessions brought in a verdict in favor of the State. An appeal was argued before the Superior Court of Philadelphia on October 6th, and last week a decision was handed down in which the lower court was sustained.

RUNS WASTED IN GAME WITH DALLAS

Dallas, Tex., Mar. 8.—The young Giants drubbed the Dallas ball team, 6 to 3, here yesterday and ought to have won about 10 to 3. They made enough base hits to have added four more counts, but wated runs in two ways. One wastage was due to sad coaching at third base, which was reprehensible. The other was the result of constantly trying the hit and run and double steal, which was not reprehensible, although it didn't pan out. The plans along this line were all right in conception and didn't go through because the new spongy ground militated against speedy running and there was no wild desire on the part of the tourists to hit the dirt when stealing.

The Giants batted better than Saturday, when they faced curves and spitters for the first time this year. They weren't as much bothered by the hooks as Saturday. They rapped out hits in profusion in the fifth and six innings, made sure fof the victory in those two rounds and would have made it more one sided had they waited to be batted in instea dof taking base running chances.

INDIAN FIGHTER DIES TALKINK OF FOREIGN WAR

Nework, Mar. 8.—Brigadier General George A. Anderson, U. S. A., retired, died suddenly of heart disease in the library of the University Club, at Fifth avenue and Fifty-fourth street, yesterday afternoon. General Anderson discussed the European war with friends and seated himself in an easy chairr to read the war bulletins.

A few minutes later an attendant observed that General Anderson had collapsed, and a physician was summoned. Meanwhile friends carried the veteran soldierfi who was still breathing faintly, to a couch, bue he was dead when the physician reached his side. The body was removed to an undertaking establishment preparatory to forwarding it to the Anderson home in Bernardsville, N. J., today.

Germans of 55 Called For Field Training

Copenhagen, Mar. 8.—Germans up to the age of fifty-five years, who two months ago were declared unfit for military service, it is reported here, now have been called upon to undergo training with younger recruits.

Reports received here from Schleswig are to the effect that the supply of petroleum in Germany has become so small that persons who formerly were permitted to purchase one bottle a week now have been deprived of that privilege. The stock in Schleswig has been practically exhausted.

Germany is reported here, on what appears to be good authority, to be building at Kiel fifteen small submarines of a new type, which will be used for reconnoitring the home coast in the Baltic sea. Each of the submarines, it is said, will carry a crew of eight men.

Among the items given out today for publication by the Overseas News Agency are the following:

"Members of the Prussian Diet who have been inspecting prisoner camps have received information that at present there are 781,000 war prisoners interned in Germany, an increase since the end of 1914 of more than 200,000 men.

"The last of the booty left by the fleeing Russians in the battle of the Mazurian Lakes has been brought into Berlin. It includes two thousand wagons of all varieties, most of them in an undamaged condition.

"Advices from Sofia say Servia is planning an invastion of Albania and an advance to the Adriatic. At several points, it is stated, the Servians already have crossed the Albanian border.

"The newspapers in Berlin continue to speculate on the future course of Greece and Italy in the war."

BRITISH BATTLESHIP SHELLS FORTS IN GULF OF SAROS

From inside and outside the Dardanelles the allied fleet is continuing its bombardment of the Turkish forts that bar the way to Constantinople. At the Ministry of Marine last night the following statement of the progress of the operations on Saturday was made public:

"The British battleship Queen Elizabeth, posted in the Gulf of Saros, bombarded by indirect fire two big works on the Asiatic side alonside of Chanak and defending the straits (Forts Hamidieh and Hamidieh Sultanieh).

"At the same time cruisers inside the Dardanelles continued a direct fire against the works at Dardanos, on the Asiatic side, and Souain Dere, on the European side."

Neutrality Squad Continues Investigation of All Vessels of Warring Nations

New York, Mar. 8.—Every steamship belonging to the nations at war and now in this port will have been inspected by the "neutrality squad" attached to the office of the Collector of the Port of New York before the day ends. The inspection, which began with the vessels of the Hamburg-American and North German Lloyd lines in Hoboken, was continued yesterday on board the steamships of French,, British and Russian lines.

The report that the investigation was instituted by Dudley Field Malone, Collector of the Port, because of rumors that the German steamships were about to attempt a dash to sea in violation of the neutrality code, was denied by him yesterday. He said the inspection was the first of a series of general and thorough inspection of all the vessels of the nations engaged in the European struggle. Whether this inspection was ordered on his own initiative or was suggested from Washington he did not say, but it is understood the step taken here is to be a national one. It is a part of the President's determination that the allied nations shall not violate the letter of neutral law as it applies to the fitting out and equipping of vessels for war purposes.

The insistent reports that certain of the German steamships were making ready to put to sea were pronounced ridiculous yesterday by officers of several of the steamships. The rumors that the Vaterland, of the Hamburg-American line, had been equipped with an inner hull of steel and guns of heavy calibre particularly aroused their amusement. They pointed to the great passenger vessel, lying at her pier, with faint ribbons of smoke curling from her aft funnel, and asked if it appeared that she was being made ready for service.

If any steamship should be sent to sea, either as a commerce destroyer or as a supply ship for the German cruiser Karlsruhe, it was it would most emphatically not be the Vaterand, which is so enormous that she is able to carry coal and supplies sufficient only for herself. In addition, although she has a speed two knots greater than that of the British cruisers guarding this side of the Atlantic, she also furnishes a target, which hardy could be missed.

"It has been reported that the Vaterland is taking on great quantities of coal," one officer said. "She is. It takes about eighty tons of coal a day to keep steam up, and the insurance companies demand that this be done, since the fire at Bremen. There is a report that floating machine shops are alongside. They have been. Repairs are being made all the time; the ship is being kept in first class condition throughout."

The feature photoplay for tonight is a Pathe production entitled "The Siren," six complete reels. It is unnecessary to state the quality of films and subjects furnished by this corporation, as the emblem of perfection originates with Pathe. Persident Wilson has sanctioned the production by appearing in itw ith the Boy Scouts. Continuous, 2 to 10.30. Matinee 5c; night, Balcony, 5c; main floor 10c.

LEO SMITH LANDED IN CORTLAND JAIL

Leo Smith is in prison in Cortland, in whose vicinity he is alleged to have obtained money under false pretences. Leo, before going to Cortland, secured a number of dollars from a long list of persons in this city where he operated under two names—that of Leo Smith and O. R. Rice. Smith's plan was to secure subscriptions for magazines, claiming to represent the D. C. Cook Publishing Co., of Elgin, Ill. In many instances he gave auditors a hard-luck story, enlisting sympathy at once, and the victims are counted throughout this city. Another feature of Smith's plan was to secure advance payments, which is rather unusual, for as a rule the class of magazines for which he pretended to work are to be obtained on the installment plan.

The authorities in Cortland will give Smith a sentence on March 15.

FIRST IN SERIES OF SPECIAL SERVICE

The first in a series of special services was held yesterday morning at the First Presbyterian church. The pastor, Rev. Charles Robertson, took for his theme in the morning, "The Heroic Sacrifice of a Beautiful Queen. At the vesper services the theme was "Life is all one Big Bargain Day."

Dr. Robertson is a forceful, earnest speaker, and at both services the auditorium was filled with attentive listeners.

Services will be held each night during the week except Saturday at 7:45. Special music under the direction of Charles F. Allen will be a feature of the services.

RISING MARKETS; BETTER OUTLOOK

Prices Lifted to Higher Levels By Reason of Investors Buying Securities

New York, Mar. 8.—"All we need to insure a big bull market is a leader." SSo says a veteran broker, who argues that prices are low and that there are fewer stocks in Wall street than for many years. That, of course, is a technical view of market conditions, but it is in line with the opinions of bankers and shrewd investors, based on the underlying forces that affect values.

To begin with, the business community breathes more freely since it has reasonable assurance that there will be no Congressional meddling for many months—a freedom it has not enjoyed in many years. Industrial condition,s with some irregularities, are steadily improving. It is estimated that there was an increase of 200,000 tons during February on the Steel Corporation's unfilled tonnage.

eDaliflgs in stocks last week on the New York Stock Exchange increased 21 per cent and transactions 31 per cent as compared with the preceding week—which was shortened by the Washington's Birthday holiday—and prices advanced all round. Selling of securities for European account—mostly German—was in larger volume than heretofore, but buying for domestic investors and institutions absorbed all offerings without checking the advance.

A net rise of nearly $2 a bale in cotton as compared with prices one week ago, and a net fall of eleven cents a bushel in wheat for May delivery reflect wholesome tendencies. Flour has fallen more than $1 a barrel from the price of a month ago, when wheat was at its highest. The report of the Department of Agriculture upon grain reserves is expected to show a larger amount on the farms and in sight than was reported a year ago.

An interesting incident will be Wednesday's sale of $27,000000 New York tSate 4¼ per cent bonds. Contracts for these "when issued" have been made on the curb as high as 103½. The time is auspicious for the success of the loan, as evidenced by the fact that the syndicate formed to underwrrite the St. Paul's Railway's $29,000,000 3 per cents was able to sell at once all the bonds left on its hansd and has dissolved.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE CAMPAIGN

"BURY THE HATCHET—EVERYBODY'S DOING IT"

Why Be a Member of the Chamber of Commerce ? ? ? ?

One of the special membership committee in charge of the present movement to broaden the scope of the Chamber of Commerce, is Jesse A. Morrill, president of the Morrill Press. Mr. Morrill has been a guiding spirit in much of the civic progress of Fulton during the past many years. He approaches discussion of all questions in a profond and analytic manner. This lends special force to his reply to the question, "Why should a citizen become a member of the Chamber of Commerce?"

"Why should you be a member of the Chamber of Commerce?" Mr. Morrill asked. "For the following reasons, if for no others:

"For the civic pride that is in you.

"For the spirit of helpfulness and the love of progress that is the measure of your good citizenship.

"For the broad-visioned business intelligence that tells you how inseparably your prosperity is joined with the welfare of your city.

"For the opportunities afforded you to have a share in the big affairs of the present, to fight for your ideals, and to assist in building a better Fulton on the best that exists today.

"For the friends you will gain, the good will you will accomplish and the precious fellowship of co-operation you will experience and retain as an enduring possession.

"For the best that is in you—pride of home, joy of achievement, loyalty of principle, aggressiveness in building Fulton commerce, steadfastness as a champion of Fulton advance, confidence of the greatness of Fulton's future.

"For these things and more—for all that comprises your duty to yourself and your city—you should become a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

"This is why every man who stands for good business and good citizenship should be a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

"This is why two hundred business and professional men and women of Fulton are working through the Chamber of Commerce for a Fulton greater in commerce and in civic achievement."

First Gun In Bigger Fulton Campaign to Be Fired Tomorrow

PROFESSIONAL AND BUSINESS MEN AND WOMEN TO CONVENE AT HOTEL CLARK.

In the battle for a bigger and a better Fulton the first gun will be fired by Lucius E. Wilson at 12:15 tomorrow in the main dining-room of the Hotel Clark. Seventy-five of Fulton's leading business and professional men and women will be on the firing line, and with one of the greatest outburst of civic enthusiasm ever witnessed in Fulton, the Chamber of Commerce campaign will be officially started. A table will be reserved for the women who have accepted the invitation to be present.

This meeting will witness the evolution of the old Chamber of Commerce into the new. It will mark the birth of a larger organization, more efficient because better financed and better organized. There will be no membership solicitation. There will be no blare of sounding brass nor tinkling cymbal. It will be a social-business hour during which men of big ideas will commune with men of other big ideas for the welfare of Fulton. Plans will be outlined for the greatest civic awakening in the history of Fulton.

Lucius E. Wilson to Speak.

Lucius E. Wilson will be the speaker. He will waste no time in preliminaries or oratorical flourish. He will address the assembled men and women in a straight-from-the-shoulder, matter-of-fact way, telling them wherein Fulton is wanting and what must be done to remedy the situation. He will close his talk promptly at 1:30.

For two weeks J. H. Braddock has been in Fulton studying the situation. Today Mr. Wilson arrived. These men are in Fulton to effect an efficient Chamber of Commerce that can do things worth while for the city. They have taken the word of no man for anything. They have investigated every point for themselves. They know where the fault lies, and Mr. Wilson expects to tell about it at the luncheon tomorrow.

At the Hotel Clark preparations are being made for the accommodation of a record number. Service will start promptly at 12:15. Manager McQuade of the hotel has promised that there will be no delay. Mr. McQuade has announced also that the luncheon menu will embrace fish and chicken. Mr. Wilson will end his address at 1:30 sharp.

President Penfield to Preside.

E. J. Penfield, head of the E Z Opener Company and president of the Chamber of Commerce, will be chairman of the luncheon. He is enthusiastic over the prospects for the campaign and is looked to as one of the prominent workers during the whole of the undertaking.

"It is something which the city has long needed," President Penfield said in discussing the present movement. "It is something which every city must have if it is to be a success. Without an efficient Chamber of Commerce no city is in a position to give its citizens the best that is possible. This is true in every line of endeavor; it is especially true in municipal development and civic advance. The result must be a spirit of co-operation throughout every active line of business in the city. The welfare of the whole community is determined largely by the spirit of co-operation which is to be found within the community."

PENNSYLVANIA'S "SWEETEST GIRL" TO CHRISTEN NEW DREADNOUGHT

ELIZABETH KOLB

The United States' new superdreadnought, the Pennsylvania, will be launched at Newport News, Va., on March 18. Miss Elizabeth Kolb, of Germantown, Pa., has been selected by the Secretary of the Navy, at request of the Pennsylvania at the request of Governor Brumbaugh, of that State, because she was considered by him to be "the most beautiful and sweetest girl in Pennsylvania." Governor Brumbaugh, with his staff and many notable persons from Pennsylvania, representatives of the Navy Department and other persons of distinction will be present at the christening of the Pennsylvania.

ELEVEN BOMBS DROPPED UPON NAVAL REPAIR BASE

London, March 9.—The British admiralty last night made public the following description of an air raid on Ostend:

"Wing Commander Longmore reports that an air attack on Ostend was carried out yesterday afternoon by six aeroplanes of the naval wing. Ofthese two had to return, owing to their petrol freezing. The remainder reached Ostend and dropped eleven bombs on the submarine repair base and four bombs on the Kursaal, the headquarters of the military.

"All the machines and pilots returned. It is probable that considerable damage was done. No submarines were seen in the basin. The attack was carried out in a fresh northwest wind."

Amsterdam, via London, March 9.—The Telegraaf's Tirlemont correspondent confirms the report of the destruction there last Thursday of Zeppelin airship L-8, which was forced to make a hurried descent, owing to a derangement of its motors. The correspondent says the airship struck some trees and smashed its cars, and that seventeen of its crew of forty-one men were killed.

FORTS AND SHIPS SUFFER IN ACTION; BATTLE AT NARROWS

French Reduce Ottoman Works at Dardanos and Cover Long Range Fire of British Big Guns

London, March 9.—Arthur Hill telegraphs to the Daily News from Athens:—"At eleven o'clock today there was another severe bombardment of the Turkish forts, some of which were silenced by three o'clock this afternoon. A number of ships proceeded up to Karantina and the Gulf of Saros to begin firing against Kilid Bahr. At a quarter-past four o'clock firing ceased, both forts and ships apparently having suffered. At Smyrna two batteries still are holding out, but the greater part of the mines have been cleared away."

The Queen Elizabeth, Britain's great dreadnought that has been leading the attack on the Dardanelles with her 16-inch guns, has been hit three times by Turkish shore batteries, but, according to Vice Admiral Carden, no damage was done. The Lord Nelson and the Agamemnon, sister battle ships, of 16,00 tons, and the French battle ship Gaulois each were hit three times during the action on Sunday, and the British cruiser Dublin, engaged in the Gulf of Saros, was hit three or four times by 4-inch guns. The Lord Nelson had three men wounded.

The latest reports from the straits show that the channel has been cleared of mines far enough to the east to permit battle ships to engage the important fortifications at Chanak directly. The Lord Nelson and the Agamemnon are now stationed approximately six miles inside the entrance, or half way between the sea and the westward end of the narrows, where the chain of modern Ottoman forts equipped with 14-inch guns begins.

As a result of the constant rain of projectiles, Fort Rumili Tabia, located south of Chanak, and equipped with two 11-inch, four 9.4-inch and five 3.4-inch guns, and Fort Hamidieh 1 Tabia, north of Chanak and equipped with two 14-inch guns and seven 9.4-inch guns, were silenced on Sunday. In the successful bombardment of the latter position the Queen Elizabeth had an important part. Here fire was directed from the Gulf of Saros and across the Gallipoli Peninsula and the straits, a distance of 21,000 yards.

In a detailed account of the operations of Saturday and Sunday the Admiralty late last night said:

"The operations against the Dardanelles are progressing in fine weather. Vice Admiral Sackville H. Carden reports that on March 6 the battle ship Queen Elizabeth, supported by the battle ships Agamemnon and Ocean, began an attack on Forts Hamidieh 1 Tabia and Hamidieh 3, which are marked on the Admiralty map as Forts U and V, by indirect fire across the Gallipoli Peninsula, firing at 21,000 yards.

"These forts are armed as follows:—Fort U, two 14-inch guns and seven 9.4-inch guns; Fort V. two 14-inch, one 9.4, one 8.2 and four 4.9-inch guns.

"The Queen Elizabeth was replied to by howitzers and filed guns, and three shells from the field guns struck her, without, however, causing any damage.

"Meanwhile, inside the straits the Vengeance, the Albion, the Majestic and the Prince George and the French battle ship Suffren fired on the Souain Dere and Mount Dardanus batteries, marked F and E on the Admiralty map, and were fired on by a number of concealed guns.

"Fort Rumili Medjdieh Tabia, marked J on the Admiralty map, which had been attacked on the previous day, opened fire and was engaged and hit by twelve inch shells.

"A majority of the ships in the straits were struck by shells, but there was no serious damage done and no casualties resulted.

"On March 7, the weather continuing calm and fine, four French battle ships—the Gaulois, the Charlemagne, the Bouvet and the Suffren—entered the straits to cover the direct bombardment of the defences of the narrows by the Agamemnon and the Lord Nelson. The French ships engaged the Mount Dardanus battery and various concealed guns, silencing the former. The Agamemnon and the Lord Nelson then advanced and engaged the forts at the narrows at from 14,000 down to 12,000 yards by direct fire.

"Forts Rumili Medjidieh Tabia, marked J, and Hamidieh 1 Tabia, marked U, both were silenced after a heavy bombardment. Explosion occurred in both forts. Fort L has not fired since the explosion on the 5th.

"The Gaulois, the Agamemnon and the Lord Nelson were each struck three times, but the damage done was not serious. The Lord Nelson had three men slightly wounded.

"While these operations were in progess the British light cruiser Dublin continued to watch the Bulair Isthmus. She was fired at by 4-inch guns and struck three or four times.

"Owing to the importance of locating concealed guns the seaplanes had to fly very low at times.

"On the fourth instant a seaplane, Flight Lieutenant Garnet pilot, and Lieutenant Commander Williamson observer, became un-

FUN RAYS

THE SERVICE.

WE ought never to feel nervous, with our first class fighting service, ev'ry time we hear the rumor of a war. For our fighting aggregation can compete with any nation—they're a bunch of fighters to the very core. Three cheers for our scrapping navy, and our army, too, by gravy! And another for the dashing, brave marines. They will shoot their foes to chowder, for they love the smell of powder, with their belts of bullets strapped around their jeans. If you don't believe it quiz 'em, note their militarism—ask them if they'd rather lie around or fight. Then just listen to the clamor, like a reinforced trip-hammer, see and hear them shout for battle—it's a sight! Though it's rather small in numbers, yet whatever it encumbers it will slam with perfect ease to smithereens. So don't let your courage concider—just lean hard upon the shoulder of the army and the navy and marines. They don't go into a battle like a lot of driven cattle, but they use the little think-works in their dome. That is why they fight like blazes with a fearlessness that dazes, and, believe me, friends, they bring the bacon home. No, sirree, friend, don't get nervous—just rely upon the service; we're as well protected as a podded bean. Now, dodgast it! cheer and holler like a kindergarten scholar for the soldier and the sailor and marine.

THE PRESS POLITICAL

In practically every speech he made during the late campaign Governor Whitman announced that if elected he would clean house at Albany. There was a popular distrust of the Democratic management and it was upon this splendid promise and a belief that it would be fulfilled that Governor Whitman was elected. * *

Now Governor Whitman and the Republican legislature are endeavoring to honestly and conscientiously carry out the pledges made all through the campaign. The men who have been responsible for saddling such a burden of expense upon the State as to leave it practically without funds to be cleaned out. There is, therefore, no just criticism to be passed upon the Whitman Republican administration for its course in doing just exactly what was promised.—Oneida Post.

INOCULATION FATAL TO GRASSHOPPERS

Swarms of Insects Killed by Disease Inflicted Through the Virus.

The last year has been a very unfortunate one for Guatemala and Salvador on several respects, writes Special Agent Garrard Harris. It was abnormally dry, and on this account there was a partial crop failure. In addition, myriads of grasshoppers appeared on the west slope of Guatemala and worked much havoc. The droves are spread over a wide area and appear to be moving southwardly. They have reached Salvador, but that republic, with customary enterprise and vigor, does not propose to allow the insects to work without a fight. The people are being urged to fight the pest in every way possible and use every method to kill as many as possible.

The Director General of Agriculture, Don Francisco Altschul, has procured some virus from Brazil and is preparing to inoculate numbers of the insects and turn them loose in the droves. The disease is said to be remarkably fatel to the "hoppers" and to have been used with good effect in Bolivia and Brazil. In some parts of Salvador the grasshoppers have destroyed crops, and the work of the insects, combined with the abnormal dry season, has put the republic to the necessity of importing large quantities of corn, beans and rice. A New York exporting firm, operating a line of steamships, has received the initial government order for these foodstuffs, which is a large one. For several months there have been increasing shipments to private firms and to individuals from San Francisco thru the ports of Acajutla, La Libertad and La Union. Indications are that a large quantity of these staples will be needed until the next crop is matured, about August.

THE AGRICULTURAL SCHOOL

There may be hundreds of persons in this city who would like to "get back to the soil," but they are immediately confronted with the subject of financing. As yet no comprehensive, attractive plan has been devised. Numerous suggestions have been offered that have for their object the making of Fulton a center for training in agriculture the young men and women who live within trading distance of the city. This idea is not a new one; it has been threshed out in and out of the Chamber of Commerce, and there its rests. Men have argued that to attain along with our manual training department a school of agriculture Fulton would have one of the greatest of boons; that the city schools might become the means of drawing and centering a wholesale and wholesome interest of hundreds of persons in the surrounding territory who at present are left to drift wherever they have a mind to, or wherever bigger and better inducements are believed to be held out to them.

There are without a doubt hundreds of persons in this city who would welcome an opportunity of securing knowledge concerning scientific agriculture, and who would, were an opportunity to secure such knowledge presented to them, become the most desirable of citizens in the agricultural communities surrounding the city. There is a reason for this. It has become a fixed idea in the minds of many persons in the small city of Fulton, and in the large centers of population, that a knowledge of agriculture and its practice is the only sure means of making an independent living. Further than this, it is generally agreed that wealth to be obtained must be taken out of the ground.

The Evening Times has been confronted with an objection to the idea of promoting an agricultural department in our public schools, which is, that in order to successfully teach scientific agriculture a model farm must be an adjunct of the school. This statement should remain an open question, for the simple reason that there are authorities who declare that it is possible to produce more scientific farmers in a city school that can be found occupying thousands of acres of farm land throughout the country.

In connection with the financing of persons who desire to "get back to the soil," it might be a simple matter. When a banker lends money he usually wants to learn the purpose of the loan, so that he may determine what degree of risk he is taking. If the banker can be assured that he is lending his money to a competent agriculturist who will know how to conserve his capital and not dissipate it there is enough profit in the agricultural game to put out money on a fair basis.

There is little use in crossing the bridges in advance; in thinking that those persons who thirst for agricultural knowledge might not were they to secure a course in scientific farming be able to finance their proposition. Efficiency is man's best asset; it is his strongest endorsement. Capital, that most sensitive of all things sensitive, recognizes the fact.

In our quest for a high school perhaps it would be well to bear in mind that a proposal to establish a school that would be of as much, if not more, benefit than a single small industry is capable of appealing to a large class of our population. These persons deserve consideration.

Effects of the Farm Clubs

Much interest has of late been aroused in the boys' and girls' farm clubs, established in severeal southern states by the general education board in collaboration with the Federal Department of Agriculture. It is a matter of gratification that practical agricultural education is also making rapid progress along the same lines in this State, as shown by an illustrated bulletin to the schools, just issued by the University of the State of New York. The bulletin has peculiar local interest from the fact that the school garden idea originated in the city; and, so far as can be ascertained, was first put into practice on a considerable scale in Rochester. The plan developed by the General Education Board and the school authorities of this State aims to give children an opportunity to come in contact with the soil; to plant seeds and care for plants, and thus to come into close touch with nature. In the city the plan first followed was to secure a tract of land, divide it into small plots, and give each child a plot for a garden. Obviously, this was a kindergarten stage of agricultural education. In the country districts of this and other states each child, as a rule, has an abundance of land at home where he is encouraged by the school to locate and cultivate his own gardens, while in village and town a school garden of the community type is maintained.

The club idea has also been adopted by the State Education Department working with the State College of Agriculture, and a definite policy regarding the organization of farm and garden clubs has been determined upon. The project is by no means confined to the rural schools, as there are already in this state forty-eight high schools which maintain four-year courses in agriculture. During the past year over 1,000 pupils were enrolled in these courses.

One of the great lessons learned from the establishment of corn and vegetable farm clubs in the South is the great possibilities of intensive cultivation of the land under scientific instruction. Thus the great results obtained by southern boys and girls, on acre plots of ground and with the stimulus of club competition, has opened the eyes of the farmers of the South. It has already, according to the demonstrators and inspectors of the General Education Board, led to the planting of a diversity of crops by the farmers over large areas where the farm clubs have been established. It is even predicted by these experts that within a very short period not only the cotton but other crops in the South will be more than doubled, largely owing to the effects of education through the farm clubs and the schools.—Democrat-Chronicle, Rochester.

WHEN MEN WORE MUFFS.

Likewise Silk Stockings and Plaid Shawls and Capes.

In the good old days about which so many men so dreamily read and profess to reverence, and when men were believed to be more bold and dashing and daring than they are now, the muff was the thing of winter wear for men. It was a regular part of a gentleman's cold weather toilet.

Among Horace Walpole's Christmas gifts to his friend George Montagu, in 1676, were "Anecdotes of Painting," a pamphlet on "Libels," the "Castle of Otranto" and a muff. That was the period of the muff for men. It had been an article of men's apparel for many years before, and men retained the muff for long years afterward, it being cast off when men forswore colored silks and satins, rare laces and jeweled shoe buckles.

It was not so far back in American history that men wore silk stockings—not merely silk socks—and knee garters and fancy garter buckles, and many men walking the streets of Washington today remember when their sex wore brilliant plaid shawls and when the cloth cape, called a "talma," was the height of masculine fashion. Now and then one sees a gentleman of the old school walking along with a gold headed cane and wearing a somewhat motheaten, frayed or shiny "talma."—Washington Star.

AN ICEBERG AT SEA.

One of the Most Awe Inspiring Spectacles in Nature.

There is nothing in nature so imposing and awe inspiring as the iceberg, writes Lacey Amy in the Wide World Magazine. It gives an overpowering sense of relentless force, of dignity and of brilliance.

Beneath the sun's vivid rays or the dark clouds of threatening storm, in the moon's cold beams or dimly through the shadows of moonless night, in calm and tempest—every one of them, from the tiny "growler" to the huge mass of spurs, rouses at first glimpse an awe undiminished by a growing appreciation of its beauty.

Always before one is the thought that but an eighth of the iceberg's bulk shows above the water, the remainder stretching down and down into the blue-green depths and out and out until captains breathe freely only when the horizon is clear of them. Far out in the ocean, with the largest steamers passing swiftly miles inside, they ground upon the bottom in tremendous depths and calmly await the relieving touch of sun and current.

In the wildest seas and strongest gales these frigid mountains float undisturbed. There could be no seasickness on an iceberg, for its foundations are fathoms below the wave disturbance.

An Earthquake.

The horror of experiencing an earthquake has been set down by F. S. Lyman, who was in the Hawaiian Islands some years ago, when there began a series of earthquakes on the southern flanks of a so called "quiet volcano."

"First the earth swayed to and fro from north to south, then from east to west; then round and round, up and down, and finally in every imaginable direction, for several minutes, everything crashing around and the trees thrashing as if torn by a hurricane, and there was a sound as of a mighty wind. It was impossible to stand. We had to sit on the ground, bracing with hands and feet to keep from being rolled over. The villages on the shore were swept away by the great wave that rushed upon the land immediately after the earthquake."—Exchange.

Wonders of the World.

The seven wonders of the ancient world are: Pyramids of Egypt, the Pharos of Egypt, the Hanging Gardens of Babylon, the Temple of Diana at Ephesus, the Statue of Jupiter, by Phidias, the Mausoleum of Artemisia and the Colossus of Rhodes.

The seven wonders of the middle ages are: The Coliseum of Rome, the Catacombs of Alexandria, the Great Wall of China, Stonehenge, the Leaning Tower of Pisa, the Porcelain Tower of Nanking and the Mosque of St. Sophia in Constantinople.

The seven new wonders of the world are Wireless, Telephone, Aeroplane, Radium, Antiseptics and Antitoxins, Spectrum Analysis and X Rays.—Philadelphia Press.

Getting On.

"How are you getting on with your photography?"

"Well," answered the young man with brown finger tips. "I'm doing better. The snapshot portrait I took of Mr. Curmudge must have been recognizable."

"You are sure of that?"

"Perfectly, for as soon as Curmudge saw it he said he could whip the man who made that picture."

Reason Enough.

Critic (as the composer plays his last piece)—Very fine indeed. But what is that passage which makes the cold chills run down the back? Composer—That is where the wanderer has the hotel bill brought to him.—Fliegende Blatter.

Too Plain Spoken.

He—I wish you'd drop the "Mister" and call me plain George. She—Oh, but it would be unkind to twit you on your personal appearance that way.—St. Louis Democrat.

Harmony.

Music Teacher—What is your impression of harmony? Smart Student—A freckle faced girl in a polka dot dress leading a conch dog.—Judge.

OLD DAME TROT

BY
I. E. HYDE
FULTON
N. Y.

Said old Dame Trot, "Now just look here, I surely am a goat. For all around about you see, they've cut my petticoat; so it is I or is it not? I do not know." Said old Dame Trot. Now old Dame Trot was quite humane; we've all been in her boat. We've been sized up, and been sized down. We've been snubbed as a goat. So if it's I or if it's not; I sympathize with old Dame Trot. I'm told I do not know my name. That may be true, I know; I do not beg for local fame. My won canoe I row. So if it's I or if it's not, I'll float along like old Dame Trot. An interviewer said to me, "You do not mince your time. Your garret may have breezes, but, we like your Mason rhyme. So, if it's you or if it's not, please dish us up your—Tommy rot. Fools think that they are wise men, but wise men know they're fools. Some wear their knolwedge on their sleeves, some force toward higher schools. So if it's I or if it's not, I cause a bark, like old Dame Trot. Please save your fish for other fry, or judge me if you will; for while you're making me a goat, some other soul lies still. 'Cause if it's I or if it's not, you'll laugh at me as at Dame Trot.

Opinions

For Prompter Justice

Senator Mills' bill proposing a reorganization of the inferior criminal courts of the city comes from the committee on criminal courts of the Charity Organization Society. It proposes, by consolidation of the Court of Special Sessions and the magistrates' courts, to do away with what amounts to a double trial, with delay and double expense, when a prisoner is arraigned now, charged with a misdemeanor. Magistrates made members of the new court would have the powers of justices of Special Sessions, and instead of holding the prisoner for trial after examining witnesses, could try him in the first place.

Many a person's idea of courts and justice is gained entirely from the inferior criminal courts. For that reason, if for no other, the procedure there should be as decent, as fair, as speedy, as is possible. The law's delay bears harder on the poor man than on any other. The law's delay which keeps prisoners for weeks in the Tombs awaiting trial is an injustice to them and a shame to the city. This bill would remedy that and would tend to bolster up many other weak points in the inferior courts system which have been disclosed since the existing inferior courts act was adopted. It would quicken the machinery of justice and help officials and the public. It deserves especial consideration at the hands of the Legislature.—Tribune, N. Y.

A Blow at Medical Education

A brief generation ago our medical education in the United States was a disgrace. Almost any one could practice medicine. The combined efforts of our universities and the medical profession have succeeded in lifting it to a standard which begins to compare with that of European countries.

Efforts of all sorts to undo that good work have been made by personal interests of many kinds. Surely it should be the plain duty of legislators to maintain the advance and obtain even more, for as yet we are below the best standards in certain ways, and we feel that nothing but the very best is quite good enough for us.

Every effort to secure the privilege of practising medicine by those who have not received proper training is directly a blow at our medical education. Each year sees bills at Albany to admit to the practice of medicine Christian Scientists, osteopaths, chiropractics, naturopaths and others. If they have the proper medical education, full four years of medical science then they may practise. Any exception to this is special legislation, tending to impair our medical education standards. This needs to be recalled when these bills are up for special hearings this week.—Herald, N. Y.

West in Luck Again

A wheat harvest is not made in March, but the way winter wheat comes through the cold months is of very large importance. All reports have it that the outlook is most promising. The latest snow, which now covers a number of States in the West and has spread all the way to the Atlantic coast, seems to assure the elimination of danger from alternate freeze and thaw. It also assures, moisture in abundance to start the crop with a virile, healthy stand, and that is half the battle.

The high prices caused by the war and anticipation that, however short it may be, Europe will not recover from its effects in time to plant the usual wheat crop, have led to a large increase in acreage of winter wheat. Beyond doubt, too, our farmers will soon be expanding the acreage of spring wheat. So, with a good yield, the West can look forward confidently to another tremendous inflow of wealth.

What two years of such prosperity as that section has witnessed this season will mean to the entire country can hardly be overestimated. It is a splendid preparation for any unexpected shock the war may have in store for us.—Press, N. Y.

BIG SMOKE EATERS SHORT AND STOCKY

Fire Experts Want Rule That Bars Out Little Men Revised.

Short, stocky men digest smoke with better relish and less harmful results than their taller and skinner brethren. This was the expert opinion given recently before the Civil Service Commission in an effort to have the rules amended so that applicants standing under five feet, seven inches might be admitted to the New York fire department if they could fulfil the other requirements.

This doesn't mean that the lanky applicant is barred. If he is strong he is greatly to be desired in the truck companies, where strength is required. Fire Chief Kenlon was one authority for the assertion that stocky men are the best smoke eaters. Another was the chief medical officer, Dr. Joseph Smith.

"I've been a medical officer in the fire department for twenty-nine years, he said, "and agree with Chief Kenlon. Short men who have a large chest expansion can eat more smoke than tall fellows. The men who can eat smoke are wanted at the nozzle head in the thickest of the smoke."

MONEY IN A HEN'S NEST

A Parish Biddy Selected a $200 Roll For Her Bed

The Palladium is in receipt of the following news from Parish: "Marrilo Mifletwee, who works the Mineral Spring farm, came here a few days ago and reported that he had lost a roll of bills containing $200 and offered a reward of $25 for the recovery of the money. Many inquiries were made and the fact widely advertised but no one reported having found the lost roll.

"This morning Mr. Mifletwee came to town and withdrew the reward, stating that he had found his money.

"Mr. Wifletwee avers that yesterday morning he was in his henhouse and that his attention was attracted by the cackling of a last Fall's pullet in one corner of the hennery. He went to the fowl and found that it had made a nest and had laid nine eggs. He says that one of the eggs was broken, that the yoke had run out and when he removed it from the nest a ten dollar bill stuck to the shell, and found the balance of his money woven into the nest."

HEALTH IS THE PATH OPENER TO SUCCESS

That much of life's joys, sorrows, successes and disappointments depend upon the condition of the mind is conceded today by hundreds of thousands of persons against a handful comparatively a few years back.

Concerning the subject a writer in a New York paper recently said:

The word "health" is an Anglo-Saxon term, meaning man's natural condition. Health is natural or normal. Disease is unnatural or abnormal. Health is the natural result of right living. Disease is the result of abnormal, unnatural living, or living under wrong mental or physical conditions, or both.

Health and harmony have their rise in the same word.

Sanity and sanitation are closely related. That is to say, if you live in a sanitary way you will be sane. Unsanitary conditions breed insanity. Insanity is an abnormal, inharmonious, unregulated condition of mind, where thought is not consecutive or related. Sanity implies a right understanding of the conditions that surround us, with due deference for the rights and opinions of other people.

Hygiene has a little more extended meaning than sanitation. It refers not only to physical condition, but to psychological surroundings. Psychological surroundings is the science of the emotions, or the tides that play through the human heart.

* * *

Hygeia, was the Goddess of Hygiene. The Goddess Hygeia comes to us from far off Greece, where six hundred years beforre Christ she was worshiped and importuned for health and happiness. The Greeks did not use the word "Health," the word hygiene covering for them the subject. Hygiene meant the gracious smile of the Goddess Hygeia.

When the Goddess Hygeia was with you in spirit, the body did its appointed work thoroughly and well. We were in love with our surroundings, with our friends, the earth was beautiful and the happy, joyous mood complete.

This was to be hygienic.

Today we understand now better than ever before that mind plays a big part in bodily well-being. People who are working and succeeding, who are planning, devising and putting forth effort and seeing their plans unfold, are well. Circulation is complete, digestion good, elimination proper, sleep sound.

If we are distressed in body and the tide is going against us; if we struggle day by day and make no headway; if we have misunderstandings with our friends and we think we have enemies who are planning our undoing, then the smile of Hygeia is withdrawn and the current of our life runs awry. Sickness may follow, then disease, and dissolution is near.

Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, who passed away a short time ago, aged eighty-four, was one of the most successful physicians of modern times. Dr. Mitchell once said: "There are over six hundred diseases listed in the medical books, but the fact is, strictly speaking, there is no such thing as a disease. Disease is the result of a cause, and a wrong condition of living may bring about one or many symptoms which we call diseases. Then when the person gets one disease and is reduced in vitality, other diseases seem to know it and they come and take possession, and we get a 'complication.'

Dr. Mitchell's idea was that medicine for the most part was merely palliative. In order to cure a disease you had to remove the cause.

People overworked, hopelessly in debt, distressed in mind through any cause, are sure to be sick a part of the time.

There are two general kinds of diseases—functional and organic. Ninety-nine people out of a hundred who go to a physician have merely some functional disorder. Stomach, liver, lungs, eyes, ears, nose do not function naturally. For instance, a cold in the head should not be classed as a disease. It is a result of lowered vitality, coming with a sudden change in temperature, causing a temporary congestion of the membranes. If one thinks back he can usually tell just when and where and how he caught cold.

You do not catch cold by going out of doors in draughts, because if you are in a joyous mood you find the outdoors, although it may be very cold, stimulating. But if you are depressed in spirit, worried and at the same time have been over-eating and have not been getting quite enough sleep, you will catch cold either in a hot room or a cold one, through inability to adjust yourself to new conditions.

To go to a physician under these conditions seems to sensible people silly and absurd. We should live in such a way that we do not catch cold, and, if we do catch cold, the very best treatment is to cut down eating one-half, omit meat entirely from our diet, and eat fruit instead. "Starve a fever and stuff a cold" is half bad advice. Most ailments can be starved out.

A man once said: "You are certainly right about wrong mental conditions bringing about disease. If I have a quarrel with my wife I have granulated eyelids, a cold in the head, or sciatica."

"Can you take your choice of these? he was asked.

And he said, "No, I am obliged to take the one that fate ends, and sometimes I have all three at once."

Under these conditions, as a sensible adviser, would you tell this man to use liniment for sciatica, an eye-wash for his eyes, or a nasal douche for his cold in the head? Probably not. You would say, "Do not quarrel with your wife," and this is only another way of expressing the philosophy of Dr. S. Weir Mitchell when he said that if we would avoid disease we must avoid the disturbing cause.

Disease merely means lack of ease. When health obtains throughout the body we are at ease; that is, we are not aware that we have physical organs. The healthy man doesn't know he has a stomach.

Within forty years the physicians of the world have evolved a brand new Materia Medica. The medicines given forty years ago are today practically obsolete, and yet the physicians then were absolutely sure they were right, and they had laws passed legalizing their methods of treatment. and any physician who did not belong to the orthodox school was an anathema, illegitimate and beyond the pale. Yet we have seen the homeopaths accepted and placed on a parity with the allopaths, just as we now accept the affirmation of a Quaker or a freethinker as equal to the oath of the orthodox.

The sick are today regarded as just as safe in the hands of a homeopath as in the hands of an allopath. This is the legal view of the subject, and life insurance companies who have allopath examiners, do not regard an individual who has a homeopathic family physician as an unsafe risk.

Osteopathy had its days of persecution, but now it is legalized in most of the States.

For a time Christian Scientists were under the ban. If a Christian Scientist died, it was assumed that if an orthodox physician had been employed the man would have lived on indefinitely. We now say that such reasoning is not sound, and we allow the parent, the guardian, or the individual to choose his own physician. The insurance companies do not differentiate against the Christian Scientist.

He is regarded as an eminently safe and desirable risk.

We have discovered that all drugs have two effects, immediate and re-actionary. The immediate effect may be beneficial and give relief and the re-action may be decidedly deleterious. So there is a whole round of diseases where no physician can tell whether the disease was caused by a gross disobedience of laws of health, or is a result of medication taken to relieve another disease. Powerful drugs leave traces of poisoning in the system, and in the course of time may bring about an actual disease.

Strictly speaking, the only actual disease is an organic one; that is where the structure of an organ has deteriorated until it loses its capacity to act normally. Functional disorders, if continued, will lead to a breakdown of the tissues, and then we get an organic disease where the offending organ may have to be removed by the surgeon's knife in order to keep' eeti from possoning the well springs of being.

Right living tends to prevent this unkind condition when surgery is necessary. The best physicians of modern times recognize that there is a certain degree of truth in all the various schools of medicine. They also recognize the great and beautiful truths of Christian Science and mental science. Many able physicians who cannot accept the theology of Christian Science realize the practical commonsense that there is in it. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he," is eminently a scientific maxim.

The happy, joyous, courageous, hopeful mood reacts on the body and health follows. Faith in ourselves, faith in our fellows, faith in the Divinity that rules the world, a belief that everything is coming out all right, that there is no devil but fear, and that no one can harm us but ourselves is eminently scientific.

"I and my Father are one" is interpreted to mean that we are a part of the great Intelligence that rules the world. This was Emerson's idea. It was the philosophy of transcendentalism. It was also the philosophy of certain schools of Greeks in the olden time. Marcus Rurelius the Roman Emperor, and Epictetus the Roman slave, possessed the same philosophy. Marcus Aurelius said, "When you get up in the morning, say to yourself, 'This day I will live as becomes a man.'" Epictetus said, "Each day you will meet with disagreeable people. Unpleasant things will happen, disappointments will come, inappreciation and ingratitude may be your portion; but above these we must rise and be superior to every circumstnce."

And then, who can forget the words of Robert Louis Stevenson: "The day returns and brings us the petty rounds of irritating concerns and duties. Help us to play the man, help us to perform them with laughter and kind faces; let cheerfulness abound with industry. Give us to go blithely on our business all this day, bring us to our resting beds weary and content and undishonored, and grant us in the end the gift of sleep."

* * *

These thoughts relating to right thinking and right living are beautiful, right and excellent, but they are not quite enough. First, every individual should have an occupation, a business, a vocation. Call it a job, if you wish, and it is just as beautiful to get a job as it is to accept a situation. Every individual should earn his living, and to earn his living he must do something for humanity. He must be a good servant and add to the welfare and happiness of the world. Otherwise, the mental conditions are not complete.

Work is man's great blessing.

There must be an excuse, a reason, something that gets you up in the morning before seven o'clock, that gets you down to a certain place on time. This is your job. Thank heaven for it! Hold it by doing your work well, for all good work is a preparation for better work. Any man who has a job has a chance. Healthy, happy people are people who work. Yet every day you should have a little play spell out in the open.

* * *

Then, also, we should cultivate a sense of sublimity, which is an exultation of spirit where forrgetfulness of self comes through joy. These things bring about the sense of sublimity, concerning which Edmund Burke wrote a book of six hundred pages.

The sense of sublimity has been called "the bath of the mind."

Every day listen to beautiful music, lookupon a beautiful picture, or read a little from great and good books. Then besides your job have a hobby. Your vacation is your regular work, your vocation is your hobby. In Pittsburgh lives a man who worked in the iron mills and whose hobby was the grinding of lenses for telescopes, and he became the greatest lens maker in the world. Spinoza, one of the world's greatest philosophers, one of a persecuted race, was a gardener and he made spectacles as an avocation and studied philosophy for a like reason, and his name is deathless. In The Hague sits his form in undying bronze, and yet the man was just a gardener, but his spirit roamed the universe.

Benjamin Franklin was one of the best educated men the world had ever seen. He had his work and he had his hobby. He could work, play, study, laugh, and his heart was full of sympathy.

Sympathy for others takes our mind off our ourselves. We forget our troubles in looking out on the world of doers and workers in kindness and sympathy. As a generral rule men who, love nature, whose hearts go out to plants, flowers, trees, animals, who study geology and the stars live long and are well. Such were the three Herschels, and one of these, Caroline Herschel, made the century run. She lived to be a hundred, happy, sane, sensible, always well always at work. Caroline Herschel was a musician, an astronomer, a gardener, and when she was eighty-five some callers went to see her and found her on a ladder painting her house. She joyfully explained to them she was doing it for two reasons. One was because she wanted to "get up in the world," and so she climbed the ladder, and the other was, she didn't want any man to do for her what she could do for herself.

The willingness to work, the pride in being able to accomplish, the sense of sublimity found in discovering the stars, the joy in her music rounded out her life and makes the story complete.

So the summing up of the secret of good health is this:

Get a job, have a hobby, realize that you are a part of all we see or hear or feel. Believe in yourself, believe in your philosophy, have faith in the Power that rules the world. Eat sparingly, breathe deeply, work steadily. Then every organ of the body will act harmoniously, and all good things will be yours.

"SANITO"
COOKING UTENSILS
are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

BASKETBALL SEASON CLOSES

City Hall Court Closed to Boys Who Would Have Diversion Upon the Floor

Basketball games in the City Hall court came to an early and abrupt ending with last night's contest between the Holy Name and the State Boy Scouts.

And this after not more than eight weeks for play upon the court, with at least two months ahead of the boys of our city before they should be able to indulge in outdoor athletics.

The Evening Times is in receipt of a number of verbal protests against the closing of the City Hall to basketball players thus early in the year, at a time when, unless the Mayor and City fathers relent by extending the season, there remain a number of games to be played.

The attendance at last night's game proved the growing popularity of the sport that does so much for the welfare of players, and gives a lot of good amusement to onlookers.

There was a big crowd present, whose members shivered in the chilly atmosphere of the room, as they could not keep their bodies warm by cheering the players and looking at the frigid appearing radiators standing about the room. Nevertheless, the crowd paid admission fees, and the city and Janitor Youngs were reembursed for electricity consumed and services performed.

Holy Name won the game which was for the championship of the city, the score being 24-12.

The game, which was a fast one, may be summarized thus: For State st. baskets from the field were made by Singleton, 2; Johnson, 2; Rohrbaugh, 1. Basket fouls were made for the same team by Singleton, 1; Rohrbaugh, 1.

For Holy Name baskets from the field were madeb y S. Thompson, 7; Martin, 2; E. Trawley, 2; M. Frawley, 1.

The line up was:

Holy Name		Boy Scouts
S. Thompson	R.F.	Singleton
Martin	L.F.	Johnson
M. Frawley	C.	Taylor
E. Frawley	L.G.	H. Thompson
Hopkins	R.G.	Rohrbaugh

William Merrill was referee and George Snow kept time, both in their usual satisfactory way.
